London is celebrated for the fog that envelops it in an impenetrable veil during the cold months. In summer occasionally there is sunshine, and even if Old Sol persists in hiding there is a clear atmosphere that makes traversing its streets an agreeable pastime. But with December arrives the season of fogs, of gas lamps burning every hour of the twenty-four and other discomforts arising from a hazy atmosphere that borders between darkness and light. And there are degrees in this atmospheric condition as there are in pretty much everything else. There is the black fog, the bottle-green, the yellow-green and the white mist. The black is the most dreaded and fortunately the most rare. The vapor takes on a dark hue and transforms the glare of midday into the blackness of night. It brings the activities of a mighty city to a standstill, makes outdoor movement perilous and renders invisible the hand held an inch from the eye. While it continues horses have to be led by torch-bearers and pedestrians have recourse to lanterns to proceed on their way. The last time London groped its way through black fog was in 1880, and before it lifted over 200 persons were killed or maimed by collisions in the streets. The bottle-green fog is a familiar visitor. It shuts from view objects 200 feet distant and effectually obscures the sun. It also necessitates the burning of artificial light during the day and the slowing down of horses in crowded thoroughfares. The third is the yellow-green fog that makes the pedestrian step cautiously if he would avoid contact with the fellow going in the opposite direction. This haze makes the street gas lights look like pin heads with a corresponding reduction in illuminating power. White mist completes the variety and is more in evidence than any of the others, and the least annoying. Singularly enough, these fogs do not rise more than 200 feet above the ground and from the top of the dome of St. Paul the city is hidden from sight by the vapor that enshrouds it. The duration of fogs vary. A few hours of sunlight are sufficient to dissipate some of them; again they last a fortnight. The most depressing are those caused by the west wind, which conveys the smoke from the burning of soft coal from a million chimneys to the eastward in a long train sometimes extending thirty miles. Suddenly the wind changes and this vast volume of smoke is driven back over the city, where, reinforced by that emitted from the chimneys, settles over and constitutes the greatest drawback to living in the city.

A LONDON OMNIBUS.

The Underground.

The metropolitan or underground railroad answers for rapid transit and bears the relation to London that the elevated occupies to New York. The speed is about the same, but here the resemblance ceases. In London you enter a dingy and filthy station from the street, buy your ticket and make your descent to the platform below over dirty stairs to the waiting rooms, which are chilly, ill-smelling and so dark that gas has to be burned all day. The odor of smoke is very much in evidence and you feel a sense of relief as the lighted bull's eye in the locomotive rounds the curve and the train comes to a halt. Then the smoke from the engine fills the station and as you enter the compartment you quickly close the door to save being suffocated. It is so thick you can scarcely discern a person through the glass partition on the doorway. While one fare gives you the best on the elevated, you must choose from three classes on the underground. The best is much inferior to the elevated, and the atmosphere between smoke and the foul-smelling lamps that furnish a sickly light is anything but agreeable. You have a minute service in rapid transit in New York; on the underground you have a train every five minutes. On the elevated you have clean cars, open the entire length, and daylight as long as it lasts—not cooped up in narrow and uncleanly compartments as in London. The smoke nuisance, however, is the most objectionable, as it is ever present on the journey. The stations are in long tunnels and you are hardly out in the open before the train plunges into another subterranean cavern so that the cars make breathing uncomfortable at all times. This prevents the asthmatic from using the railway. Until electricity or some other propelling force is substituted for coal the smoke objection will prevent the road realizing all that its projectors intended. The underground has no connection with the roads built beneath the Thames and which have never returned its owners anything owing to the smoke that filled the cars in transit. There are two tunnels below the river, the last one built a few years ago.

The Bridges.

The bridges that span the Thames are massive and the builders meant that a dozen centuries should elapse before they would crumble. The river is three-eighths of a mile wide in London and the cost of bridging it has been enormous. The vehicles are closely packed on these viaducts pretty much all day and the tramp of 200,000 pedestrians in twenty-four hours across some of them make a very spirited picture, the like of which is not to be encountered elsewhere. London bridge is the best known and most used; Blackfriars comes next. At 7 o'clock in the morning and at 6 in the evening they are jammed with vehicles and the passageways crowded with hurrying toilers to and from work. The teams are three abreast going and coming, and the refugee—the rounded stone six-inch elevation in the roadway with uprights to keep off the horses—is of inestimable value in crossing the wide approaches to the bridges. Until these refugees were instituted it was not uncommon to kill a person a day at these spaces, and the mortality was increased by those run down attempting to cross the congested streets. Thus it was that London sacrificed more lives annually than those who perished crossing the Atlantic. The refugee and the ordinance enforced by the police, stopping conveyances at intersecting streets every two minutes, until the crowds on the sidewalks had passed safely over the roadway, make life and limb tolerably secure in these busy highways.

The most pretentious thing on wheels in London is the omnibus. It answers the purpose of a street car and it has advantages over the car. It takes you aboard and discharges you at the curbstone, thus doing away with the danger of being run over by having to enter or leave a public conveyance in the middle of the street, as is the case in Paris and New York. A circular stairway leads to the roof, and here a dozen travelers can be comfortably accommodated and enjoy a very interesting ride. This is not to be had in American cities. The people one meets on this portable observatory are agreeable and anxious to impart information to the inquiring. You are above the perils of the roadway and from the vantage point can study the life of this the greatest of cities satisfactorily. During pleasant weather the seats are eagerly sought by tourists, and, if Americans, ply with questions the Londoner found sharing the elevation.

THE FAR-FAMED LONDON BRIDGE.

The busses overtop everything on wheels, are gaudily painted in yellow, blue and red, and are bespattered with advertisements. They give a color and impressiveness to street life that has no counterpart in American cities. They are found in great number on Fleet street and the Strand, along which they form an unbroken line from Ludgate Circus to Trafalgar square. Stations are located at every four blocks and while the bus is standing in front of them the conductor lustily shouts the points where his chariot runs in the endeavor to secure passengers. The fare is cheap—a penny for less than a mile—and when the coin is passed to the conductor he hands back a punched ticket, which is cast away, as it is no good to the recipient or giver. The Londoners are so attached to the bus that they will never part with it. The roadways are so narrow and so crowded that street cars would add to the confusion rather than lessen it. Only a few lines are in operation, and these are two-story affairs on wide thoroughfares away from the rush and roar of the mighty city.

The Park System.

The stretches devoted to parks are a surprise to the American looking over the city for the first time. Hyde Park, set down in the heart of the town, covers 400 acres. If it were cut up into building lots it would yield more than a thousand million dollars. No special pains are taken to add to its natural beauties, and the grass and the benches have a neglected look. The serpentine lake in its center contributes to its picturesque beauty. Regent's has 50 more acres than Hyde. Richmond Park, the largest, has 2,470 acres—three times that of Central Park, New York. Victoria Park has 244 acres, the Battersea 198 and the Kew Gardens 170. None of them compares with Central Park in beauty, whether it be natural or artificial, but they provide breathing areas for the millions, and any encroachment upon them would arouse a growl from the people that would deter the staunchest from undertaking their abridgement.

London is unique in insisting that drivers shall keep to the left while traveling its streets. And for fear that the heedless might forget it standards are erected in the middle of the roadway from a projecting arm of which are displayed the words: "Keep to the left." To go contrary to this would block the highway and land the offender in prison. London is alone in the enforcement of the rule; even the crowds on the sidewalk keep to the left in forging ahead.

The Refugee.

The refugee is a sort of an island in the middle of a street or square to enable pedestrians by degrees to cross in safety. There is so much driving that one has to keep his eyes peeled to take advantage of a lull to gain the refugee. There he awaits a second chance to make the sidewalk he is aiming for. Sometimes minutes go by before the opportunity comes and on gala occasions ten minutes are consumed before venture No. 2 is undertaken. But a minute or two ordinarily brings the required chance. On Trafalgar square there are two refugees intervening between sidewalks, as several streets unite here and the crossing is most dangerous.

One of the sights of the town is the diminutive chap employed to clean the streets. He is usually 8 years old and is armed with a bag and brush to gather up the refuse that defaces the roadway. This chap will take his place in the middle of the street and will pursue his work unmindful of the dangers that surround him. The wheels are passing within an inch of his body, but so careful are the drivers and so alert the brave little fellow that he escapes injury. Sometimes you would imagine he would be crushed as he disappears in the jam, but a moment later he reappears doing his work the same as if death did not hover about him.

In New York the open circles are called squares; when you reach Italy they are denominated plazzas; in London they are known as circuses. Strangers, for the most part, are misled by this designation when they first arrive in London. Ask directions to a firm doing business in the vicinity of these areas and you are told it adjoins Ludgate circus, or Oxford circus, or Picadilly circus. At once you head for one of these, expecting to find the party desired adjoining a tented exhibition. But you look in vain for the circular canvas roof with supporting projecting poles rising one above the other. After inquiries that make you vexatious you find that the circus that does business every minute in the year in London is nothing more than the diametrical space where half a dozen streets intersect and has neither clown nor ringmaster unless the policeman can be counted as such.

Bobbies.

The uniformed guardians of the law in England are known as bobbies and in Ireland as peelers. The nicknames come from Sir Robert Peel, who acted respectively as secretary of Ireland and home secretary of England. Under his administrations he reorganized the police contingent of these countries and made them a formidable body of civilian soldiery. From 1812 to 1818 he held power in Ireland, and displayed a vindictiveness to Catholics that made him detested. O'Connell called him an Orange Peel and taunted him so that he challenged the Irish statesman to a duel, which the police prevented. So the latter were dubbed peelers, which they retain to this day. As home secretary he overhauled the police in 1826 and made it a much more efficient body. Up to this time they were known as Charlies—from King Charles I., who improved the system he found in 1640—and they were afterwards known as bobbies, which grew from Robert. A monument is erected to Peel's memory near a spot where he was thrown from his horse in Hyde Park and received fatal injuries June 28, 1850.

The Mosquito's Feeding-Time.

His appetite is gigantic, for he is all stomach. Watch him while he is feeding—on somebody else—and you marvel at his extraordinary elasticity and power of accommodation. Having waited until his victim's closed eyes betoken slumber, he ceases the song he has been singing thoughtfully to himself, and drops, softly as a floss of thistle-down, upon the spot of his choice.

He folds his gauzy wings, unfurls his proboscis, strokes the creases out of it, gives it a flourish or two, and plunges it into the epidermis. At first he stands on all eight legs, absorbed in his repast; but presently, the first sharp edge of hunger dulled, he begins to show signs of enjoyment.

Raising his hindermost pair of legs he works them stiffly up and down, as though to aid by this pump-handle action the process of suction. His body, no thicker than a silken thread when he alighted, begins to take decided shape, and the black and gray bands adorn him show up distinctly.

Steadily he continues to increase in bulk uniformly from end to end; a pinky hue suffuses his whole being, and he seems to blush all over with delight. By-and-by the hindermost legs cease pumping, and résume their proper office; the distended body sinks down as though the slender limbs could no longer support its weight.

The mosquito has finished; in other words, he can hold no more. He rolls up his proboscis, and the imaginative spectator hears his microscopic sigh of repletion. He feels his now portly form all over with his legs, just to make sure that he can't hold any more, spreads his wings, and sails heavily away to digest his meal.

As to the Future of China.

The Chinese have a grand old literature and philosophic books by the side of which Plato and the Memorabilia of Socrates and Christ seem mere brochures. The Chinese are essentially a literary and aesthetic people, although they, too, can boast of many campaigns and architectural monuments. Their public buildings in brick are few, but those in mud still fill us with admiration. Their traditions are wholly opposed to ours. Their traditions are very old, very theoretical.

Barbarous traditions grown up in the rough practice of life are more easily displaced than those which have their roots imbedded in an ancient but ever green philosophical literature. But when the public examinations, on which success in life depends, shall cease, no matter by what blow, to confine themselves to Chinese classics alone, then gentleman John will become as laborious, docile and enterprising in modern war and finance and policy and military and industrial methods and training, as humble coolie John already is in shopkeeping in San Francisco and Australia and the Straits. Then we shall have to look out.

Hearsay Evidence.

The ship was passing one of the lonely, rugged islands off the Maine shore when the Captain pointed to an enormous flock of gulls that whitened the rocks, the surface of the sea and the branches of the cedars that cling to the hard soil. "There," said he, "what do you think of that? And yet if you turn to a book on natural history, they'll tell you that gulls won't perch on trees. Some fool sailors believe that the petrels, or Mother Cary's chickens, never alight, even on the water, but are always on the wing. They don't use their eyes. And some of these scientific fellows are as bad as the sailors."

ASSESSORS.

The various township assessors met here yesterday to make their reports. They have had a big job of it, for this time it was their duty to assess all the real estate besides getting up a great mass of statistical information required by law. It takes a good deal of care, judgment and patience to do this, for there is such a variety of land and so many conditions to change its value, that a conscientious man has to stop and study, and even then sometimes makes a mistake. It is an important office to the taxpayer, and he is seldom anxious to pay more taxes than would be just. And the change of value in certain lands once swamp, now fully drained has added to the difficulties. And yet, so carefully has nearly all the work been done, that the cases before the board of equalization are seldom numerous.

Steuben Co. Supt.

It would appear that in several republican counties even, the view of the new law, as taken in the COURIER was considered the correct one. At Angola, when the old board met yesterday, they talked it over and finally consulted a lawyer. They called in D. R. Best an able attorney and a strong republican. In fact he is editor of the Steuben County Republican. He told them that he had studied the law and though he disliked going back on a republican law, he would be obliged to do so, for he felt certain that the new law was null and void. This frank opinion expressed by a republican, settled the matter with the board there, which is also republican. So they decided to elect a county superintendent just as our board did that day. They re-elected their present very efficient officer, Mr. Carlin. We shall no doubt hear of many other counties who have done the same. We have never for a moment doubted the propriety of this course.

BABY NURSERY.

The Mercy and Help department of the Epworth League have instituted a baby nursery and all mothers who have babies from the age of three months to two years, can bring them to the basement of the M. E. church where competent nurses will take care of them while the mothers attend the Sunday morning services. Too many parents are kept away from church services by their little children. Some do not take them fearing they would disturb the meetings and others have not been in the habit at all of going to church. Come next Sunday and bring the baby and it will be cared for during the service.

At Lebanon, Ind., on decoration day a prominent man was decorating his window, when he fell to the ground onto the cab in which his child was sitting. The child was crushed into a shapeless mass, and both died instantly as his own neck was broken.

BOY STOLEN.

Last Thursday Mrs. Alda Vanzile Gulick Farner-Lowery came to Auburn to visit a few days in the family of her first husband Wm. Gulick, he having the little boy which was born to them after their marriage. She took the little fellow about town for a couple of days and Saturday left for parts unknown with him. He is six years old. His father has since seached the country over and can find no trace of him.

For some reason this couple separated a few years ago and since that time the woman has been married to a man by the name of Lowrey. Mr. Gulick has also married another woman and for this reason it is thought Mrs. Lowrey stole her own boy. A search is still going on and Mr. Gulick says he will find the boy if it costs him all he is worth. Monday he was over in Allen county thinking perhaps she had gone to her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Vanzile but she was not there.

SHAMS!

That's what they were, regular shams, pillow sham shams at that. The folly of people buying ordinary articles of a traveling stranger should be plain enough but the knowledge don't seem to do much good. Not many moons ago, a solitary footman "might have been seen wending his way" westward along Seventh street. His course was an eccentric zigzag, not on account of red liquor, but of the necessity of interviewing the residents on each side of the street. He was an itinerant salesman. He had a pillow sham holder for sale. This absolutely necessary article can be had at several of our local stores, for 5 to 10 cents, a better article than he had, for his would just about hold up a sauce plate dolly. The first one he sold, he got 30 cents for. A little farther down the street he asked and obtained 25 cents. At another he got 20 cents, then they were disposed of at 15 cents and the lucky (or unlucky) buyer near the west end got one for ten cents. If the street had not been cut short in its usefulness by the heartless railroad corporation some of the people that would probably have secured a poor sort of sham holder at 5 cents just what our home dealers ask for a better article. Moral: When you want any sort of article at a reasonable price, patronize one of your home dealers. There is scarcely a useful thing but they have dozens of them and at a cheaper price than the stranger will ask The stranger is here to make money off of us. The home merchant is here to make an honest living and to spend his his money among us. Give him a show.

FOR RENT. Desirable residence property on North Van-Buren street, opposite ward school house. Seven rooms, excellent well of water end cistern, good garden all planted and in first-class condition; some fruit. Apply at once to John C. Lochner, at this office.

THE AUBURN COURIER.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, post-office as second-class matter.

THURSDAY,.....MAY 30, 1895.

THE national debt is again starting on the down grade. It was reduced during May $5,386,611.

GOLD reserve in the treasury is increasing, being now almost the full 100 millions required by law.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND and the Gresham funeral party reached Washington last evening at five o'clock.

SATURDAY was Italy's "Independence day," June 1, 1848, the vrrious little states of that country were united into one government.

We have it on good authority that the late legislature cost the state $6,000 more than its predecessor. Such luxuries come high but we must have them once in two years.

JUNE 20, the German Nation will celebrate the formal opening of the ship canal, that connects the River Elbe with the Baltic Sea. It is 61 miles long, 300 feet wide and 30 feet deep and the largest war vessels can get through it. It will change the farm life some, to see scores of big ships go through the farming country fields dail .

COME DOWN!

The Steuben Republican of last week has this strange article:

"The Auburn COURIER, a democratic organ for DeKalb county, was an out and out advocate of the free an unlimited coinage of silver a month ago. Now it declares itself as opposed to "extremes on the money question" and says "we must adopt a conservative course," and that "this country is too big for extreme measures either way."

Come down, Bro. Best, come down. Or, If it is Bro. Rakestraw, then "you come down too." The editor of this paper was not "an out and out advocate of the free and unlimited coinage of silver a month ago" or at any other time. The editor of this paper has always been an advocate for the actual coinage of a limited amount of silver each month. A law something like the Bland Allison silver coining law would be a very wise one, in our estimation. It was a vastly better law than the very foolish Sherman law that took its place. We are in favor of the "free grindage of wheat" because that would help the people about here, but the free coinage of silver would help no one nearer than the rocky mountains No dear friends, you have been thinking of some other editor.

COUNTY SUPT.

THE RESOLUTIONS PASSED BY THE COUNTY BOARD OF EDUCATION.

The five republican members of the Board who did not vote for Mr. Merica, yesterday feeling that it might in some way compromise them in the event of a contest of the law enacted by the late legislature on the time of electing a county superintendent of schools, and it being the last meeting of the old Board, in order to show their appreciation of his efficient work, had read at the meeting and each member then signed, the following resolution.

RESOLUTION.

C. Monroe Merica County Superintendent of the schools of DeKalb county Indiana.

We the Township and Corporation School trustees of said county take pleasure in a unanimous recognition of your unpartisan, efficient and impartial management of the affairs of the office of County Superintendent during the long term of your public service. We shall ever remember your ever courteous and gentlemanly treatment of all who have had business relations connected with your numerous and arduous duties and we believe you have labored hard and faithfully to honor the office and advance school interests.

In this belief, be it resolved that the hearty thanks of each and every member of the Board of Education of this county, be hereby tendered to you and acknowledged by our official signatures.

Other Counties.

ELECTIONS HELD IN ABOUT ONE THIRD OF THE COUNTIES.

It seems to have been quite the general feeling that county superintendents should be elected and we report such counties as we have been able to hear from.

CLINTON COUNTY.

The eleven democratic trustees met Monday and re-elected John W. Lydy, county superintentent. The auditor refused to act as clerk of the election and the board of commissioners refused his bond. At the same time the republican members met and selected another man as their choice in September.

FAYETTE COUNTY.

The democratic members met at Connersville and elected W. H. Glidewell. Republicans took no part, and the old officer refuses to give up the place.

MADISON COUNTY.

Both parties met and elected Manson U. Johnson, democrat. But the new board is republican and will put in a new man in September.

FOUNTAIN COUNTY.

Grant Gassett was elected. He is republican, and republican trustees of the old board and the new have agreed to elect him in September also, if need be.

WHITLEY COUNTY.

G. M. Naber was re-elected, but republican trustees and auditor refused to have anything to do with it.

BARTHOLOMEW COUNTY.

The democratic trustees met but concluded to let the present democratic officer Jacob Wade hold over till the matter is settled in Court.

MARSHALL COUNTY.

The trustees were called in to elect a man but felt so uncertain as to their duty that they made no choice.

HANCOCK COUNTY.

The democrats met at Greenfield and re-elected Quitman Jackson, a democrat.

LAPORTE COUNTY.

O. L. Galbraith, democrat was re-elected by the 14 democratic trustees Five republican trustees would have nothing to do with it.

WELLS COUNTY.

The board re-elected the present officer, R. W. Stine.

CASS COUNTY.

Frank Cornell, republican was elected county superintendent to succeed Harvey Gardner, democrat.

SULLIVAN COUNTY.

Richard Park was elected but we did not get further particulars.

JENNINGS COUNTY.

The trustees met and elected a republican, H. C. McGrain.

MONROE COUNTY.

Frank F. Tourner was unanimously elected. He is a democrat.

VANDERBURG COUNTY.

W. A. Hester, republican, was elected superintendent.

MONTGOMERY COUNTY.

J. S. Zook, democrat was re-elected county superintendent.

NOBLE COUNTY.

Trustees of both parties met E. L Adair, republican, was chosen by 7 to 6

N. E. INDIANA

Oldest Editorial Association in the State.

The Northern Indiana Editorial Association is not quite thirty years old, as some of our exchanges have been stating of late, as it was organized in Elkhart July 23, 1869. J. B. Stoll, then of the Ligonier Banner, presided on that occasion, and J. F. Radcliffe, of the Waterloo Air Line, was secretary. The editors present were: J. B Stoll, Ligonier; C. O. Myers and J. S. Brillhart Kendallville; J. F. Radcliffe, Waterloo: R. H. Weamer, Angola; John D. Devor and H. Coe, La Grange; D. W. Sweet, J. F. Funk, C. H. Chase and G. S. Chase, of Elkhart. So far as we know every one of the above named are living, excepting D. W. Sweet and George S. Chase. The organization was at first confined to what was then known as the Tenth Indiana congressional district, but has since been wisely extended. Elkhart inaugurated the hospitalities that have since been extended to the guild wherever they have met, and which have been so generous as to overwhelm the officers and members with gratitude. It is pleasant to remember that the birth of this vigorous association, which we believe has been of no little advantage to the profession, was in Elkhart, and that our public spirited citizens gave it its first impetus, as without its social features it might not have proved so successful.—Elkhart Review.

If memory serves us correctly, H. E. Wadsworth and C. G. Powell, of LaPorte, were also in attendance on this occasion. —South Bend Times.

Another Gross of

BUKBOARDS

To Be

Given Away

We thought we had enough for every boy in the country that wore short pants.

But our enormous trade in Children's Clothing makes it necessary for us to get another gross to give with every short pant at $2.00 and upwards. Remember, these wagons go with suit and not with furnishings. We have a large assortment of children's clothing at prices ranging from $1.00 a suit up to $7.50.

We Aim to Carry Everything You Need

in Children's Wear, and can make you prices that cannot be duplicated elsewhere. Come and see us for a nice velvet suit and Fauntleroy waists.

COURT.

On Wednesday the Woods case was concluded, Seth Woods, was the youngest son, and was to have the farm for taking care of his mother. This she intended to deed to him, but waited till she was on her death bed, and when the notary came she was too low to attend to it. The other heirs, John, Reuben and Oliver Wood and John and Josephine Porter, wanted to hold a share of the property, but Seth sued to compel them to give it to him in accordance with his mother's promise. It was a case "to quiet a title." The jury decided that Seth should have the farm. To-day Zeke Jones' case against Jacob Mitchell is on. Mitchell sawed lumber for Jones, and claims Jones did not pay him, so he sold a part of the lumber in a publicly advertised sale, under an order of the court, we believe. Jones says he paid the bill. Hartman is attorney for Mitchell and Roby for Jones.

Friday's Daily.

Attorney Stuart was here yesterday to take the testimony in the case of Whitman vs Wabash railroad. Whitman was engineer on the freight train, that was run into by a passenger train in the great Kingsbury wreck on the Wabash two years ago. His train was standing still, and the passenger engine struck his, and he was knocked senseless. When found, he was lying in a meat car next back of the engine. Of course he was not driven through the walls of the meat car, but somehow a hole had been smashed in, so that he was thrown through. He was badly hurt, but on recovering, he refrained from suing the company, because they promised to give him a job on the road again. But they failed to do this, and now he sues them, as he might have done at the first. It will probably result in a big suit. He lives at Butler, his wife being a daughter of Henry Gunsenhouser. J. P. Crimmins has applied for admission to the bar and J. E. Rose, J. W. Baxter and J. F. Shuman have been appointed to examine him. To-day the Woods case from the north part of the county is on trial.

Saturday's Daily.

Yesterday the case of Zeke Jones vs Jacob Mitchell was closed and given to the Jury. Mr. Mitchell, we are told, had apparently made a mistake in his accounts, or at least they were not clear enough to be plain, and the jury decided that Jones did not owe him as much as he thought by about $30. So the case rather went in Jones' favor. The case called this morning, the Foundry vs Nickey, was settled. A jury had been impanneled to try it, but were then discharged. No court this afternoon.

HEADS AND HATS.

DID it ever strike you that Hats are the insignia of civilization? The extent of a nation's headway may be measured by the style of its headwear, and Barbarism and bare heads are as closely linked as Credit and Calamity. Barbarism is built on brawn—heads don't count: Civilization on brain—the head must be protected.

That's Where the Hat Comes on

We appeal for your patronage from this sort of a platform, and ask for nothing we don't think we deserve:

I. We Pay Cash. Wherever and whenever pitiless and inexorable necessity clamors for money, we are there with it. The manufacturer's necessities are our opportunities.

II. We Buy Cheap. The value of a lot of Hats to us depends not upon their "market value." We pay no more attention to "manufacturer's cost" than a cyclone pays to a rail fence.

III. We Sell for Cash. Under our rule no man carries aught but his own burden. Douglas Jerrold once said of the credit system: "Them as does pay—pays for them as doesn't." That way is not our principle—it's not our practice.

IV. We Sell Cheap. The saving we make, we give. We would rather sell a hundred men at 10 per cent profit than ten men at 25 per cent. On that rock we found our ; on that basis we make our bid for public favor.

The Ayilla News has enlarged to a six column folio.

We stated yesterday that some of the saloons violated the law by keeping open on Decoration day but we have since learned that by a decision of the supreme court Decoration day in Indiana is not a legal holiday so far as the saloons are concerned. In so much as this is true we think that Messrs. Sommers, Refner and Glazier did a gentlemanly and patriotic act in closing their saloons all day yesterday.

Mrs. Rebecca Dickinson goes to Ohio next Tuesday to visit her son, John Sibert, at Bodkins, Shelby county. Her sister there is in poor health yet and Mrs. Dickinson usually makes them a visit each year. She will likely remain about two months.

While opening a can of salmon to-day noon Jerry Bolinger cut the second hinger of his right hand quite badly. He had opened the can with his knife and took hold of the lid to pull it off when the sharp tin cut his finger. The cut is a bad one as it is to the bone. He went to Dr. Buchtel and had it dressed.

Since writing the loss of C. Dick's barn, we learn that John Hablawetz' barn two miles northwest of Newville was burned thursday evening, May 30. In company with Frank Benedict and several others, we watched a distant blaze that evening. Looking east on Ninth street it was plainly visible the light shining high. The loss was about $500 and was insured. We did not learn further particulars.

Prof. O. W. Nottingham the teacher of denmanship will be here two weeks during so much of the Normal school that begins August 8. O. W. Nottingham will commence his part of the work August 15, and will devote two weeks to the thorough teaching of penmanship. To the students of the Normal this will be free. But all others can enter his classes if they desire by paying a fee of $1. This opportunity to improve one's penmanship should be used by a large number of our pupils, and even private citizens may find it to their interest to take lessons. The hurry and push we put into our business ruins the handwriting of many who once boasted of a good hand. Even teachers may find benefit in additional training. There is another feature that should not be overlooked, for it furnishes one of the most potent reasons, why we find so many pupils deficient in penmanship. So much work has been added to the duties of the teacher that not sufficient time is left for instructions in penmanship. This condition is to be regretted but it exists and it furnishes all the greater reasons why the coming opportunity should be embraced.

Ask some men for an advertisement or a few locals and they will say they don't believe in advertising—a paper is never read. Let one of them be caught kissing his neighbor's wife, or trying to hold up the side of a building sometime, and his tune changes instanter, and if the printing office is in a garrett of a seventeen story building he will climb up to the top and beg the editor to keep quiet—not to publish it in the paper. The paper is not read—oh, no!—Ex.

The St. Joe News of last week has this. One of Hicksville's dashing young men had a few words with his father last week and in order to scare the old gentleman, he pretended to hang himself in a barn. He had placed the rope in under his arms in such a way that it couldn't possibly hurt him, and kicking the barrel out from n under him, he yelled bloody murder to attract attention. His father hurried to the barn and taking in the situation at a glance, proceeded at once to get a barrel stave, and warm the place usually covered by the young man's coat tail. It is needless to say that the coroner was not sent for.

Looking over yesterday's daily Cincinnatti Enquirer we were struck by an article on the 8th page. It was of an attempt to cash a forged check at a bank in that city. The picture of the would-be forger, had a familiar look, and on reading to the close, we found that it was believed to be Rolla Tefft, who was sent to prison about two years ago for stealing diamonds in the city of Washington. He had been sent up for two years, but would likely be free now. The forger whoever he was, went into the bank and asked the paying teller to cash a check of $675. The check appeared genuine, was signed by a well known business man and made payable to and endorsed by another. Not knowing the man who presented the check, the teller said, I will telephone to see is this is all right." "Very well" said the stranger, "I will wait outside," and he stepped across the street. The answer to the teller's question came quick that the check was a forgery. The teller at once ran out and followed the stranger up the street. The latter, seeing he was followed began to run, and was finally driven into an alley and cornered. He drew a revolver, but was disarmed and taken into custody. The officers are satisfied that he is young Tefft. Whoever it was showed some skill in getting a suitable check. A man signing himself "Elliott" sent the firm by whom the check he presented was supposed to be made, a letter stating that in another letter, he had by mistake sent them a $15 money order. They had actually received this, and at his request sent it back in a check. This enabled him to get an exact copy of the check on that bank. Another party in Hamilton had done the same thing by another, and on this same day, tried to cash a check at another Cincinnati bank. He also failed, but escaped. If this is Rolla again it proves that his punishment has not reformed him. If is not he, then it shows how a bad name brings a man under suspicion.

That is the figure it reached in Chicago yesterday and there are reports of many sunstrokes and similar occurences including a few deaths. The weather at Chicago has been especially severe for several days. Thursday while the various decoration exercises were going on there were several cases of exhaustion and sunstroke. Several noted men at Chicago suffered. Among them were the union general, Herman Lieb, the confederate general John C. Underwood. In the decoration exercises in the City of New York, Gov. Levi P. Morton, formerly Vice president under Harrison fainted as he stood in the reviewing stand, and had to be carried home. All over the central part of the country, the hot weather rages but in the elevated district in the mountains of the far west, they are having frosts that extend into New Mexico. In the Northwest they report wind storms and local rains yesterday and last evening. In South Dakota there was a rainfall of nearly two inches, the heaviest in two years.

FOR THE BLOOD

TAKE SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR
The Best Spring Medicine

Just now everybody is thinking about taking something for the blood. A Spring medicine as we speak of it. And it's a good thing to do, but you want to get the proper medicine. If you consult your physician he will tell you to and that, because the liver has everything to do with the blood. If the liver is sluggish the system is clogged, the blood becomes impure, and the whole body suffers. Every medicine recommended for the blood is supposed to work on the liver. Then get at once the "KING OF LIVER MEDICINES,"

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

It does its work well, and tones up the whole system. It is "Better than Pills," and can be had in liquid or powder.

COFFEE 12½ Cts Per lb

By using Aluminum Coffee Filterer will save its cost every 3 months in the year; always bright; no egg requirto settle. Coffee is richer and stronger. Every big restaurant in the world makes their coffee on this principle. Is of more value than any other kithchen utensil. Price 75 cents prepaid. Money refunded if not satisfactory. Agents can make from $3 to $15 per day selling this and other novelties. W. M. Woodworth, Kokomo, Ind.

A Reward of $500,

Will be paid for any case of Rheumatism which cannot be cured by Dr. Drummond Lightning Remedy. This offer is made in good faith by the proprietors, and there is no reasonable excuse for any one to suffer longer. Any ordinary case will be cured by one treatment, and it is poor economy to suffer when relief can be secured so certainly. The price of a month's treatment—two bottles—is $5, and that is the cost of a cure. Full particulars and testimonials of wonderful cures sent to any address. Good For a Cough.

While at Peekskill, N. Y., Mr. J. A. Scriven, a prominent manufacturer of New York City, purchased a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. Such good results were obtained from its use that he sent back to the druggist from whom he had obtained it for two more bottles of the same remedy. When you have a cough or cold give this preparation a trial and like Mr. Scriven you will want it when again in need of such a medicine. It is a remedy of great worth and merit. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord. 23-6

Call For Town Orders.

Upon presentation I will pay all outstanding municipal Orders up to and including no 923 Dated May 11, 1894.

Also all Road Orders up to and including no 800 Dated April 16 1895. Interest will stop June 6 1895.

CHAS. H. G. JONES, Town Treas.

Costs But a Trifle.

While in Topeka last March, E. T. Barber, a prominent newspaper man of La Cygne, Kan., was taken with cholera morbus very severely. The night clerk at the hotel where he was stopping happened to have a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy and gave him three doses which relieved him and he thinks saved his life. Every family should keep this remedy in their home at all times. No one can tell how soon it may be needed. It costs but a trifle and may be the means of saving much suffering and perhaps the life of some member of the family. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord. 23 6

THE YORK WASHER IS ON THE MARKET

This Machine has just been put on the market and is pronounced by all scientists the best and only successful washe made.

Wash Day Made Easy

This Machine saves the price of it in wear and tear of clothing in six months. It will wash perfect from a handkerchief to a bed quilt, and can be operated by a child. It adjusts itself to any different shape that the clothes may come in the Washer.

Another Great Advantage

You can wash any part of the garment separately. The Machine weighs less than ten pounds, and can be placed in any tub or box and when not in use can be hung up.

Too much good living spoils the liver.

The Illurian's only aim is to shoot progress.

The Delaware Legislature shut up with the same deadlock it opened with.

By continually wishing for something they cannot get, men become anarchists.

If you wait on the world it will bring you nothing, but if you go for it, it will treat you well.

The best opportunity is a chance to show what is in you, and to most men that comes very often.

Science continues to do more for us than politics, and the inventor brings in a new order of things while the reformer is talking.

The Yonkers Gazette asserts that when a man gets married is the only time in his life when he has on new clothes all through.

The rumor that Della Fox had lost $65,000 worth of diamonds in Peoria caused a lively flutter in the plate glass trust for a while.

It has been figured out that it costs $450 to save a Chicago sinner. That being so, the average kind of a sinner ought to be saved for a great deal less.

The man who doesn't advertise will soon go out of business, and the woman who doesn't read the advertisements will go without the greatest bargains in town.

The prospectus of a Boston school makes this delicate distinction: "Modern languages are taught by native gentlemen. Dead languages are taught by Harvard graduates."

A man may climb up in the world by mounting the shoulders of his neighbors, but he who can most surely enter heaven is the one who can carry the greatest number of his neighbors on his back.

"I have noticed," said a philosopher, "that the man who spends most of his time in getting at the bottom facts of things, often has a wife who has to spend her time in scraping the bottom of the barrel."

The word "Home," Lady Somerset says, is the most beautiful word in the English language. Home itself is quite a beautiful thing when the wife and mother stays there to beautify and grace it. Lady Somerset should experiment more along this line.

John D. Rockefeller's only ambition in life is to accumulate $500,000,000, it is said. By the time he gets this undertaking off his hands, however, he will doubtless have some other little scheme in view. Mr. Rockefeller is not a lazy man, however modest his aspirations.

Every year adds to the importance of trade in the Pacific, and the events of 1895 are making the great ocean and its bordering lands the chief arena of interest. The possibilities of growth in those latitudes is instanced in Australia, which had a foreign trade last year of $642,000,000 and produced gold to the value of $40,000,000.

The interviews with multi-millionaires who declare that riches are a burden, that a poor man is happiest, create a feeling not far removed from weariness and disgust, and partaking somewhat of both. If these men mean what they say they can easily unload their usually ill-got gains, stop skinning the human race, and be poor, happy and, perhaps in time, respected once more.

Joseph Jefferson has decided views against the idea of an endowed theater in this country. The principal obstacle, he points out, is the unstable condition of politics, which would give us "a Democratic low comedian one year, and a Republican high tragedian the next year." All things considered, he thinks "the best endowment for the American stage is for every actor and playwright to do his best."

Kentucky is receiving much merited attention lately. A wedding ceremony of unusual interest has just taken place there. The young people had run away, an irate parent and brother of the girl in close pursuit, and reached the house of a minister. Before the good man had the knot secure the pursuers arrived and interrupted the ceremony with, it must be admitted, a degree of rudeness. The half-made groom thereupon shot and killed his almost father-in-law, took a couple of shots at his pretty-near brother-in-law and the knitting of the holy bonds of matrimony proceeded.

A story comes from Hawaii that a Hawaiian official has found among the Government archives in that country, official documents, or, at least, an official map of Venezuela, which fully confirms the claim of that country in the territorial dispute with British Guiana. It shows the boundary between the two countries precisely as Venezuela claims it should be. So far as official documents of the British Government go, this may be the first direct testimony found, but the maps of South America in common use for half a century and more show precisely that fact. The British claim is entirely an afterthought, and a recent one. Every man of middle-age knows that the accepted maps of his schoolboy days showed exactly that, and it is not believed that any maps anywhere show anything else, unless it may be recent English maps made in the light of this totally indefensible claim.

It begins to look as if Japan is playing her hand against Russia with very adroit suavity. Rather than go to war with the new triple alliance, she consented to forego the "permanent possession" of the Liao Tong peninsula, but she did not agree not to hold on until the larger part of the indemnity is paid, both to Port Arthur and Wei Hai Wei. Russia cannot object to this cautionary security, and before the time expires there may be opportunity for Japan to effect some other arrangement which will satisfy Russia, and, as the Japanese Emperor says, "the time and manner of restoring the peninsula to China will be determined between Japan and China." And, indeed, who else has any right to say a word about it? The polite little Japs will outwit their antagonists yet. And serve them right, too.

The German Emperor must be in a very bad humor. He tried to have an anti-revolution law enacted, and his Centrist friends, who favored its general purpose, loaded it with an amendment punishing anybody who might write or publish anything calculated to undermine or antagonize the Christian religion or the instituteion of marriage as it stands, and gave it to the state to determine what were such offenses. The effect of this would have been a return to the worst practices of medieval ecclesiasticism, and the stifling of all sorts of philosophical or scientific inquiry. The result was that when the bill went to a vote it was overwhelmingly defeated, and then one of the imperial ministers exemplified the spirit of the proposed law by denouncing the Reichstag as contumacious, and asserting that it had no right to have any opinions, but was there simply to carry out the Emperor's wishes. It's a most inglorious muddle throughout.

Arnold, the Chicago matrimonial swindler, was doing a good business when arrested, and had it not been for the suspicions of the Sedan, Minn., man, whose hold upon his money was stronger than his desire to plunge into matrimony, he might have been doing a good business still. His outlay was only for postage stamps and cheap photographs of actresses, while his income was at least fifty dollars from each of the parties on his string and the string was getting longer all the time. Apparently it was a safe business also, for no one would anticipate that any one of the victims would squeal when he found himself taken in and done for. He might safely reckon that no one would wish to expose himself to the mockery of his friends and neighbors by confessing that he had been caught in any such trap, but the Sedan man proved to be an exception and in uncovering himself he also uncovered numerous others who have been in correspondence with Arnold. While one cannot but admire the ingenuity of Mr. Arnold's plan for raising money without working for a living, and while one can have but little sympathy for the persons whom he has bled, still it is cause for congratulation that Arnold's scheme has been nipped in the bud and that he has been clutched by the law before his nets were full of victims. There should be some way of protecting the idiots who answer matrimonial advertisements. Few have even the small ray of sense displayed by the Sedan man.

Many Shipwrecks on Labrador.

Owing to the vanguard of rocky islands strung along the coast, harbors are numerous—so numerous that a quaint Western man, the only passenger besides myself who ventured on the mail-boat this cruise, remarked that if harbors were only worth a cent apiece Labrador would be one of the richest countries in the world. But, in spite of these many shelters, rocks and ice are so fatal to shipping on this coast that the mail-boat rarely returns from a trip without bringing in some shipwrecked crew. After one storm three hundred shipwrecked sailors were transferred by her at Belle Harbor to the larger vessel which plies between there and St. John's. On our trip we picked up the crew of a stanch English vessel whose captain had, in entering one of the tickles, to choose between ice and rocks, and so ran her on the latter. When we entered a harbor our mate always took soundings, but before we let go the anchor our captain would sing out, "Any timber, Mr. Parsons?" If the mate said "Yes" it meant that some vessel had left its poor old ribs on the rocky bottom, and we must drift on and sound again.—St. Nicholas.

Confederate Postage Stamps.

Persons who have kept any of the old letters they received in the South during the war might do well to look them over. The Confederate Government authorized the issue and use of local postage stamps and nearly every city in the South at one time had its own stamp. Many thousands of these were used, but so rare are they now that they bring very high prices. There is among collectors a keen demand for them and an idea of what they will bring may be gathered from the report of a sale which occurred recently at the rooms of the Philadelphia Society, New York. Local confederate stamps sold as follows: Athens, Ga., $40; four varieties of the Baton Rouge, La., 5-cent, $41, $77 and $30 respectively; Macon, Ga., two varieties, for $63.50 and $171; Lenoir, N. C., $82, and Mobile 2-cent, black, $41.50. As time goes on these curiosities will probably increase in value. They are already beyond the reach of everybody but wealthy collectors.—Atlanta Journal.

How to Sterilize Milk.

The Journal of Hygiene gives a simple method of sterilizing milk as follows:

Place it in a clean glass bottle or can, then place the bottle in any metallic vessel and pour water around it till it has reached the level of the milk, and place over the fire and heat to the temperature of 150 degrees. Keep it at this temperature for thirty minutes, then plug up the mouth of the bottle with clean cotton and keep till needed. The cotton offers a barrier to the entrance of all germs which is truly wonderful. They strangle in it as a man does in a jungle and cannot get out.

One Year's Gold Output.

South Africa produced £6,960,114 of gold last year, an increase of nearly two millions over 1893, and of over two and a half millions over 1894.

Some people believe in constantly keeping their hooks baited for suckers. It is easier to make an honest living than it is to make a dishonest one.

NOW IT BEARS FRUIT.

COUNTRY BECOMES PROSPEROUS UNDER WILSON LAW.

Good Times and Increased Wages Everywhere—Republican Calamity-Howlers in a Bad Way—An Old Superstition Gets Some Hard Raps.

The Income Tax Decision.

The organs of tariff protected monopoly are jubilant over the decision of the Supreme Court declaring the income tax unconstitutional. They foolishly think that the movement away from high tariffs toward direct taxation can be checked by the failure of the first crude attempt to tax the wealthy classes in proportion to the benefits they receive from the Government. And they boast that the decision means that protective tariffs are to be the settled policy of this country. Never was there a greater mistake. The sentiment which put the income tax through Congress is stronger to-day than ever before. It is perhaps better that since in its first form the income tax was far from satisfactory to its friends, it should have been wiped out altogether. But the widespread demand for direct taxation which will reach the fruits of monopoly and special privilege, is growing every day, and will sweep away the party which dares oppose it. Far better had it been for the privileged classes had the patched-up tax been allowed to stand. The next direct tax bill, introduced by a majority party in Congress, will be far more radical, and it will be enforced by a popular sentiment which will insist on the Constitutional amendments necessary to make it the law of the land. Oh, no, short-sighted protectionist editors. Don't fool your readers with any such nonsense as "high tariff our settled policy." The people of America have a good deal to say about settling things, and little obstructions like Constitutions won't stand long in their way when they make up their minds to settle them right.

"Home Market" Delusions.

Almost the only argument on which the trade restrictionists have relied to catch the farmer's votes has been been the pretense that high tariff taxation would create "home markets" which would make the farmer prosperous. And in spite of the fact that the prices of farm products are fixed in foreign markets, farmers have been found foolish enough to believe that some time, far off, protection would give them a home market for all their produce. At the same time that they have been crediting high taxation with the development of this country, the protectionist press has been steadily harping on the alleged decline of agriculture in Great Britain, under a low tariff. "It is true, they say, "that by abolishing restrictions on commerce, England has vastly benefited her manufacturers and workingmen. But look at the farmers. Within forty miles of London there are thousands of idle acres, and foreign competition in all kinds of food stuffs has greatly reduced the rents of Londoners throughout Great Britain."

Admitting that the farmers in the neighborhood of London are not prosperous, the natural question is: What is the matter with their "home market?" With a city of over four millions of people almost at their doors, why are they not rich? Come, Messrs. High Tariffites, explain how it happens that with enormously increased population in the cities, the British farmer has not received the benefits which are so glowingly promised, but never bestowed on, the American farmer!

Keep Together, Tribune!

It is too much to expect that the "no traders" will agree among themselves as to the real purpose of protective tariffs. Neither do we hope to find the utterances of any one protectionist agree from week to week. But we certainly believe that a daily tariff organ should at least be consistent with itself in each issue. Under the heading "Some Startling Facts," the New York Tribune recently published an article from its Washington correspondent, based on the Government summary of exports and imports. From that report the Tribune showed that while the value of the imports of articles of food and live animals imported free of duty in the month of March, 1894, amounted to $32,000,000; in March, 1895, it amounted to only $13,000,000. The same issue of the Tribune contained the usual original remarks about the "flood of foreign gods" which tariff reform is pouring on the country. Did any of the paper's readers think to ask the editor why, if foreign goods are things to be avoided and shut out, the McKinley bill permitted $32,000,000 worth of them to come in free in one month? Perhaps they did ask and perhaps the editor did not know.

Why Republicans Weep.

The calamity howlers of the Republican press are just now using blue ink, and an extra width of mourning border for their wails. The cause of their sorow is no longer the terrible evil of unrestricted trade, but the fact that, in spite of their doing all in their power to hinder the revival of business, the country is entering on one of the most prosperous periods in its history. Factories are running on extra time to fill orders; new industries are starting up all over the country; wages are being increased from ten to fifteen per cent.; and railroad business is steadily growing. And in the sight of this prosperity, which should gladden the heart of every American, the high-tariffite sits him down and weeps, and weeps. Because: he said that the hard times brought on by a dose of McKinleyism would last until we get more of the same mixture. He thought that people would stop using food, clothes, furniture or steel, just because the high taxation policy had been knocked out. But, strange to say, the people are going right on to produce and buy and sell things as usual. Hence these Republican tears.

Duty on Silks.

The voice of McKinley is to be invoked in favor of higher duties on silks. Cheap silks have become one of the few luxuries of the thrifty poor, and a little group of manufacturers demand the right to tax them more for the indulgence. That there is no reason for it the record shows. Under all tariffs raw silk has been free. The present duty on manufactures of silks is 50 per cent. This is exactly what it was under the Republican commission tariff of 1883-90. The McKinleyites raised it to 60 per cent. A call for more than 50 per cent. taxation on any article of clothing will never again be popular in this country.—New York World.

Hard Raps for an Old Superstition.

Secretary Morton is doing good service in combating foolish notions about international trade. In the preface to the valuable pamphlet just issued by the Department of Agriculture, entitled "The World's Markets for American Products," he gives the dear old superstition about a "favorable balance of trade," and the need of selling more than we buy, some particularly hard raps. He maintains that the nation, like the individual, that does not take in more than it puts out is in a bad way, and gives a conclusive point to the argument by citing the case of England's exports and imports for the past five years. During that period her imports exceeded her exports by some $3,000,000,000, and she ought to have suffered several kinds of blue ruin, according to the Tribune's favorite doctrine. On the contrary, she has accumulated so much wealth that she has had milions and millions to throw away in Argentina and the United States, and not even yet shows any signs of applying for a receivership.—New York Evening Post.

Good Times and Increased Wages.

All such reports as that of the advances in wages grouped by the evening edition of the World recently are gratifying. It is most gratifying, however, to see that among the advances now so frequently reported nearly all are made voluntarily by the manufacturers.

Prices and wages are advancing together. In wheat, corn, cotton, coffee, provisions and various metals there has been a marked advance, showing an increase of demand and of general activity. It is only fair to add, however, that business has never been as depressed as some people would have it thought.—New York World.

"Humbug at a Premium."

A calamity organ sententiously observes that "humbug is at a premium these days;" and it then proceeds to emit a yawp over the terrible frauds in valuations of imports under the ad valorem duties on woolens in the new tariff. It is assumed in this specimen of humbug that the public is not aware that the ad valorem duties were much higher under the McKinley tariff, and the profits of frauds in valuations consequently much greater.

Why England Has Cheap Meat.

A writer in the Frankfurter Zeitung calls attention to the fact that Australian meat can be bought in English towns almost as cheaply as in Melbourne—from 6 to 10 cents per pound—and attributes to this and similar blessings of free trade the fact that in spite of hard times, there has been so little actual suffering in England.

Just Watch Them Squirm!

The McKinley brethren are now saying that improvement in business is only in those branches not touched by the new tariff. Of course this is not true, but it is interesting to see the McKinleyites wriggle, just the same.

The Finest Toboggan Slide.

In Perak, a state in the Straits Settlements, the Malays have one form of amusement which is probably not to be enjoyed anywhere else in the world. There is a huge granite slope in the course of a mountain river, down which the water trickles about two inches deep, the main stream having carved out a bed by the side of the bowlder.

This rock, the face of which has been rendered as smooth as glass by the constant flow of water during the hundreds of years, the Malays—men, women and children—have turned into a toboggan slide.

Climbing to the top of the rock, they sit in the shallow water with their feet straight out, and a hand on each side for steering, and then slide straight down the sixty feet into a pool of water. This is a favorite sport on sunny mornings, as many as two hundred folk being engaged at a time, and sliding down so quickly one after another, or forming rows of two, four, and even eight persons, that they tumble into a pool a confused mass of scrambling creatures.

There is little danger in the game, and though some choose to sit on a piece of plantain most of the tobogganers are content to squat on their haunches.

The Whippoorwill's Song.

The whippoorwill's best singing is coincident with that hour of agricultural enchantment—corn-planting time. That used to come "when the leaves of the white oak were as big as rats' ears;" but this year the hot weather succeeded in hurrying up even the oaks, which usually are not to be beguiled with any such blandishments, and already their leaves are as big as cats' ears, and the corn—if the agriculturist was wise and foresaw the cold wave—is not yet planted in Massachusetts. But corn-planting time is the time of keenness and vividness of life in all things. The mere sight of nature is a stimulus and a string to the dullest and laziest nature; for once in their lives the farmer's boy and the hired man spring to their hoes like madmen, eager to be at work—to have a sort of growing part in the exuberant springing forth of all things. It is an intoxication to smell the fragrant earth. The birds are all wild with joy in the blossoming orchards and the intensely green woods. Corn-planting time! It is the summit of the earth's creative ecstacies—the maddest, if not the most spiritual, of natural moments.—Boston Transcript.

His Reason.

Charles the Second was altogether in favor of extempore preaching. On one occasion he asked the famous Stillingfleet, "How it was that he always read his sermons before him, when he was informed that he always preached without a book elsewhere?" Stillingfleet answered something about the awe of so noble a congregation, the presence of so great and wise a prince, with which the king himself was very well contented. "But, pray," continued Stillingfleet, "will your majesty give me leave to ask you a question? Why do you read your speeches when you can have none of the same reasons?" "Why, truly, doctor," replied the king, "your question is a very pertinent one, and so will be my answer. I have asked the two houses so often and for so much money that I am ashamed to look them in the face."

Mrs. Chase in Need.

Just after Rev. Z. T. Sweeney, of the Tabernacle Christian Church, Columbus, had concluded his sermon last Sunday he read the following statement concerning the life of the late Governor Ira J. Chase:

"Notwithstanding his long and valuable service to his State, the country at large and the church, ex-Governor Chase left his family in actual need. This information will be most distressing to thousands of friends and admirers of the late Governor. For more than twenty-five years his wife has been a confirmed invalid, confined nearly all of the time to her bed, and for fifteen years has been totally blind. Governor Chase was a man of large and warm heart, and in his time gave away thousands in charity. In his young manhood, when the Nation called for defenders, he offered himself and bore his full share of the great conflict. Although he was a party man, he had many friends in both parties. There are hundreds of large-hearted men in Indiana who doubtless would be happy to give to help create a fund to make the last days of his window comfortable. To let her remain destitute would be a shame on the good name of the State he served so long and well. On next Sunday night, June 2, I will preach a memorial sermon on Governor Chase, how he lived and how he died, and start a fund for the support of his widow."

JAMES RUMBAUGH, farmer near Laporte, allowed a stranger to make him believe that he was a cousin of his and then gave him $8 and signed a paper. The latter turns out to be a note.

THERE was a desperate running battle between officers and burglars, at the Pittsburg yards, in the eastern portion of Fort Wayne. One tramp and a Deputy Sheriff are probably fatally wounded.

JOHN COOK, a colored barber, aged 30, attempted to crawl under a freight train at a street crossing on the Big Four road at Muncie, and both legs were mashed so badly that amputation at the hips was necessary. He died three hours later.

MARTIN BASSETT, a young farmer living five miles north of Shelbyville, blew off the top of his head with a shotgun. The reasons given for the suicide is that the frost and cut worms had ruined his prospects for a corn crop and that his wife had threatened to leave him.

GOV. MATTHEWS has pardoned Harry M. Hodson of Evansville, who shot and killed his father, William T. Hodson, in August, 1892. The pardon was asked by the Judge that tried the case, the twelve jurors who returned the verdict, and numerous citizens of Evansville. The showing was made that the father had assaulted the boy first with a steel rod and then with a pitcher, and that the latter had shot in self-defense.

GRANVILLE COWING of Muncie, who is a recognized authority, says: "There will be no raspberries or blackberries, and the crop of strawberries will not be 10 per cent. Apples and pears are badly injured, but not as many killed as some people believe. There will be some late cherries, but very few grapes. The drought is killing the meadows, and some wheat is being plowed up, while much corn is being replanted. Rye was badly injured during the late cold snap."

THE Grand Lodge of Masons of Indiana met at Indianapolis, in ann al session, with about five hundred delegates in attendance. The annual report of Grand Secretary Smythe shows the order to be in a prosperous and growing condition. The following officers were elected: Grand Master, Edward O'Rourke, of Fort Wayne; Deputy Grand Master, Simeon P. Gillette, of Evansville; Senior Grand Warder, Mason J. Niblack, of Vincennes; Junior Grand Warden, George A. Macomber, of South Bend; Grand Treasurer, Martin H. Rice, of Indianapolis; Grand Secretary, William H. Smythe, of Indianapolis.

MRS. JAMES STRANGHN and daughter, Cora, of Alto, were fatally hurt in a runaway at Kokomo. They were going into town when an advertising man tried to throw a circus poster into the buggy. The paper fell under the horse's feet, causing the runaway. Both will die.

A NUMBER of farmers who are considered good authority on the fruit subject were discussing the fruit problem at Hagerstown, and were unanimous in the conclusion that though there has been the most unfavorable fruit weather this spring, and especially in May, that they have ever experienced, apples promise the largest yield in many years. The trees are loaded.

OTTO HUFF, a prominent young man of Livonia, ten miles east of Orleans, was instantly killed. He and Herschel Kelly were hunting together and undertook to run a squirrel out of a tree. Kelley climbed the tree and Huff went to hand him his gun, when it was discharged, the entire load entering his abdomen. Huff was 18 years old.

WHILE the steam shovels of the Knickerbocker Sand Company were loading sand at Dune Park, near Valparaiso, on the shore of Lake Michigan, they unearthed a well-preserved skeleton seven feet two inches in length, and is supposed to be that of a member of an early tribe of Indians. It was found nearly thirty feet under ground.

Opinions of Gresham.

The administration of the State Department under Secretary Gresham will be regarded by the historian of the future as equal to any.—Milwaukee Journal.

In each of three fields—war, the bench and the cabinet, as soldier, jurist and secretary—he attained a distinct and enduring fame.—Grand Rapids Democrat.

One of his best characteristics was hostility to the growth of corporation influence in political affairs, and to this was due most of his strength with the masses.—Buffalo Express.

Personally Mr. Gresham was probably the most democratic man that ever occupied the State Department. He was more accessible than any of his clerks.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

As a soldier he was brave, faithful and knightly; as a cabinet officer he established beyond question the qualities of efficiency and integrity; as a judge he was just and pure, holding the scales of justice without partiality.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Republicans cannot but believe that his uncertainty of political faith was unfortunate and that he was in error when he cast his lot with the Cleveland administration, but he can be credited with honesty and a desire to do his duty.—Duluth News-Tribune.

A man has died who has deserved well of his fellow citizens. The Secretary of State was a brave soldier and a just judge. In his later career many of his countrymen find things to disapprove, and find other things that stamp him with the same patriotism that won him fame in bygone years.—Pittsburg Commercial Gazette.

There are those who were closely attached to Secretary Gresham and who were cemented to him by years of personal friendship, who will feel that a light has gone out of their lives, and that grief has come in to sit where hope of the future of the dead statesman had held its place and joy at his success was genuine and the outgrowth of appreciation and true sympathy.—New Albany Ledger.

Utah's New Constitution.

The Utah constitutional convention provided for no lieutenant governor in the list of State officers. Utah should provide for such an emergency, so that when the people elect officials representing one party or policy there will be some one to slip in when a Governor dies and carry on the work as it was begun.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

A glance at the new constitution which is to be submitted to the people of Utah in November will suffice to show what a tremendous advance is in store for womanhood in that territory when it shall become a State. Not only is the Federal statute prohibiting polygamy confirmed, but woman suffrage is established at one sweep.—Chicago Herald.

The constitution which is to be submitted to the people of Utah in November prohibits polygamy, as do all the States; it provides for woman suffrage, as does Wyoming; it does away with the grand jury system, as does Michigan, and it does not provide for a lieutenant governor, in which it is like Delaware, Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia, Maine and some other States. It incorporates some new features in trials by jury, providing for petit juries of eight persons, six of whom can render a verdict, except in criminal cases, when a unanimous verdict is required to convict. The constitution provides for a school system that is comprehensive, and if well carried out will give the new State a high rank in educational matters.—Chicago Record.

The Russian Squeeze.

If Japan was about one-fourth the size of Russia the latter wouldn't be offering it any advice.—Chicago Tribune.

Japan, like Cuba, may not have the sympathy of the United States Government, but both have the cordial sympathy and good will of the American people.—New York Advertiser.

Russia is inclined to crow over what it regards as a diplomatic victory in forcing Japan to agree not to demand any of the Chinese mainland. It is hard to see wherein the victory lies, for Japan was clearly made the victim of bulldozing by three of the most powerful nations of the world.—Kansas City Star.

Russia's tender regard for "those principles on which rests the concert of civilized nations," and her agonized fear lest Japan, by violating them, should imperil the progress of civilization in the East, almost make one forget the part Russia took in the dismemberment of Poland and her more recent treatment of the Jews.—New York Times.

The Lion's Grab.

It will be England's next move to cultivate an impression that the Monroe doctrine is a theory and not a condition.—Washington Star.

The savage is not far beneath the skin of this Christian nation. The instinct that leads England to enter up judgment without arbitration, to refuse mediation and to chastise the quaking antagonist is the instinct of the aborigine.—Chicago Post.

England's conduct in the Nicaragua matter is arrogant and cowardly, but it is characteristic. It is the course she has always taken in dealing with small nations. She is a swaggerer and a bully except when the other party is a country of her own size.—Globe-Democrat.

If this method of procedure should take place between two individuals, one a big man and the other a little boy, we should apply epithets to the big man that would not be flattering. Why should not the same methods of justice exist between nations as between individuals?—Boston Globe.

The Comic Side of The News

Cincinnati ice dealers are at war and rates have been cut in two. But of course that cuts no ice here.

Ford—Your lawyer made some pretty severe charges against the other fellow, didn't he? Smallwort—Y-e-e-s, but you ought to see how he charged me.—Cincinnati Tribune.

Teacher—Which letter is the next one to the letter "H?" Boy—Dunno, ma'am. Teacher—What have I on both sides of my nose? Boy—Freckles, ma'am.—New York Herald.

Abbott—I have never been in Chicago but I have been through the town a few times. Babbitt—I have been in Chicago, but the town went through me—Indianapolis Journal.

Justice—You are charged with stealing Col. Julep's chickens; have you any witnesses? Uncle Mose—I heb not; I don't steal chickens befo' witnesses.—Browning, King & Co.'s Monthly.

"The curious thing about my business," said the mosquito, alighting softly upon the nose of the sleeping victim, "is that it's more fun to go to work than it is to stay to hum."—Chicago Tribune.

Weary Wiggins (handing dipper)—You look dry. Here's a drink of water. Wayside Husks (waving the dipper away)—What's the use of spoiling a good thirst like I've got?—Chicago Record.

Miss Wellalong—I think I made quite a sensation in my antique costume at the levee last evening. Miss Marketmade—Oh, decidedly! Everybody exclaimed, "How appropriate!"—Boston Transcript.

Mr. Figg—Do you know, my boy, that it hurts me worse than it does you when I give you a whipping? Tom—Honest, paw? "Yes." "Just gimme another lickin' now, will you paw?"—Cincinnati Tribune.

"She treated you pretty shabbily." "Yes. She's angry with some one." "With you?" "Oh, no; not with me." "How do you know?" "Because I'm the one she's venting her feelings on."—Chicago Evening Post.

Johnny—"Maw, I should think it would be a heap more careless to cast pearls before chickens than to cast 'em before swine." His mother—"Why so, Johnny?" Johnny—"'Cause they'd eat 'em."—Chicago Tribune.

Rollingstone Nomoss—"Did you ever hear about Ragsey's financial difficulty?" Taterdon Torn—"No, what was it?" Rolingstone Nomoss—"Some gent give 'im a quarter, an' he swallowed it."—Philadelphia Record.

"And you say your father is interested in me?" said Mr. Stalate, greatly pleased. "He seems so," she answered. "He worried about your health." "My health?" "Yes. He thinks you have insomnia."—Washington Star.

Papa (soberly)—"That was quite a monstrosity you had in the parlor one evening." Grace, nettled—"Indeed, that must depend upon one's understanding of the term 'monstrosity.'" Papa, thoughtfully—"Well, two heads upon one pair of shoulders, for example,"—Boston Globe.

First new woman—"That Mrs. Umphry is horribly lacking in manners." Second new woman—"What is the matter?" First new woman—"I saw her in a street car the other day when a number of gentlemen entered, and she never offered to give up her seat to them."—Chicago Record.

If you sleep in the house of a wizard, you must be prepared for experiences out of the common. So thinks a gentleman who once passed a night under Mr. Edison's roof.

In the middle of the night he was awakened by the sound of a voice at his elbow. "Midnight has struck!" it said, in hollow but resonant tones. "Prepare to meet thy God!"

The guest was out of bed in haste. He must be the victim of some hallucination. There was no one in the room. His would be a fine case for the "psychical research" people. But even while these thoughts were passing through his head, he was making for the door. In the hall he met Mr. Edison, who reassured him by saying:

"Don't be scared, old man; it's nothing but a clock."

YOUNG GIRLS.

INTERESTING CONCLUSIONS.

Mothers Agree on One Vital Subject.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

Young girls, to the thinking mind, are ever subjects of the deepest interest.

Some lead lives of luxury, while others toil for mere existence. Separate, however, as their paths in life may lie, Nature demands of them the same obedience. All are subject to the same physical laws, and suffer in proportion to their violation.

Young girls are reticent through modesty, and often withhold what ought to be told.

Yet they are not to blame, for information on such subjects has been withheld from them, owing to the false interpretation of a mother's duty.

In such cases they should do as thousands of young ladies are doing every day: write to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., giving as nearly as possible their symptoms, and receive her freely given advice and timely aid.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the young girl's most trusty friend. It can be obtained of any druggist, and speedily relieves and cures irregularities, suspension, retention, and all derangements of the womb and ovaries.

It banishes promptly all pains, headache, backache, faintness, nervousness, sleeplessness, melancholia, etc. Young girls must know that self-preservation is the first law of nature.

The Greatest Medical Discovery of the Age.

KENNEDY'S MEDICAL DISCOVERY.

DONALD KENNEDY, OF ROXBURY, MASS.,

Has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures every kind of Humor, from the worst Scrofula down to a common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunder humor). He has now in his possession over two hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston. Send postal card for book.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the right quantity is taken.

When the lungs are affected it causes shooting pains, like needles passing through them; the same with the Liver or Bowels. This is caused by the ducts being stopped, and always disappears in a week after taking it. Read the label.

If the stomach is foul or bilious it will cause squeamish feelings at first.

No change of diet ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it. Dose, one tablespoonful in water at bedtime. Sold by all Druggists.

Beecham's pills are for biliousness, sick headache, dizziness, dyspepsia, bad taste in the mouth, heartburn, torpid liver, foul breath, sallow skin, coated tongue, pimples loss of appetite, etc., when caused by constipation; and constipation is the most frequent cause of all of them.

One of the most important things for everybody to learn is that constipation causes more than half the sickness in the world, especially of women; and it can all be prevented. Go by the book, free at your druggist's, or write B. F. Allen Co., 365 Canal St., New York. Pills, 10¢ and 25¢ a box.

NOTES ON EDUCATION.

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO PUPIL AND TEACHER.

What Is to Be Done with the Graduate?—Munificent Gifts of Wealthy Men to Columbia College—Evils of Overcrowding in the Public Schools.

After Graduation, What?

Commencement day with its white gowns, its beribboned essay, and its touching sense of the high aspirations to be reached after in life, is a charming occasion. But after graduation, what then?

Boast as much as you will of the progress of the girl, she is rather a helpless being still; and however pleasing helplessness in woman may be, in poetry, in actual life it loses its charms and assumes features which conspire to anything but the happiest lot in the world. In this world more than two-thirds of the women are wage-workers; and what does their meed of dollars amount to? A majority of them average less than $1 per day, and $10 to $15 per week marks the outside limit of the most favored—few in number, unsurpassed in ability. Women may be self-supporting, but very few, comparatively speaking, have reached the point where they look beyond subsistence to a comfortable competency, as men reckon such matters, or to getting rich.

True enough, the field of woman's industries are broadening. In business circles, in cities at least, there is very little distinction nowadays between what is properly woman's work and man's work, except in the all-important matter of pay. Go into any large manufactory, even where every product is distinctively connected with man's labor, somewhere about the building, with needle or brush, tending a machine, keeping books, or manipulating a typewriter, you will find a woman at work. On the other hand, start any new industry, no matter how specially adapted to womans nimble fingers or keen eyesight or insight, if there is "money in it," man is in the field and comes into immediate competition with woman. The question of a living in this world, for man or woman either, involves a good deal of thought and study—more of each with every year that goes by.

With the higher class of industries to which woman aspires, relations are much the same as with the lower. Teaching is overcrowded. Journalism is uncertain, and not an easy profession to get started in. Literature, without the highest order of talent, is hopeless. Lecturing is past its prime, and public reading is going the same way. In music, vocal or instrumental, except for the one rarely gifted in a hundred thousand, there is an absolute glut in the market. To be a third-rate musician is to fail outright. In painting the same.

Taken collectively, the difference between men and women—and it is an infinite difference—is comprehended in one idea—organization. A nation, a State, a city, a church, the public school system, any modern institution whatever, is a corporation of men, in which women are disconnected units. Business firms and corporations are organizations of men with rarely a woman partner among them.

Women have done much, but it is as well not to applaud their successes too loudly till they have done more. Let them pay to a business education in business principles the same thorough attention they now pay to the requirements of society superfluities; the same careful thought and study they bestow upon their evening costumes and a thousand and one other fancies which prove but a passing pleasure to so many of themselves, and a vain delusion and a snare to as many men. Let them by systematic study and training fit themselves for the varied occupations they can enter upon without doing violence to their physical organization. This course will bring its immediate result; for men will be compelled then to seek a living in those occupations, abundant enough, from which women are debarred, but which they themselves avoid because of the manual labor, the heat of the sun, and various other discomforts to be encountered. Surely no injustice will be done, for woman must live; and if not favored by fortune with a plenteous provision of this world's goods, she must struggle for her bread in those fields open to all the human race—the ranks of the employes. But what she needs to complete success in the fields open to her, is faith in herself and a business courage.

At the same time the accomplishments of a perfect wife should be attained. For at marriage—and what girl does not calculate upon it—these will become her stock in trade, and furnish abundant claim for release from any cares in the transaction of business affairs.

The world owes no man a living. Nor does it any woman. As before intimated, poetic conceptions and actual, life experiences, are two different things. And in the hurry, bustle, and strife for the dollars to make life's path easier, the world sees no distinction in the nature of dress of the being who requires them.

Gifts to a College.

President Seth Low, of Columbia College, New York, recently made a regal gift to that institution. The trustees were in session, considering ways and means to push forward work of construction on the new college buildings, when President Low announced his munificient offer of $1,000,000, to be used in the erection of the library building. The donor desired the building to be a memorial to his father, Abiel Abbott Low, "a merchant who taught his son to value the things for which Columbia College stands."

The conditions attached to the gift are threefold. It is President Low's desire, in the first place, that the gift shall be the means of extending college privileges to some of the boys and girls of his native city, Brooklyn, thereby maintaining a high standard of efficiency in both the public and private schools of that city. Accordingly twelve Brooklyn scholarships for boys will be established in Columbia and twelve Brooklyn scholarships for girls in Barnard College. The scholarships are to be awarded by competition, three a year, beginning with the autumn of 1896, each scholarship to be held for the full college course of four years.

Following President Low's gift came one of $300,000 from Chairman William C. Schermerhorn, of the Board of Trustees. He said that he made himself responsible for the national science building, or for any other building or part of a building to cost that amount. F. Augustus Schermerhorn, one of the trustees, presented to the college the Townsend Library of National, State and Biographical War Records.

Crowded Schools and Health.

Henry Dwight Chapin, of New York a specialist in diseases of children, has written an article on the subject "Crowded Schools as Promoters of Disease." Some of his recommendations regarding sanitary school construction are valuable and timely. He says: "No public school building should be constructed that will accommodate more than 800 or 1,000 children, several buildings being put up, if necessary, to house larger numbers. * * * Experience shows that the health of children in our large schools can be best conserved by allowing fifteen square feet of floor space, 250 cubic feet of air space, and at least 1,800 cubic feet of fresh air to each pupil per hour. * * * No better rough incubator of disease germs could be devised than a small, closed, unventilated wardrobe on a stormy day, packed with the wet and soiled outer garments of children coming from all sorts and kinds of homes. * * * The life conditions of thousands of poor children in tenement houses are bad enough. It is at least the duty of our cities to see to it that their bad environment is not continued in the schools. What is needed is a more constant and regular sanitary oversight of the schools by experts in hygiene."

A Sensible School Board.

The Stevens Point (Wis.) School Board at a regular meeting adopted a decided innovation in prescribing the dress of graduates of the high school. The commissioners passed a resolution to the effect that the girls who graduated shall appear on commencement day in dresses of "plain white muslin," and the young men in "plain neat suits." The board considered this action necessary in view of the fact that well-to-do parents constantly vie with one another to see which can array their daughters in the most attractive commencement day finery.

Educational Notes.

Eight schools averaging $40,000 each are under construction in Buffalo.

The report of the Board of Education of Kansas City, Mo., shows an enrollment of 41,500 in the county during the past year. Actual expenses for the ensuing year are estimated at $224,000.

Prof. Nicholas Murray Butler, of Columbia College, chief editor of the Educational Review, has been chosen to preside over the meeting of the National Educational Association that is to meet in Denver.

W. C. Dohm, of Princeton, '90, recently deceased, was a noted athlete, and left numerous trophies, including twenty-five heavy gold medals, eight silver cups and a large number of smaller prizes. His widow has presented the entire collection to the college.

The University of Notre Dame at South Bend, Ind., has sent out handsome invitations to participate in the golden jubilee exercises. The event will be notable in the history of the college and will doubtless bring together many of the old graduates. In addition to the usual graduating exercises, addresses will be delivered by Governor Matthews of Indiana, Archbishop John Ireland of St. Paul, Archbishop William Henry Elder of Cincinnati, Bishop Rademacher of Fort Wayne, Bishop John Lancaster Spalding of Peoria, and Rev. Nathan J. Mooney of Chicago.

The school savings bank system introduced in a number of school districts of Pennsylvania as an experiment in education six years ago, has ceased in its functions as an experiment and become, according to the Philadelphia Times, an excellent feature of the common curriculum, not so much as a study, but as a training into methods of economy, self-denial, and as a provision for the future. The most notable example is in Chester and the contiguous districts of South Chester, Upland, Eddystone, and Marcus Hook. The April report shows that the pupils in the schools of Chester have the handsome sum of $33,075 to their credit, and those of South Chester $6,858. The aggregate amount for the five sections is $42,251. As an object lesson in finance in which boys and girls have a practical, individual share, this is a very attractive example.

Sulphuric Acid.

Sulphuric acid is formed by oxidizing sulphurous acid by atmospheric oxygen, with the aid of nitric-oxide gas. Sulphur ore iron pyrites is burned in a furnace, the gas given off being led into a leaden chamber, to which steam and air are admitted. At the back of the furnace is a small vessel containing sodium nitrate and sulphuric acid, which generate nitric acid. This nitric acid is decomposed by the sulphurous acid in the gas of the burning sulphur and becomes nitric oxide, which acts as a carrier of oxygen, and so oxidizes the sulphurous acid into sulphuric acid. This, of course, is only a bare outline of the process; you must go to a chemistry for the details. To get rid of the sulphur, iron ore is roasted in a kiln into which superheated steam is admitted at intervals; surphuretted hydrogen is formed, which passes off, leaving the iron free. Copper is treated in very much the same way. It is calcined in a furnace for about twenty-four hours, being stirred up every hour so that the heat may be felt by all parts of the ore. The treatment of metals in the ore is described in many important works. If you are going into the smelting business, you should read these books and visit the best furnaces to learn the operations.

Bound to Punish Him.

One evening, Colley Cibber, by missing his cue and giving a message at the wrong moment, spoiled one of Betterton's best scenes. So soon as he passed the wings, Betterton, in a rage, said to the prompter: "Forfeit, Master Colley." "Can't be done," replied the prompter; "Master Colley has no salary." "Well, then, put him down for ten shillings a week," cried the enraged manager, "and forfeit him five!"

GROVER'S REVEREND BROTHER.

Refused to Resign, and the Presbytery Sustained Him.

The recent differences between the pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Chaumont, Jefferson County, N. Y., and members of his congregation caused considerable comment throughout the United States, for the reason that the pastor is Rev. William N. Cleveland, brother of the President, and that politics was alleged to be the cause of the trouble. A number of the members of the church asked Mr. Cleveland to resign, but he refused to do so upon the ground that the majority of the congregation desired him to remain. The Presbytery was appealed to, and its verdict continues Mr. Cleveland in his pastorate.

REV. CLEVELAND.

Rev. William N. Cleveland was born in Willimantic, Conn., April 7, 1832, and was one of nine children. William is five years older than Grover, and was considered the most promising of the four boys by Cleveland pere, who said that the brightest boy should go to college, and William was the boy who went. He was a conscientious student, and at the early age of 19 years was graduated from Hamilton College in the class of '51. He took a course of lectures at Union Theological Seminary, New York, and was principal of the School for the Blind in that city for five years. During this time he secured a position for Grover in the institution, and the future President served as clerk for a year or two.

After he was ordained Rev. Mr. Cleveland was called to the church in Southampton, L. I. He remained there four years and then conducted a classical school in Brooklyn, for five years. He was pastor of the Congregational Church in Eaton, N. Y., for eight years, rode a ten-mile circuit at Forestport, Oneida County, N. Y., for ten years, and during this time Grover was elected Mayor of Buffalo, Governor and President. From Forestport Mr. Cleveland removed to his present pastorate, where he has labored six years.

Like his brother, the pastor is very fond of fishing, and is often seen with his tackle hard at work in Chaumont bay. He has published several books and is ambitious to do even more than he has done in the literary world.

any size of pipe or nuts, and while the jaws hold firmly, they do not lock upon the pipe or crush it. Figure 1 shows the wrench in use on a pipe, and figure 2 on a nut. When used on pipes, the gripping point of the wrench is placed to the size of the pipe as marked on the side of the hook. When used upon nuts there is no possibility of slipping. Another decided advantage in the use of this wrench is that it may be sharpened on a grindstone or an emery wheel without taking it apart.

A Touching Sight.

In the western part of Massachuseets a man had a fine stock farm. But a few weeks ago a fire broke out in the barn and burned not only the building and the hay, but most of the animals also. After the fire the owner walked over the ruins. It was a sad sight to see the charred bodies of his fine Jersey cows and his high-spirited horses. But at the end of the barn he saw a sight which touched him more than the rest. There sat an old black hen. He wondered that she did not move her head to look at him as he came near, but he thought she must be asleep. He poked her with his cane, and to his surprise the wing he touched fell into ashes. Then he knew she had been burned to death. But out from under her wing came a faint peep, and pushing her aside with his cane the man found—what do you think?—ten little live yellow chickens. The poor hen had sacrificed her own life to save them. That sight touched the man more than anything else.—The Churchman.

Tea and Coffee in Hawaii.

Fine qualities of tea and coffee are being grown at present in Hawaii, and it is thought by experts that the islands will soon become an important source of supply. Both tea and coffee grow luxuriantly and both are being prepared for market by machinery instead of by hand. The tea is picked by a machine and rolled and packed without being touched by hand. It is believed that the use of efficient machinery will compensate for the low wages paid in China and other tea countries. Extensive drying-houses have been erected by the coffee planters and preparations are making for preparing a large crop for market this year.

Brain Foods.

Brain workers require the most concentrated and easily digested foods; they should eat fresh beef and mutton, fish, eggs—cooked in many forms, but never hard boiled nor fried—oysters, and all fresh green vegetables, especially cool, crisp salads, lettuce, chicory, tomatoes, watercress, etc., with mayonnaise, or French dressing. They should begin the day with fruit, and make it form the principal part of luncheon; and be very sparing in their use of cereals, eschewing entirely white bread and oatmeal.

It is nature for a woman to think that some ugly man is good-looking.

A Case of the Ruling Passion.

An old lady named Margaret Thompson, who died about a century ago, was a noted snuff taker, and was evidently determined to go to her grave with a liberal accompaniment of the fragrant dust. She instructed that her body, after it had been placed in the coffin, should be covered with Scotch snuff and the will went on to say:

"Six men to be my bearers who are known to be the greatest snuff takers in the parish of St. James, Westminster. Instead of mourning, each to wear a snuff-colored beaver hat. Six maidens of my acquaintance (named) to bear my pall and to carry a box filled with the best Scotch snuff, to take for their refreshment as they go along. Before my corpse I desire the minister may be invited to walk and to take a certain quantity of the said snuff, not exceeding one pound. And I desire my old and faithful servant, Sarah Stuart, to walk before the corpse and to distribute every twenty yards a large handful of Scotch snuff on the ground and upon the crowd who may possibly follow me to my burial place. And I also desire that at least two bushels of the said snuff may be distributed at the door of my house in Boyle street.—London Tid-Bits.

An Amusing Illusion.

In the corner of a Philadelphia artist's studio is an ingenious arrangement of screens, upon one of which, over an aperture about the size of a face, is an inscription: "Likeness taken instantaneously." The innocent visitor peeps through the hole and is astonished to behold an exact likeness of himself as a hump-back jailer in a scarlet coat, opening a prison door. The secret of this effect is simple. The jailer is a life-sized painting strongly rendered. The place for the face is cut out and a mirror inserted, reflecting the features of the spectator. The conception of the amusing fantasy is not original. It was imported from the studio of Wiertz, the Belgian artist.

Are All Past Fifty.

The late Czar of Russia, who was past 49, was the junior of nine independent European sovereigns. Tired Women

Find in the blood purifying, building-up qualities of Hood's Sarsaparilla just what they need. Mrs. Isa Griggs, of Ennis, Texas, gives her experience below: "I suffered almost death with local troubles, which developed into a very serious affection and made a surgical operation necessary. I was completely broken down, had numerous boils, and when I commenced taking Hood's Sarsaparilla I weighed only 112 pounds. Now I weigh over 125 pounds and am in better health than for the past fifteen years. Formerly I was covered with eruptions; now my skin is clear. I can truly say has no equal for poor run-down women. Every one remarks about how well I am looking." MRS. ISA GRIGGS.

A Happy Woman.

At last I am a well and happy woman again: thanks to McElree's Wine of Cardui. I have suffered for four years from womb trouble of the most horrible kind. Twelv years ago I went to the San Antonio Hospital where they performed an operation, but it left me in a worse state than ever. I went to Dr. Kingeley and Dr. D. Y. Young, but they gave me little relief. After spending $125.00 I was not able to leave my bed, and most of the time suffered pains to equal a thousand deaths. On the 10th of last October my friend Mrs. Stevens advised me to try McElree's Wine of Cardui. The first bottle did me good, and I got more, and to-day I am a new woman; am able to do all my cooking and house-work. I am running a boarding-house and doing all the work myself. I still use the Wine, and always keep it in the house—it saved my life.

PROSPECTIVE MOTHERS

and those soon to become mothers, should know that Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription robs childbirth of its tortures and terrors, as well as of its dangers to both mother and child, by aiding nature in preparing the system for parturition. Thereby "labor" and the period of confinement are greatly shortened. It also promotes the secretion of an abundance of nourishment for the child.

MRS. DORA A. GUTHRIE, of Oakley, Overton Co., Tenn., writes: "When I began taking Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription, I was not able to stand on my feet without suffering almost death. Now I do all my housework, washing, cooking, sewing and everything for my family of eight. I am stouter now than I have been in six years. Your 'Favorite Prescription' is the best to take before confinement, or at least it proved so with me. I never suffered so little with any of my children as I did with my last."

If you only knew how many women, every day, are making up their minds that the old, wearing, tearing, tiresome, way of washing doesn't pay!

It's growing bigger than ever—the success of Pearline; though it has to fight not only against all kinds of poor imitations, but against a sort of superstition that anything which can save so much labor must be harmful in some way.

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you, "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled; if your grocer sends you an imitation, be honest—send it back. 490 JAMES PYLE, New York.

OUR JOURNEY AROUND THE WORLD.

Rev. Francis E. Clark's New Book

This highly instructive and splendidly illustrated volume is a record of a recent journey around the world, by Rev. Francis E. Clark, D. D., President of the United Societies of Christian Endeavor, and his wife. Throughout the long journey, which occupied more than a year, and covered nearly fifty thousand miles by sea and land, they enjoyed rare opportunities for observation and study. It is one of the most valuable books ever issued by the American press.

The reader is personally conducted through Australia, India, China, Japan, Egypt, Palestine, Turkey, and many other lands. We see these countries through American eyes, and obtain a perfectly clear view of them and their people, supplemented by two hundred and twenty illustrations from photographs, most of which were taken by Dr. Clark himself; for he carried a complete photographic outfit with him.

Dr. Clark was one of the last Americans to travel through China and Japan before the war between these countries was begun. In this rare volume he gives us the latest and best insight into the daily life of a Chinaman in his own country; his favorite food and odd dishes; opium fiends and their ways; the singular rites witnessed in the temples; the public execution of criminals; Chinese farms and farming; the seamy side of Chinese life Japanese acrobats and their wonderful performances; Japanese life, queer customs, art, wonderful skill, etc; the burning ghats of India, where the bodies of the dead are consumed on huge piles of wood (a ceremony Dr. Clark witnessed); the Towers of Silence where the dead are exposed to be devoured by thousands of waiting vultures that constantly sit on the walls; wonderful native jugglers, fearless snake charmers and fakirs—these are but a few of hundreds of interesting topics presented.

Their route led across the land that Joseph gave to his father and brethren; past the very fields where the Israelites made bricks without straw, and along the highways where once rolled the chariots of the Pharaohs. The story of the discovery of the mummy of the Pharaoh who oppressed the children of Israel, is wonderfully interesting. It was found among those of forty other mummies of kings, queens, and princes in the royal mortuary chamber in the Theban Hills, and the indentification of Pharaoh is complete. Illustrations from photographs show where the mummy was found, and others give full length, profile, and front views of this ancient king who was contemporary with Moses and reigned in Bible times, thus enabling all to see "just how Pharaoh looked."

A journey was made of hundreds of miles in an old spring wagon across Turkey and Armenia, through an unknown country, infested by robbers and hostile natives; the scene of the late horrible massacres of Armenians by Turks and Khurds. Dr. Clark was the last Christian to travel across these countries before these terrible massacres were perpetrated. The story of this perilous trip is full of thrilling interest and exciting adventures.

Mrs. Clark accompanied her husband everywhere. She draws a vivid picture of life in far-off lands, "As seen through a Woman Eyes." Her narrative is packed with anecdotes, incidents, and personal experiences. Her story of the long journey in the wagon is highly entertaining, its privations and perils, especially to a woman, being many. She was the only woman in the party, which consisted of herself and seven men.

Dr. Clark's name is a familiar household word, and his fame as President of the United Societies of Christian Endeavor, with its two and one half million members, has extended to every corner of the world. Many distinguished persons urged him to write this book. They knew that he had acquired this in remarkable journey a wealth of material which, with his unique collection of photographs, would make one of the most valuable books of the day.

It contains steel-plate portraits of Dr. Clark and of his wife, from recent photograph; a large map, exhibiting the whole world at a single glance, showing the author's journey from the beginning to the end, and 220 fine illustrations, from photographs from life, These must be seen to be appreciated.

We do not know when 640 pages have given us more genuine pleasure. If we speak warmly of the book, it is because richly deserves it. It is sold only by agents, and is meeting with an enormous sale. Agents who introduce a first-class work like this ought to be cordially welcomed. We believe the best way to keep out poor books is by introducing good ones, and a better one than this has never been brought to our notice. Put it into your homes. It will be read over and over again by old and young, with pleasure and lasting profit.

The work is published by the old and well-known firm of A. D. Worthington & Co., Hartford, Conn., whose imprint is a sufficient guarantee of the excellence of the volume.

OBITUARY.

William Lewis, son of Lemon E. and Sarah A. Hine, was born Dec. 3, 1893, and died May 23, 1895, at the age of 1 year 5 months 20 days.

A precious one from us has gone
A voice we loved is stilled
A place is vacant in our home
Which never can be filled.

The funeral services were held at the residence of its grand-parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Ringer, on Sunday, May 26, services being conducted by Rev. Burket.

Mr. Hine and wife and Mr. and Mrs. Ringer wish to thank the friends and neighbors for their kindness and assistance in this their hour of affliction and also to the choir for their assistance at the services.

HEART DISEASE!

Fluttering, No Appetite, Could Not Sleep, Wind on Stomach.

"For a long time I had a terrible pain at my heart, which fluttered almost incessantly. I had no appetite and could not sleep. I would be compelled to sit up in bed and belch gas from my stomach until I thought that every minute would be my last. There was a feeling of oppression about my heart, and I was afraid to draw a full breath. I could not sweep a room without resting. My husband induced me to try and am happy to say it has cured me. I now have a splendid appetite and sleep well. Its effect was truly marvelous."

MRS. HARRY E. STARR, Pottsville, Pa.

Dr. Miles' Heart Cure is sold on a positive guarantee that the first bottle will benefit. All druggists sell it at $1, 6 bottles for $5, or it will be sent, prepaid, on receipt of price by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

A Friend's Advice.

Some four or five years ago J. A. Goodyear, a young man full of life and vigor, left the old farm in Calhoun county, for the more active life in the city. Drifting into the telegraph business, he secured a position on the C. & N. W. railroad, at Republic, Mich. In addition to his duties as operator, he was required to sell tickets, baggage and make himself generally useful. Between the exacting officials on the one side and the consistent public on the other, he was worked and worried to such an extent that his health gave out and one day he was carried to his home, after having a severe nervous spasm; he grew from bad to worse until he had to relinquish his position, a physical wreck.

The doctor could not cure him and told him so, but advised him to go to Ann Arbor and place himself in charge of that world wide institution of learning, which he did. He continued with their treatment constantly and faithfully for four long years, receiving little, if any, benefit. While in this condition, a friend gave him a bottle of Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer, with an urgent request to use it. Not wishing to offend his friend, he promised to do so, but did not, because, as he argued with himself, "What is the use of taking that 'stuff' if the most learned nerve specialists in the world can not cure me?" But as time passed he would occasionally think of the neglected bottle of medicine given him and his promise to use it. One day he picked it up and mechanically pulled the cork, measured out a dose and took it; a change seemed to come over him, his nervousness abated, his mind became clear and he thought he felt something of his old time vigor. He continued taking the Vitalizer until he was able to sit up, then to walk a few steps; the sluggish blood in his veins became active, color returned to his flesh and he felt the need of more food. He soon improved so that he sought and became engaged in light labor and earned the first dollar in nearly two years; hope attained its long vacated position in his brain and his friends rejoiced at the wonderful change. Mr. Goodyear is now leading a thoroughly active and successful life which he says he is proud to attribute to Er. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer, the greatest nerve builder ever yroduced for nervous prostration, spasms, fits, sleeplessness, menial depression, exhausted vitality, nespondency, sexual and general debility. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

BUTLER.

The large barn on the John Hablawetz's farm four miles south of Butler, burned last Thursday evening, cause unknown, entailing a loss of $400 or more. Insured in the DeKalb Mutual.

Decoration services were very fittingly observed in Butler. The town was crowded, and much good feeling prevailed. No discord was noticed, except some very sharp criticisms upon the memorial sermon preached by Rev. Commings, of U. B. church. Bro. Commings is the son of a southern slaveholder, and grew up under its blightning influence. Hence we should not be surprised if he sees the changing events of the last thirty years in a very different light than we do.

SAY : :

HOW MUCH DO YOU OWE?

Who holds your mortgage? How much interest are you paying? Do you owe a building loan association anything? If you do, how much interest are you paying them? Unless you are better posted than the majority of people who have such loans, you cannot tell. You think you are paying 6 per cent. Do you know (of course not) that you are paying at least 12 per cent. If you think not, just figure it out yourself. Now then, are you not paying 6 per cent interest and 6 per cent premium? Certainly. Well now don't you know that premium and interest are the same thing—its all interest. Can you afford to pay 12 per cent interest to a loan association when even your banks only charge 8 per cent and you think they are charging too much, and when do you expect to have your loan canceled or paid off in full? You have been told 72 or 78 months. Now then, we undertake to say that it will take you 100 months, if you will oall on us we will show you so you will be satisfied that we are right. Now then, we are prepared to loan you money on monthly installment plan for 8 per cent, we charge you no membership fee and you do not have to make three or more payments in advance so that if on account of insufficient security or bad title your loan is rejected you will not lose one cent. You pay nothing unless your loan is granted. We are making farm loans at from 3 to 5 per cent with privilege of partial payments.

ANOTHER THING!

There is scarcely a day but what there is some traveling agent for some building loan association in Auburn soliciting business, selling stock upon which they charge yon a membership fee of from 50 cents to $1.00 per share, which amount goes to the agent and you never get back this money thrown away. If you will call on us we will take your application for all the stock you want in the BEST (we can prove it) building loan association in the state the INDIANA MUTUAL OF INDIANAPOLIS, and charge you No MEMBERSHIP FEE AT ALL. This is certainly fair. If you have any investment stock in any association just write them a letter and ask them the withdrawal value of same, their reply will probably open your eyes. What would you say if you would deposit $8.00 per month in your bank for one year and wanted to withdraw the same and they would offer to pay you only about $80? The bank would only have to do this in one case to be compelled to retire from business. Now you pay ten dollars membership fee and 8 dollars for 12 months making 108 dollars, you lose the 10 dollars membership fee and 10 cents per share each month for expenses, making 12 dollars, or a total of 22 dollars loss upon which you would receive 6 per cent interest for average time on 96 dollars, making 2 dollars and 88 cts. from 22 dollars would leave you a loser of 19 dollars and 12 cents. In our association your stock is worth all you have paid in, with its interest added, so that upon withdrawal you do not get less than you paid. We want the people of Auburn to become familiar with this matter, and would like to have any that are interested to call and talk with us, we can give you some pointers.

We are still in the Real Estate, Insurance and R. R. Ticket business.

FIRE BELL!

Clangclangclang went the fire bell this forenoon and everybody started out. Smoke was rolling in heavy clouds up over the National Bank block and everyone said the Central House was on fire. But it proved to be Dr. Fitch's horse barn just beyond, on Cedar street next east of Mrs. Abright's. Dr. Fitch was over at Garrett. It was all ablaze in the upper story when the crowd got there, and a big pile of hay in the loft that was roaring and blazing at a great rate. The engine stopped at the cistern on the north side of the National Bank while the hose was carried around on Main street and then east to the barn. The horses pulling the hose were stopped at the fire and the ladder wagon detached from the hose cart. They then started east past the fire, then turned north on Cedar street, and when in front of Richie's carriage factory were stopped and had to be taken back west past the fire and onto Main street then north to the engine going nearly around the two blocks. This took time and when water was thrown it was plain that the upper part of the barn, at least, would be destroyed. But they might yet save the adjoining buildings. However the fire was soon diminished and just when they thought the lower part of the Fitch building could be saved and the whole thing coming under control, a joint of hose way up near the engine, burst from the great presure at that point. This gave the flames a chance for a new start, and by the time the detective joint was taken out the fire had got started again and Mrs. Abright' barn next west was blazing at the end next the burning barn. Men had been keeping the roof of it and the wood house that connected and almost reached the dwelling, covered with wet carpet and were dashing water over it As soon as the firemen got at work again they stopped the spread of flames though the Fitch building was destroyed and but little left of Mrs. Abright's barn. In this Billy Edgington kept his horse and had a load of hay recently put in, and this made it hard to stop. There were no horses injured in either building. Dr. Fitch had in his a sleigh, a lot of hay, corn, etc, and Treasurer Fair also kept his horse there. It was Mr, Fair's son Wells who discovered the fire. He was near Fitch's house, washing his father's buggy when he heard Fitch's little son yelling and crying in the barn loft. He hurried in to see what was the trouble and as he entered the barn caught sight of the frightened lad coming down the stairs. As he saw young Fair started back up stairs and the latter seeing there was a blaze in the loft ran up after the lad and managed to catch hold of one leg and so pulled him back. This probably saved the boy's life, for he was so badly frightened he might have perished in the blazing hay. Young Fair then called Mrs. Fitch and she gave in the alarm. It is supposed the little boy was playing in the loft and might have had some matches although Dr. Fitch had always been careful to keep them out of his reach. Both buildings carried insurance, Dr. Fitch's was in Geo. Lanning's Agency and had $400 on building and $150 on contents. The loss is about $1,000. Mrs. Abright's barn was insured in Walter Hartman's Agency.

Moonlight Century

Mr. Cobb covered the moonlight century course out of Ft. Wayne on the 7th inst in the remarkably fast time of 8 hours, 16 minutes. He roade a Chainless wheel and was accompanied by Messrs Alters and Geaberding of the Ft. Wayne C. C. Mr. Alters is a track man, although he does considerabe road riding.

Mr. Cobb who is Centurian for this district reports much enthusiasm in C. R. C. matters not only in Ft. Wayne but all about us and the season promises a large increase of membership in the Century Road Club of America.

A run will be called for July or August to take place by Moonlight, Climatic conditions permitting, leaving Ft Wayne 6 p. m. standard time. The run would be called to start from Auburn were the roads suitable for such a run.

SUIT BROUGHT

A suit was brought in Hancock county last week to test the constitutionality of the new County Superintendent law. The Court decided the law unconstitutional and it was immediately appealed to the Supreme Court. The suit was begun against the Auditor who refused to acknowled the election of Quitman Jackson as noted in the COURIER last week. Senators Kern and Stewart of Indianapolis are the attorneys for the Superintendent while Felts and Felts and Jackson of Greenfield represent the defense. The counsel on both sides are said to be very able men. It hoped that by starting the case at once it will be decided before Sept 1. The Supreme court is now in session.

SCARED!!!

Will McComb, who drives Charlie Gulich's team, had a big scare last Tuesday, in the woods on James Farver's place. He drove in there to get a load of wood, and while loading up claims he saw three strange animals, that according to his description, may have been lynxes. They ran around him a time or two, and he got ready to defend himself when the horses became too scared to stay and he managed to keep them in the track till he got out. Those who saw the horses say they seemed very much excited. But there are many who do not believe any strange animals were seen.

EGGS BROKEN.

Eggs are proverbial for the ease grace and agility with which they break, giving up the oval form of their first construction to resume a form of utter namelessness instead. This was exemplified this morning when Mrs. H. J. Luce had been in town a few minutes. She had a basket of nice eggs and went up into Dr Nusbaum's office. She somehow slipped and she and the eggs came down in a confused bundle. Like the battle of Hohenlinden it was a case of

"I, sir, rolling rapidly."

But the eggs wouldn't roll; they couldn't roll. They were no longer of a shape to be easily roled. The lady was greatly mussed up, her shoulder badly bruised and there was no denying the fact that her hat was not on straight. But fortunately her injuries were not serious.

TOO MEAN!

The way some one served old Mrs. Hutson was too mean for anything. She had lost her small sachel in which she carries the little stock of goods she sells, and which helps her to live It was advertised for her in the COURIER and yet no one brought it back in the usual way. But this morning she found it hanging on her gate. The person who had had it evidently went through it like a cyclone, for everything had been taken out and more or less mussed up, and many of the cards of buttons had been torn, in two. A part of the various articles had been evidently stolen out leaving her little stock greatly reduced. She says she is thankful to get back that much, but would have been more thankful had the finder been honest enough to bring it all back instead of a part of it. A man that would steal the little stock of a worthy but poor old lady like her is too mean to live.

WHEAT.

If all reports are true DeKalb county farmers are fortunate in living in about the most favored part of the state. We have not heard of a county in which the wheat has as good a prospect as in ours.

T. H. Sprott speaks of this from a recent observation. In returning Thursday from Albany, coming up the Wabash road, he took pains to observe the growing wheat, as its bad condition attracted attention. He counted in all, 135 fields, and of these about 35 would probably be a half crop. The other fields he thought would probably yield from 5 to 7 bushels to the acre. Some of the fields were being pastured. Grass was about ruined, but corn was good. He thinks they have not had as much rain as we have.

FAILED TO RESPOND.

Since the report has been circulated that Grover Cleveland had given $500 to an Indiana family who were so fortunate as to have twins born to them he has been receiving numerous letters containing applications for money on that score. The following is a sample we clip from an exchange: Mr. President Cleveland—Dear Sir: I see you are giving $500 for twins. Please send me $100 right away, for I am going to get married this week to a girl that is a twin. I come from twin getting stock, so you will see that there is no risk to run, and when my wife has twins I will draw on you for the balance. I need the money to start to housekeeping with. I am in good health and so is the girl I am going to marry. I have always been a Democrat. I voted for you the first time and will vote for you again and name the twins after you. Don't disappoint me, for I may have to get married sooner.

In a Distressing Plight

Must be the great host who have lost nerve and brain power, are listless by day and sleepless by night, with distressing aches and pains, shattered nerves, lassitude, nerve prostration and debility, mental depression, and the thousand and one other nerve troubles to which so many are subject. But a specific has been found, the "talk of Europe" just now introduced in America by the Hall Medicine Co., Toledo, O., and for sale by druggists generally. Will cure the most obstinate, headache in an hour. It is called Vitaline and Nervetone. Fischler & Son sell it. 23 24

A Summer Campaign.

Strange, that a feller's got to fight from early spring to fall,
A-killin' bugs an' worms, an' things, er else raise nothin' 'tall;
Thi frost was hardly gone this spring, 'er sap had ceased to boil,
Afore I was after th' worms' nests a-burnin' 'em out wite oil.
The next that came was 'tater bugs, the Colorada kind,
I knocked 'em off an' stomped on 'em till I was almost blind;
I greened 'em an' I purpled 'em till I could see no more,
Then went a-huntin' currant worms by the dozen an' the score.
The raddishes an' turnips next, both come in for their share.
For maggots was a-eating' 'em; it almost made me swear,
But I went for them air maggots an' knocked 'em out with drugs,
An' then I stopped an' spent a day on pesky striped hugs
That was eatin' up my cucumbers an' melon plants an' such.
But I left 'em for to go an' give the cabbage worms a touch.
The corn field with cut worms an' grubs next called my best attention.
An' I dug 'em out an' killed 'em, too, too-numerous to mention.
Then I went an' sprayed my apple trees with paris green an brine
An daplied the Bordeaux mixture to each young an' growin' vine.
The 'tater blight was on my patch an' I het to tend to that,
An' hustle round an' smash enough squash bugs to fill my hat.
The gapes hit on my chickens as soon as they were born,
The tarnal grasshoppers have et the silk all off my corn.
In short, I've spent the summer a fightin' worms an' slugs.
An' grasshoppers an' crickets, an' moths, an' flies, an' bugs.
I've met the pests an' fit 'em an' put 'em all to rout.
An' now I set an' wonder that so little knocks 'em out.—Ex.

LOST LETTER.

The COURIER received a letter from a former Auburn man, under strange circumstances,

H. L. Sheets, brother to Mart Sheets, several years ago moved to from here to Kansas, and later on went from there to California. Last year, when John Boots and A. J. Ralston went to the "Coast," they called on Mr. Sheets, and while there, he sent to the COURIER a subscription for one year. A short time ago, his time being out, he bought a postal order, sealed it in a letter, put on a stamp, and before he got to the postoffice at his home, Los Angeles, he lost it. On Monday of this week we received a letter from that place, bearing the printed return card of "City Brick Works, Los Angeles, Calif." This envelope enclosed another that had been opened at the end, as if the contents had been examined and then put back. The gentleman who found this lost letter had written on the outside of the envelop, a statement as to his finding it, and added that it had already been opened, and seeing that it contained a letter to the editor of this paper, and not knowing Mr. Sheets, concluded to send it here. It came safe, and had in it, undisturbed, the postal note sent by Mr. Sheets, and the letter. It looks as if, after Mr. Sheets had dropped the letter, someone had found it, and supposing it contained money, had torn it open, but as it had nothing but the postal order, and as no one but the proper person could get that cashed, he thought best to put it back into the envelop. That would account for finding it after it had been opened. But it was a queer chance that brought the letter safe through at last.

It May Do as Much for You.

Mr. Fred Miller, of Irving, Ill, writes that he had a severe kidney trouble for many years, with severe pains in his back, and also that his bladder was affected. He tried many so called kidney cures but without any good result. About a year ago he began the use of Electric Bitters and found relief at once. Electric Bitters is especially adapted to the cure of all kidney and liver troubles and often gives almost instant relief. One trial will prove our statement. Price only 50 cents for large bottles at Robbins & McCord's drug store. 6

GATHERED FROM ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

A Runaway Engine at Logansport Causes a Bad Smash-Up and Loss of Life—A Mysterious Burglary—The Corn Crop in the West Saved—A Million Dollar Fire.

A Big Haul.

Lovell (Me.) special: The fact has just become known that the grocery store of J. A. Hutchins was entered by burglars and $50,000 in cash, stocks, notes, and bonds were stolen. The securities were kept in a small tin box in the safe in Mr. Hutchins' store. The burglary was the most mysterious ever committed in Maine. The safe was not blown open, but some one who knew the combination opened it, and after robbing the box, locked it again. There is nothing by which the burglars can be traced. Mr. Hutchins has kept the burglary a secret in the hope of locating the thieves.

A Hunter Falls Out of a Tree.

Barson J. Galbraith, of Columbus, Ind., well-known as a fox hunter and fisherman, climbed a tree alongside of Clifty Creek and perched upon the limbs, gun in hand, waiting for a shot at bass in the stream. While in the tree he was attacked with a fit of epilepsy and fell into the water, a distance of 22 feet, striking his head against a rock. Two boys passing along dragged him out, or else he would have drowned. He sustained injuries which will prove fatal. He is 56 years old.

Caused Grandma's Death.

A runaway accident, resulting in the death of Mrs. M. H. Kimmel, occurred at Wabash, Ind. The lady was sitting in a buggy in front of the residence of her son, when her little granddaughter raised a parasol, frightening the horse. The animal plunged down the steep Huntington Hill street, upsetting the vehicle. Mrs. Kimmel was thrown out, striking a barn, and receiving injuries causing death a short time afterward. Deceased was 60 years old.

He Has a Bar'l.

Salt Lake (Utah) special: A deep-rooted movement is on foot among the Democrats of Idaho and Montana to nominate W. A. Clark, the millionaire mining man of Butte, Mont., for the Vice Presidency at the next Democratic national convention. The scheme is to claim the Vice Presidency for the West by virtue of the strength the silver men hope to have in the convention. The move contemplates organization of all Western States in the interest of Clark.

A Collision at Logansport.

An Indianapolis division passenger engine ran away in the Pan-handle yards at Logansport, Ind., while no one was aboard. To save her running into a passenger train Switchman Shaffer threw the engine into a siding. Here the runaway collided with a switch engine, killing the engineer of the latter, Fred Shultz, instantly, and badly injuring Pat Gray, fireman, who will recover. Shultz was about 50 years old, and leaves a wife and married daughter.

Corn Crop Saved.

Dispatches from Olathe, Fort Scott, Wichita, and Caldwell, Kansas, Hennessy and Perry, Oklahoma, report a heavy twenty-four hours rain which will be the saving of the corn crop. Small grain was beyond help, but farmers are now hopeful of raising a good crop of corn, which is the only salvation for southern Kansas and Oklahoma. The rain area includes all the Cherokee Strip and northern Texas and western Kansas beyond Sterling.

To Rescue Lieutenant Peary.

St. John's (N. F.) special: The whaleboat Kite has been chartered to carry an expedition of 10 persons to Greenland to rescue Lieutenant Peary, the Arctic explorer. Emile Diebitsch, Peary's brother-in-law, will have charge of the party. Mrs. Peary will not accompany the party, but will await the return of her husband at St. John's. The Kite is to start about the middle of next month.

Aiding the Chase Fund.

Department Commander Shively, of the G. A. R., has issued a circular letter to the G. A. R. of Indiana to respond without delay to the call for contributions to the burial fund of ex-Governor Chase. The order voluntarily assumed the responsibility of paying these expenses, and many posts have already sent in their contributions, but others have neglected it.

Gored to Death by a Bull.

Henry Newcomb, a prosperous farmer in Prince George County, Virginia, went into a field the other morning where he had a Jersey bull. The animal, without cause, rushed upon the man and gored him to death, in sight of Newcomb's wife and two children, who were powerless to render any assistance.

A Million Dollar Fire.

Fire broke out in the basement of Peter Young's furniture store on Ninety-second street, Chicago, and before the flames were under control they had swept the entire block of that street between Houston and Commercial avenues. The buildings were for the most part small structures. Loss $1,000,000.

Fell to His Death.

At Portsmouth, Ohio, A. E. Burckfield, a lineman working for the street railway company, fell from the top of a trolley pole and broke his neck, dying instantly. Burckfield was a young man about 28 years old. Nothing is known about him, except the fact that he came from Wellston, Ohio.

Ice Cream Fatal.

George Barrows, a prominent lumber man of Brownsburg, Ind., was eating ice cream when he was convulsed with intense pain. After 24 hours of great suffering he died.

Poisoned Fish.

Thomas Hine and his wife and three children, living at Randolph, near Akron, Ohio, ate fish for supper. Next morning Mrs. Hine died in agony, and the three children are so ill that their lives are despaired of. It is believed that the fish was poisoned.

Treasurer Taylor Gives Up.

Pierre (S. D.) special: It is the belief of those best informed that W. W. Taylor will be in Pierre soon. He will come voluntarily and with friends.

Clavijo Put to Death.

Madrid special: Captain Clavijo, who shot and seriously wounded Captain General Prima Rivera, after the latter had refused him the hand of his daughter, was shot at 8 o'clock Thursday morning. The captain, who was tried by court martial and sentenced to death, displayed marvelous fortitude and courage to the last moment. The soldiers who did the firing were compelled to fire three times. At the first fire Captain Clavijo fell with three bullets in his head, but was still alive. A soldier fired a shot under the chin, but still he moved, and finally, a third shot was fired into his heart. The scene of horror created considerable excitement among the soldiers.

IN HAPPY HOLLOW.

A Shocking Railroad Wreck in Arkansas.

☐ Little Rock special: News of a horrible wreck on a short line railroad, operated by the Little Bay Lumber Company, in Ouachata County, has been received here. It occurred near Mrs. Steelman's place, at what is known as "Happy Hollow." The train was running at a rapid rate down the grade when the engine left the track, causing the whole train, loaded with logs, to be dumped into a conglomerated mass, men, boys, engine, cars, and logs, all in a pile. The crash was terrible. Those who escaped injury gave the alarm as soon as possible, and in an exceedingly short time neighbors and friends were gathering in from all directions to assist in rendering the injured as comfortable as possible. The following is a list of the killed and wounded:

Melvin Rutherford, killed instantly. He was pinioned between logs with his head resting on John Catheris' bosom, who says that Rutherford never breathed after the crash.

Frank Sloan, leg crushed and severe wounds about the head and back, from which he died.

Joe Arsiman, engineer, badly scalded and scalped and severe scalp wound; died.

John Chambers, right leg broken and knee badly bruised.

Ed. Hopkins, badly scalded.

☐ Jim Wagoner, arm broken.

Jack Cathey, slightly bruised and badly shaken up.

A stranger, whose name was given as Dealton, badly cut, bruised about head and face, and two ribs broken.

Kinch McDonald, Arthur King, and Hally Williams narrowly escaped with their lives, King and Jack Cathy being thrown clear over the engine, astride a log, alighting safely.

IT IS FIXED.

Attorney General Olney is Made Secretary of State.

The President has announced the following appointments: Secretary of State, Richard J. Olney of Massachusetts; Attorney General, Judson Harmon of Cincinnati, Ohio.

A special from Cincinnati says: Judge Judson Harmon, chosen Attorney General, is the senior member of the firm of Harmon, Colston, Goldsmith & Hoadley, who probably have the most lucrative law practice in Cincinnati. He is one of the "young men" of the city, though born February 3, 1846. He is regarded by the bench and bar of Hamilton County as an able, broad, and learned man, whose appointment is taken by all as a compliment to the State and bar, as well as being a fit recognition of the worth of one of the soundest lawyers in the State.

Judge Harmon is a consistent civil service reformer and has successfully avoided entangling political alliances. He is a close friend of ex-Governor Campbell, but is likewise a friend of those who heretofore fought Campbell. Prior to 1872 he was not a Democrat, but entered the party as a supporter of Greeley.

A CLOUD BURST

Causes a Disastrous Flood in Germany.

Stutgart special: There was a tremendous cloud burst over the Wurtemburg portion of the Black Forest district, causing great destruction of property. The downfall of water caused the river Eyach to rise, and many houses at Balingen, Frommern, Dirrwangen, and Lanfen were swept away. Many persons are missing, and it is feared they were drowned in the flood. Three persons were drowned at Ballingen, seven were killed at Frommern and nine persons are missing. At Lanfen, ten persons were killed.

The Black Forest is a mountainous region of southwestern Germany in the grand duchy of Baden and the west of Wurtemberg, separating the basins of the Rhine and Neck. In many places it is 3,700 feet above the sea, and the Feldberg, 4,675 feet high, is the loftiest mountain in western Germany. The Danube, Neckar Kinsig, Murge, Elthz and other rivers arise in this region. The inhabitants are mainly engaged in rearing live stock, trading in timber and manufacturing wooden clocks, toys, and woolen fabrics.

CARSON CITY MYSTERY

Solved by the Mistress of One of the Guilty Employes.

Carson (Nev.) special: The $80,000 in gold bars stolen from the Carson mint has been recovered in a most unexpected way. The government officials dug up the treasure in the woodshed of William Pickler, an employe in the melter's and refiner's department, who had not even been suspected. Pickler was betrayed by a woman with whom he had been living and whom he had abused. She came to the officers and told that she would disclose the hiding place of the missing bullion. True to her promise she gave minute directions for digging in one corner of Pickler's woodshed. There the bars of gold was unearthed, just as they had been stolen from the mint. The discovery bears out the case which the government experts had formulated against the employes in this department. If any one of the gang now turns State's evidence, the whole truth will come out.

FATAL WRECK.

Freight Train on the Philadelphia & Reading Smashed.

A freight and a coal train collided on the Reading railroad at Locustdale, near Ashland, Pa., whereby the engineer, fireman and front brakeman of the freight were killed and the two trains were so badly wrecked that it took several hours to clear the tracks sufficiently to permit trains to run through.

The dead are: Elwood Moyer, engineer; Elias Botts, conductor; William Klease, fireman. The wreck occurred on a heavy grade and at a sharp curve in the road and is one of the worst that has occurred there for many years. The body of Klease was recovered shortly after the wreck but the wrecking crews did not reach the bodies of Botts and Moyer until several hours after the accident. Both men were buried beneath tons of wreckage and their bodies were terribly mangled. It is thought that the freight train was running away when the crash came.

Coal Mines Threatened by Fire.

Serious forest fires are now raging in the northern part of Clay County, Indiana, and the southern part of Parke, caused by the railroad men burning old ties along the track. It is said that about 300 acres of fine timber has been consumed by the flames, while some residence property is threatened. A large number of men have been constantly at work fighting the fire. The shafts at the coal mines of the Superior Coal Company, the Isaac McIntosh Coal Company, the Swamp Angel mine and several others are threatened, and careful watch is being kept on them.

Negro Demons Hanged.

Lee Harris and Abe Mitchell, colored, murderers, highwaymen and thieves, were hanged in the jailyard at Birmingham, Ala., before 2,000 people, for the murder of Grocerymen Merriweather and Thornton. The bodies were turned over to a local undertaker, who purchased them several weeks back for $18 from the men themselves. Harris, after his conviction, confessed to several murders and other crimes in Alabama and several murders in South Carolina. Mitchell confessed only to the Merriweather killing. Neither was yet twenty-one years old.

Riot and Arson.

Shanghai special: Dispatches published here by the local press, received from the Island of Formosa, report great excitement at Taipeh Fu. The president of the republic has escaped from his yamen and the official buildings have been burned by rioters. The natives and the insurgents are said to be looting in all directions. Rioting is also reported to have taken places at Hobe. The foreigners in the Island of Formosa so far have not been molested.

Ill Luck Follows Them.

Thomas Powell, an engineer at Marsha's flouring mill, Winchester, Ohio, and whose family fate seems to follow, met with a probably fatal accident the other day. A farmer drove to the mill with a heavy load of corn. Powell assisted in unloading the corn when the team ran away, throwing him out. His left leg was broken, hip dislocated, and he was internally injured. Clark, another employe, was terribly cut and mashed, but may recover. Some years ago Powell was standing near his brother when an engine in a sawmill bursted, blowing his brother to pieces. Three other brothers have been killed in similar accidents.

Perils of Land and Sea.

A special from Victoria gives an account of the wreck of the schooner Kodiak, on Kodiak Island, also the loss of the schooner C. G. White, of San Francisco, near the same place. Ten of the crew of the White were lost. Many were frozen to death while lashed in the rigging, and others were drowned. The survivors crossed the mountains through the deep snow to Okyak, where medical attention was given them. Harry Harmson, F. A. Sweeney, A. Obron, Andrew Johnson, F. F. Rogers, and E. W. Ball all had their feet amputated to save their lives.

A Stove Trust.

Several gas stove manufacturers met at Toledo, recently, to talk over the organization of a stove trust that is designed to control the entire trade of the country. The manufacturers are very reticent. Among those present were William H. Emerson, Boston; George D. Becker, Chicago; F. L. Gordon, New Orleans; D. E. Cahn, Detroit; Stanhope Boal, Piqua, Ohio, and several others representing the largest factories in the world.

To Reduce Miners' Wages.

The block coal operators at Brazil, Ind., will make a 5-cent reduction in the miners' scale. This is in accordance with the agreement which was made May 1, in which was stipulated that in case the Ohio and Pennsylvania miners' wages were reduced the miners at Brazil would receive a 5-cent reduction, which would be the limit. The Brazil Block Coal company will close their No. 5 mine throwing 300 men out of employment.

Wind Hurls a Woman from a House.

Mrs. U. C. Deardorff, of Canal Dover, Ohio, stepped from an upstairs window onto the veranda to close the shutters while a storm was imminent, and a severe gust of wind threw her to the ground. Her left leg was broken in two places and an examination showed that she had concussion of the brain and spine, and cannot possibly recover. She has been unconscious since the accident.

Pay Back Income Tax.

Blanks are being printed by the Internal Revenue Bureau for the corporations and individuals that paid the income tax to fill in applying for a refund of the taxes paid. These blanks will be mailed to the taxpayers, and on receipt of a properly filled application for a repayment of the duties thus assessed the Internal Revenue Bureau will pay back the money.

A Dead Consul.

A special cablegram from Managua, Nicaragua, says: The American consul, Hiram Lott, died at Managua, Nicaragua, at 2 o'clock Saturday afternoon of dysentery. He was buried with military honors, the cabinet and foreign consuls attending in a body. His ailment lasted only a few days.

A Mystery.

The lifeless body of Chauncey F. Pickerell, a bullet wound in his head, was found in a field near Terre Haute, Ind., a pistol at his side. He was married last week to Miss Lizzie Baird. There are mysterious features, and it is not known whether the death was a murder or suicide.

Schnaubelt Fatally Hurt.

Tegucigalpa (Honduras,) Special: Fugitive Rudolph Schnaubelt, alias Rindskopf, the man who threw the bomb at the Chicago Haymarket riot, was fatally wounded in a fracas at Pinalaio Villa.

Will Fight in Dallas.

After all the talking, much of which was done for advertising purposes only, that Corbett and Fitzsimmons have been doing so long, it now looks as if the big fight was assured for Dallas, Texas.

Three Miners Killed.

Bismarck (Mo.) special: A portion of the Doe Run lead mine at Flat River has caved in, killing three men, Robert Penborty, Robert Labuyure, John Decrous.

A Tot's Death.

The 4-year-old child of Orla Finsler of Peru, Ind., died from burns received by having its clothing burned from its body while playing with matches.

Fatal Runaway.

At Washington, C. H., Ohio, armer James Tate's team ran away and Tate received injuries from which he will die.

A New Minister.

William R. Castle has been appointed Hawaiian minister at Washington, vice L. A. Thurston.

SILVER BABE IS BORN

ILLINOIS DEMOCRATS SPONSORS FOR THE CHILD.

Demand the 16 to 1 Ratio, and Ask the National Committee to Call a Currency Convention—Policy of the Administration Criticised.

Silver in the Saddle.

Springfield correspondence:

Illinois Democrats in convention declared unqualifiedly in favor of the free coinage of silver at a ratio of 16 to 1 with gold. This declaration was adopted without one dissenting voice from the 850 delegates who composed the convention. The delegates also went on record as being in favor of the holding of a national Democratic convention, to take action on the money question. John P. Hopkins, of Chicago; W. H. Hinrichsen, of Jacksonville; George W. Fithian, of Newton, and L. B. Parsons, of Flora, were named as delegates-at-large from this State to attend such convention if one shall be called by the properly constituted Democratic authorities.

By 10 o'clock in the morning the streets were thronged with silverites who had come from all parts of the State. Blue badges heralding the war cry of "16 to 1" were as numerous as snowflakes in December. Many delegations carried banners proclaiming their belief in free coinage of silver and altogether no small degree of enthusiasm prevailed. As early as 9 o'clock the different congressional delegations began holding caucuses in the rooms of the capitol building for the purpose of selecting committees on credentials, rules, permanent organization and resolutions. It was after 11 o'clock when the committees concluded their work and then a stampede was made to get desirable seats. The hall was arranged in regulation gala attire, bunting and flags being draped in reckless profusion. Over the entrance two immense flags were draped. The galleries were filled as soon as the doors were thrown open, a majority of the occupants being ladies.

W. H. HINRICHSEN.
The moving spirit of the convention.

The very first evidence of any enthusiasm by the delegates was when Mr. Hinrichsen walked to the platform. Then a few men near the center aisle clapped their hands. "Billy" O'Brien, of Chicago, jumped on a chair to see what was up. "That's Hinrichsen," he shouted. The Cook County delegation began to applaud, and kept it up until the contagion spread to the country members. Hinrichsen shook his curly head, but never slackened his pace until he reached the platform. When he took up the gavel the applause drowned the rapping which called the convention to order. This time the secretary bowed right and left. When the noise finally died down the invocation was pronounced by the Rev. F. W. Taylor.

TEMPORARY CHAIRMAN CRAWFORD.

Reads Palmer Out of the Party.

Then came Mr. Hinrichsen's speech, which was one of the great sensations of the convention. Chairman Hinrichsen read the opponents of silver out of the Democratic party in his opening address. He struck particularly at Senator John M. Palmer when he declared that any man who opposed the State committee had not a drop of Democratic blood in his veins. He appealed all through his speech to the radical element of the convention. He delighted those who are strong in their disapproval of President Cleveland by mentioning his name in connection with the assertion that the president was neither in accord with the people nor with his party. But the telling stroke by the Secretary of State was made when, with gavel uplifted and head thrown back, he declared that the delegates had the authority to take whatever action they saw fit. The delegates showed their gratification by prolonged cheers. After this incident the convention was with Mr. Hinrichsen at every point. At every remark made by the chairman of the State committee the delegates let loose an installment of the enthusiasm which had been so judiciously secreted prior to the appearance of Mr. Hinrichsen.

GOVERNOR ALTGELD.

Ex-Congressman William J. Bryan, of Nebraska, took up the denunciation where Hinrichsen left off and drove the convention into a frenzy of enthusiasm by heaping criticism on the head of the national administration. Nor did he stop there, for he went down the line of President Cleveland's supporters. Gov. Altgeld followed in the same course, as did ex-Congressman Andrew J. Hunter. This was the means taken to arouse the enthusiasm of the delegates, and it was successful.

Crawford for Temporary Chairman.

At the close of the address Chairman Hinrichsen introduced as temporary chairman Monroe C. Crawford, of Union County, who had been recommended by the State committee. Judge Crawford made no remarks except to impress upon the delegates that their action was being watched by every person in the State. He told the delegates that if they wanted free silver to say so, and then announced that he was ready for business.

Judge Kramer moved that the various congressional districts be called that the chairman might name the delegations' selections for the various committees. It was carried. Thompson W. McNealy, of Menard County, wanted all resolutions of a political nature referred to the committee on resolutions without reading. Thomas Merritt, of Marion County, protested. He declared that such a move would be gag law and that gag law should have no place in such a convention. Upon this show of opposition Mr. McNealy withdrew his motion. Secretary Bentley then read the list of committees as appointed by the congressional delegations. By unanimous consent Judge Henry S. Miller, of Chicago, and Andrew J. Hunter, of Paris, were added to the committee on resolutions. The convention then adjourned for dinner.

The afternoon session began work with little delay. The committee on credentials reported no contests and recommended that the sitting delegates be declared the delegates of the convention. The report was adopted. The committee on rules favored those used by last summer's convention. This report was also adopted.

When the committee on permanent organization reported ex-Judge S. P. McConnell as the permanent chairman, Cook County broke loose. The delegates shouted for the president of the Iroquois Club all the time that Judge Crawford was putting the motion to concur in the report of the committee. Ex-Congressman Nicholas E. Worthington, of Peoria County, Free P. Morris, of Iroquois, and Judge Bell, of Hamilton County, were appointed a committee to escort Judge McConnell to the chair. When he ascended the platform the umbrellas and silk hats of the Cook County men again went into the air. When the applause given the Chicago lawyer had died away Mr. Crawford introduced Mr. McConnell. Without delay he began his address to the convention. It was warmly, even enthusiastically, received. He was applauded frequently, and at times so long that the delegates lost the thread of the silver argument which Mr. McConnell made.

The convention was full of political sensations. The greatest excitement came just before the adjournment of the convention. The passionate speeches had all been made, and the Democrats, who filled every chair and the aisles of the convention hall, were ripe to indorse the action of the resolutions committee. Ex-Congressman George W. Fithian was chairman of the committee on resolutions.

Resolutions Adopted.

Mr. Fithian in a clear voice read the platform. Several times during the reading of the declaration for free coinage he was interrupted while the convention went into transports of enthusiasm. When finally he pronounced the words 16 to 1 the delegates jumped from their seats and threw their hats into the air. For fully five minutes the uproar lasted. The first outburst died away only to make way for another. The resolutions adopted by the convention and read by Mr. Fithian were as follows:

Whereas, Silver and gold have been the principal money metals of the world for thousands of years, and silver money is recognized and used as honest money between individuals and between nations notwithstanding the varying ratios between silver and gold; and,

Whereas, The demonetization of silver has deprived the people of free use and benefits of an invaluable and original money metal and has increased debts and added to the burdens of the people by lowering the value of labor and labor products; and,

Whereas, The Constitution of the United States prohibits any State from using anything but gold and silver coin as a legal tender for the payment of debts, thereby recognizing that coin composed of silver or of gold is honest money and fit to be used as a legal tender, therefore, be it

Resolved, By the Democrats of Illinois, in convention assembled, that we are in favor of the use of both gold and silver as the standard money of the United States, and demand the free and unlimited coinage of both metals at the ratio of 16 to 1, without waiting for the action of any other nation, and that such coins shall be a legal tender for all debts, both public and private, and that all contracts hereafter executed for the payment of money, whether in gold, silver or coin, may be discharged by any money which is by law legal tender.

Resolved, That we hereby indorse the action of the Democratic State Central Committee in calling this convention, and we instruct the committee to carry out the will of this convention as expressed in its platform by inaugurating and carrying on a campaign of education in this State and to thoroughly organize the Democracy of the State on the lines as laid down in the platform of this convention.

Resolved, That the Democratic members of Congress and members of the Senate from the State be and they are hereby instructed to use all honorable means to carry out the principles above enunciated.

Resolved, That we request the Democratic National Committee to call a Democratic national convention to consider the money question not later than August, 1895. If the committee refuses to call such a convention, then we invite the Democratic State Committees of other States to take concurrent action with the Democratic State Committee of this State in calling such convention.

Free Silver Delegates.

Following are the men appointed by the Illinois Democrats to represent the State in the proposed national monetary conference:

SENATOR PALMER ON THE STREET.

First District—Thomas Gahan, Chicago; F. J. Gaulter, Chicago.
Second—P. Kern, Chicago; Thomas Byrne.
Third—J. J. Coughlin, Chicago; W. J. O'Brien, Chicago.

Twenty-first—N. B. Norrison, Odin; E. C. Pace, Ashley.
Twenty-second—H. N. Deitrich, Anna; F. M. Youngblood, Carbondale.

Then the list of the delegates-at-large was adopted. The delegates-at-large elected were: John P. Hopkins, Chicago; Geo. W. Fithian, W. H. Hinrichsen and L. E. Parsons, of Clay County. The alternates chosen were: John Warner, Peoria; John Watson, Galesburg; Gen. Alfred Orendorff, Springfield, and G. C. Whitnell, of Johnson County. After this was done motion was made to adjourn, which was carried.

JUDGE NELSON IN AN ARGUMENT.

THE ILLINOIS SILVER CONVENTION IN SESSION AT SPRINGFIELD.

A report originating in Cincinnati, O., that Minister Edwin Dun, of Ohio, who has represented the United States at Tokio in one capacity or another since 1884, is to be removed and that J. F. Connelly, late comptroller of Newark, N. J., is to succeed him, is denied at the State Department.

The pension of the late Secretary Gresham remained unclaimed for a little over three years and technically has lapsed, but it can be recovered by application and proof that for the three years the disability continued. The amount due is $1,100.

CHAPTER XIII.

It was early on the morning following that the young earl sought his mother. After a night of sleepless and anxious deliberation he resolved upon making an appeal to her affection; that, he thought, she could never withstand; and he was right in his conjecture. He appealed to his mother's love, and won from her a most reluctant consent to his marriage with Lady Hutton's ward.

"I suppose she will inherit all Lady Hutton's fortune," said the countess.

"I have never thought about it," replied her son, indifferently; "she is peerless herself; but I have no doubt she will."

"It will not be so bad after all," said her ladyship, complacently, "if her pedigree is all right."

Lord Bayneham laughed, and, elated with the concession he had won from his proud mother, went to seek Lady Hutton.

There seemed to be a strange calm in the house when he reached it. The windows were closed, and the servant who opened the door looked unusually grave and serious.

"Can I see Lady Hutton?" asked Claude; "is she engaged?"

"Her ladyship is seriously ill, my lord," was the man's reply; "she was seized with a fit last evening, and has not been conscious since."

"Is Miss Hutton with her?" he inquired, inexpressibly shocked at the news.

"Miss Hutton has never left my lady since she was taken ill," the man replied.

"I hope to hear better news this evening," said Lord Bayneham as he turned away.

He felt like one in a dream; the sun was shining brightly, the streets were crowded with gayly dressed people; life, gayety and happiness seemed to thrill through the summer air, yet over the house he had left hung the dark cloud of illness, and perhaps approaching death. He went to his club and there wrote his first love letter, telling Hilda her sorrow was his, and asking to share it. "Let me see you this evening," he said, "just to give you some little consolation."

When the letter was gone Lard Bayneham felt more at ease. To do his mother justice, she was startled and shocked to hear of Lady Hutton's illness.

"It would be most awkward if anything happened just now," she said. "I trust, at least, she will recover consciousness."

The day passed slowly, Claude longing for the evening, when he could see Hilda and share her sorrow.

* * * * * * * *

A dark cloud hung over Lady Hutton's magnificent house. The servants moved noiselessly and spoke in hushed voices. Grave physicians met and consulted how best to do battle with the grim king of terrors.

In a luxurious chamber lay the lady so suddenly and awfully stricken. The summer sun tried to pierce the rich green hangings, and succeeded in throwing a mellow half-golden light over the room. The velvet curtains, with their deep fringe, were thrown aside; there, pale, serene and calm, no longer conscious of earthly things, lay Lady Hutton. Her pale lips were parted, and a faint, feeble breath passed them. She lay there, and life was ended for her, its hopes and sorrows all over. It mattered but little now that she had loved and lost, that she had been rich, courted and flattered, that men had bent before her and paid homage to her rank and wealth; all that was over. Before the sunset she would be where virtue and goodness, not money and position, take the first place and wear the golden crown. Only one thing mattered now, and that was, if the life ebbing away had been well spent.

The moment had come; the evening sun had set in all its glory; the beautiful gloaming, half-golden, half-gray, had begun, when Hilda, bending over the white face, saw a faint quivering of the closed eyelids and the sealed lips. Then the dark eyes opened with a wistful, wondering look, that pierced the child's heart.

"Hilda," whispered Lady Hutton, "what is it, my darling? Am I going to die?"

"Mamma," cried the trembling girl, "let me go with you."

"I must tell you," said Lady Hutton, "something—let me have more air, I cannot breathe. I want to tell you, darling, about your own mother. Perhaps I did wrong—but I loved you so dearly—you are like my own Maud. Can no one give me air?"

Hilda tried to raise the dying lady, whose words came in short, quick gasps.

"I want to tell you, darling," she said—then a sudden glaze fell over the wistful eyes, an awful pallor settled on the face, and the half-raised hand fell heavily on Hilda's arm. Lady Hutton had gone "where the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest."

"Carry that poor child away," said Dr. Wells, to one of the attendants.

Hardly more conscious than the one who lay at rest, Hilda was carried into the nearest room, which happened to be the library, and laid upon the couch. At that moment there was a slight stir in the hall; Lord and Lady Bayneham had arrived. The intelligence of the sudden death had bewildered them.

"Where is Miss Hutton?" asked the young earl. "Lady Bayneham is come to take charge of her; let us see her at once."

The man who had opened the door never dreamed of offering any resistance.

"Miss Hutton has been taken to the library, my lord," he said.

When they entered the darkened room Hilda raised herself from the couch.

"Let me go back to her," she was saying to Dr. Wells. "I cannot believe it. It is impossible she can be dead."

Then the tired, frightened eyes fell upon the face of Lord Bayneham. She moved toward him with a wistful cry. He clasped her in his arms, and laid her head upon his breast.

"Hilda, my darling," he whispered, "my wife that is to be, I am come to share your sorrow—it is mine also."

Lady Bayneham looked on, her eyes full of tears. The delicate, lonely child, so lovely in the abandonment of her grief, touched that world-worn heart. She silently withdrew with the doctor, and left those whose love death had sanctified.

CHAPTER XIV.

Lady Bayneham forgot all her own cherished notions of etiquette, and warmly pressed the lonely young girl to return with her to Grosvenor Square, but nothing would induce Hilda to leave the house. She was too young, too inexperienced, to know that time would soften her grief.

Mr. Abelson, assisted by Lord Bayneham, undertook all arrangements for the funeral. Lady Hutton was laid to rest near the bonny woods of Brynmar, where the greater part of her life had been spent. Lord Bayneham was chief mourner, and two distant cousins of Lady Hutton's, looking out for a legacy, were there also.

"You will attend in the library for the reading of the will, Miss Hutton," said the family lawyer, after their return to London.

Hilda bowed assent. She was very silent in these the first days of her bereavement, and she seemed half shy, half frightened, when with Lady Bayneham. The poor wounded child found her greatest comfort with Barbara—noble, unselfish Barbara, who forgot when she caressed the fair head and parted the golden hair from the sad, sweet face, that she was in the presence of her rival, the one who had stolen from her her love. She saw a grieving, sorrowful, lonely girl in place of the brilliant young beauty who had won Claude's heart, and Hilda clung to her as she would have done to a sister of her own.

Miss Earle spent the time that intervened between Lady Hutton's death and funeral with Hilda. She did not leave her night or day; and Claude, who after that one interview did not like to ask for another, found his only comfort in hearing from Barbara the loving little messages sent by his fair-haired wife that was to be.

The will was but a short one. The two cousins were not forgotten; a handsome legacy repaid them for all their affectionate solicitude over the poor lady's health. Every old servant was remembered, and the beautiful estate of Brynmar, the house in London, money in the funds, carriages, horses, jewels and plate, were all bequeathed by Lady Hutton to her adopted daughter, Hilda, who thereby became one of the richest heiresses in England. It was all her own, to do what she would with, without any stipulations or conditions; but Lady Hutton hoped she would never part with Brynmar. There was no mention of her adoption or of her parentage, not a word that gave any clew to it whatever.

"I must congratulate you, Miss Hutton," said the lawyer, when the bill was read.

"I wish, though," interrupted Hilda, with tears in her eyes, "that there had been one word of my mother."

Two guardians were appointed to take charge of the young heiress. They were Mr. Abelson and Dr. Greyling, who had been Lady Hutton's confidential friends for many years. Until she was twenty-one a certain income was to be allowed her, and Brynmar was to be her home, unless she married before then, in which case she would immediately come into full possession of her property.

For several days the lonely young heiress remained in the large solitary house, seeing no one but Barbara and occasionally Lady Bayneham. She would not see Claude yet; she knew his presence would bring with it such a rush of happiness, it seemed almost a sacrilege to think of it. She resolved to return to Brynmar. By Mr. Abelson's advice and assistance an elderly lady was found who, in consideration of a handsome yearly income, consented to live as duenna and chaperon with Miss Hutton; the two guardians having decided that she was far too young and too pretty to live alone.

"I fancy our responsibility will soon end," said Dr. Greyling, with a quiet smile. "Lord Bayneham will be very happy, I think, to relieve us of it."

It was nearly the end of June when Hilda and Mrs. Braye returned to Brynmar, Barbara having given her promise to meet Hilda when the London season was quite over.

When she returned to her early home Hilda resolved to search amongst Lady Hutton's letters and papers to see if it were possible to find any clew to her adoption and parentage.

In the grand library at Brynmar stood a large oaken bureau, where the poor lady had been wont to keep all letters and papers. There Hilda searched; there she found letters worn and yellow with age, love letters written by the gay and dashing Lord Hutton to the quiet, dignified Miss Erskine; but neither there nor anywhere else could she find any mention of herself.

In the quiet and silence of Brynmar her health and spirits returned. Something of the old beautiful bloom was on her face when, six weeks afterward, Barbara came, saying that, in spite of all remonstrances, Claude would come, too—not to remain, but only for a few hours, just to see how his newly won treasure looked.

Hilda went with him to the shady green glade in the woods where he first saw her; and there, with tears shining in her eyes, she told him Lady Hutton's dying words, and how impossible she had found it to discover who her parents were. He loved her too deeply to care, and he kissed the tears from her face, and told her never to think of it again. She was Hilda Hutton to all the world, and would soon be Hilda, Lady Bayneham. He made her promise that when the spring blossoms came she would be his wife.

As the time drew near Lady Bayneham made some faint remonstrance, but it was soon withdrawn, because she saw the whole happiness of her son's life was involved. Unless he married Hilda he would never marry at all. Outwardly she was amiably indifferent, but in her heart there was something resembling dislike for the beautiful young girl, who had unconsciously thwarted the one plan and wish of her life and heart.

Spring came with its blossoms and budding leaves. The wedding was to take place in the pretty country church at Brynmar, and a gay party of guests assembled there. Bertie Carlyon had gladly accepted his old friend's invitation to officiate as best man, for he was longing to see Barbara again. Diffidence or delicacy—he hardly knew which—had prevented him from calling since he knew she was free.

The flowers Hilda loved were blooming on her wedding day, when the words were spoken that made her Claude Bayneham's wife, and no one wished her joy more truly or more kindly than Barbara Earle.

Lord Bayneham took his young wife to Switzerland. He wanted to show her every beautiful place in the world all at once. Barbara told him, laughingly, he must be content with one, and Hilda had chosen Switzerland.

Barbara's words were gayest when the hour of parting came. Barbara's face was the last that smiled as the carriage, containing perhaps the two happiest people in the world, drove away.

Bertie Carlyon stood by Barbara's side, watching with love's keen eyes every change in that noble face. He saw no trace of sorrow there. Barbara did not keep her woes for the world's amusement. She was calm, kind and serene, thoughtful for Claude, for Hilda and for Lady Bayneham. It would have required more shrewdness than Bertie possessed to discover any sign of an aching heart in those calm, clear eyes and smiling lips.

"I think they will be happy," he said, as the carriage disappeared. "Some mortals have an enviable lot. I should imagine that Claude has not one cloud in his sky. I, on the contrary, have no sunshine."

"You!" cried Barbara, turning to him quickly; "why, ever since I can remember anything at all, I have heard my cousin cite you as the happiest man he knew."

"I make no complaint," said Bertie. "I have enjoyed my life hitherto as the birds and flowers enjoy theirs, without thought or care. I never woke to realities until I became sure of obtaining a certain treasure. Looking within myself, I found I was unworthy of it. He who would win must fight."

"Why can not you fight?" said Barbara, interested, in spite of her own secret sorrow. "You are too diffident. A man should never mistrust his own powers, if he would have others respect them."

"Miss Earle," said Bertie, suddenly, "will you be my friend? A man can do noble deeds if he has a noble woman to influence him. Be my friend, and there is nothing too high or too difficult for me to attempt, if you will aid me. I should value your friendship more than the love of all the world put together."

Bertie was most sublimely unconscious that his words were a declaration of love in themselves; and Barbara smiled as she looked at his handsome, eager face.

"I will be your friend," she said, "if, as you think, I can be useful to you."

"The mouse once helped the lion," said Bertie; "and it is just possible the time may come when Bertie Carlyon, the poor younger son of a not over-rich baronet, may be of some assistance to Miss Earle. Remember," he continued, "if the time should ever come that you want a strong arm or a brave heart, my life is at your service." And Barbara remembered his words.

Slain by Her Friends.

A man in town whose wife is sick was told by the doctor that no visitors were to be admitted under any circumstances, as their presence would tend to make the woman worse. These orders he gave to his wife's mother, who was in charge. He found that evening on returning that six women had been visiting his wife all afternoon.

"There was Mrs. A.," the mother said in excuse; "she had a cousin once who was sick the same way, and I thought she might know some remedies."

Mrs. B. was admitted because she was the kin and might get mad if refused. Mrs. C. was let in because she was the richest woman in the neighborhood and it wouldn't do to offend her. Mrs. D. always loaned the patent flat irons every week, and of course had a right to come in. Mrs. E. brought some jelly over and brought Mrs. F., who was visiting her.

The man promptly ordered his mother-in-law out of the house and put a professional nurse in charge. The next day he found more women had been in. The nurse told them they couldn't come, but they brushed right past her and rushed in. The patient was much worse, and as a last resort the husband had two policemen standing at the bed-room door with orders to arrest any person who tried to pass.

The doctor says the woman has lost the little chance she had of recovery, and that it will be her visitors who killed her.

How Snow Stops Bullets.

Some officers of the One Hundred and Thirty-ninth Regiment of the line, in the French army, stationed at Aurillac, conceived the idea of making experiments on the penetrative effect of the Lebel rifle in ordinary snow. They made the experiments, and the results took their breath away. Firing from a distance of only 160 feet at masses of snow raised on the rifle ranges at Ombrado and Buis, the riflemen found that their projectiles stopped when they were but five feet deep in the target. That five feet of snow should stop a Lebel rifle ball was past belief, yet there was the result. There were the riflemen; there was the ball, hurled from the muzzle with a velocity attainable only in the modern breech-loading high-power firearm—and there it was again, just five feet deep in a mass of soft snow. A bullet from the same rifles at this distance has crashed through a tree 3⅝ feet in diameter.

Here is the theory of the French officers. It will serve for the present, and may be the true explanation. They think the rifle ball gets "battled up," just as a horse's hoofs do, only it is all done in the fraction of a second. Entering the snow as it does with a high speed and the spinning motion due to the rifling, it collects the particles about it and drives them back until the accumulated mass stops its flight. We may yet see the armies of Europe building snow forts.

Facts About the Peanut.

There is much doubt as to the original home of the peanut. Some say that it is indigenous to Africa; others that it was a native of South America and was carried by the earlier explorers of that country to Spain, and thence to Africa. The earliest authentic tradition tells of its appearance in eastern North Carolina, probably brought there by some of the slave-ships landing cargoes along the coast. The native Africans recognized and used them. Peanuts grow upon a trailing vine with leaves much resembling a small four-leaved clover. The small yellow flower it bears is shaped like the blossom of all the pea family. Indeed, the Agricultural Bureau in Washington does not recognize the peanut as a nut at all, but classes it among beans. The soil in which it is cultivated must be light and sandy. After the flower falls away the flower-stalk elongates and becomes rigid, curving in such a way as to push the forming pod well below the surface of the earth. If by any accident this is not done, the nut never matures.—Washington Post.

Jacob Kinser, residing at Zion, Ky., concluded that he was going to die. He sent for his neighbors and a minister, selected the text, heard his funeral sermon preached and then folded his hands and died. He was 76 years old.

In 1849, at the marriage of the Duke of Milan, a ballet was presented of such magnificence that it was talked of all over Europe. It is stated that there were over 1,200 dancers in this entertainment.

THE WAR IN CHITRAL.

STRANGE COUNTRY INVADED BY THE BRITISH.

The Natives Claim to Be Descendants of Soldiers of Alexander the Great—Cause of Hostilities—Slaughter of Capt. Ross' Troops.

England's Late Trouble.

The military expedition sent to avenge the slaughter of Captain C. R. Ross, of the British army, and forty-six Indian soldiers under his command, by the natives of the Chitral country, and to relieve the fourteen surviving soldiers under Lieutenant Jones, who were taken prisoners, calls attention to a region very little known and which is one of the most inhospitable on the face of the earth The town of Chitral, from which the district gets its name, is situated on the Kashkar, or Chitral, River, which runs along the southern base of the Hindoo-Koosh Mountains, and is only a short distance southwest of the Pamirs. It is thus, so to speak, under the eaves of the famous "Roof of the World." The Chitral country extends from the town away to the northeast, and leads to the Baroghil Pass—12,000 feet above the sea—on the other side of which are the sources of the Oxus, and the Pamirs. This pass is over the eastern end of the Hindoo-Koosh, and may be said to be the point where the Himalayan range bends and runs westward through Afghanistan to the Heri Rud, on the frontier of Persia. The Hindoo-Koosh forms the northern boundary of Chitral, Kafiristan is on the west, Panjkora is on the south, and Yasin on the southeast. From the southwest extremity of the territory to the Baroghil Pass is about 140 miles, and in its widest extent it is about fifty miles; but most of the space is composed of mountains at too high an altitude for people to dwell in; still, the population is supposed to be about 200,000. The towns and villages are situated along the valley, close to the banks of the river, which has various names, according to the locality it passes through. In the upper part it is called the Yarkhun River; below Chitral it is known as the Kashkar or Chitral River; and before it joins the Kabul River near Jalalabad it is called the Kumar, from the name of a locality it flows through.

THE CHITRAL VALLEY.

What has been referred to as the town of Chitral is in reality six villages and a bridge across the river. The villages in this region are something like those in Afghanistan—they are surrounded by walls and towers, by which is indicated an unsettled state of society, where protection is necessary from neighboring marauders. Ever since the travels of Burnes in Afghanistan, we have been familiar with the tradition of tribes near the Hindoo-Koosh who believe they are the descendants of Alexander the Great's soldiers; and the Mehtars, or ruling princes of Chitral, have a particular claim to this line of descent. The Chitral Valley is at times spoken of as Kashkar, which is its older name. The people are now Mohammedans, but they retain many old rites and customs which were peculiar to the locality. They are supposed to have been at an early period only a branch of the Kafirs, who are still their next-door neighbors. Like the Afghans and other tribes of the region, they are divided into "zais" or "khails," words equivalent to our own term clans.

The immediate cause of the expedition was the outgrowth of a conflict between two claimants to the office of Mehtar. Amir-ul-Mulk was recently invested with that authority, but his uncle, Imra Khan, ruler of Bajaur, invaded Chitral in behalf of Sher Afzul, who claimed the office as his right. Dr. Robertson, the British Resident at Chitral, was friendly to Amir-ul-Mulk, and Captain Ross was sent to the country by way of Gilzit to protect the Resident The little company was attacked by a large force of Imra Khan's troops from behind stone breastworks and on the cliffs above their path. They fought during two days, endeavoring on the second day to get back to Boni, constantly assailed with rifles or musketry and with stones hurled down from the heights. Captain Ross was struck by a large stone, and he was also shot, and only fifteen of the fighting men succeeded in getting out of the defile. The news of the battle being transmitted to the authorities in India, General Sir Robert Low was ordered to proceed at once from Peshawur with 14,000 men.

As is usual in similar British expeditions the guide corps preceded the main body of troops on the march to Chitral, and before the advance had been pushed very far the gallant little corps, under command of Colonel Battye, was completely annihilated by the natives.

The method adopted in this annihilation was peculiar to the territory and the hostile forces which compressed it. The entire region through which the relief party had to pass is of the most broken description and abounds in narrow, dark defiles between precipitous heights. While Colonel Battye and his men were marching through one of these straitened passages a body of natives massed at the top of the cliffs and rolled down a perfect torrent of bowlders upon the devoted heads of the British, not one of whom was left alive. However, in spite of this and other setbacks, the British have succeeded in relieving Mr. Robertson and the little garrison at Chitral, Sher Afzul has been captured and an alliance has been made with the Khan of Dir. The trouble may therefore now be considered at an end, for the present at least, and the British will no doubt proceed to thoroughly subjugate the Swats and other tribes which assisted Sher Afzul and Umra Khan. This will not be an easy task, however, since the natives are of the most war-like temperament, of splendid physical constitution and not at all inclined to be ruled by anybody.

THE FORT AT CHITRAL.

The English do not overestimate the value Chitral might be to them. The Hindu-Kush mountains are the great barrier between John Bull and the Russian bear in Asia, and it is through the Dora pass that the Russians will pour if they ever succeed in swooping down on the British in India, unless the advance is made through Afghanistan. Time was when the Russians certainly would have adopted the latter route, but that is long passed. The Ameer of Afghanistan, though he and his people are nominally independent of either of the great powers, is now and for some years has been friendly to the English.

New Candle.

A new candle has been brought out which extinguishes itself in an hour. This it does by means of a tiny extinguisher of tin, which is fastened in the wax by wires, and which effectually performs its task. It is only necessary to remove this diminutive extinguisher when its work is done, and the candle is again ready to burn another hour.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, post-office as second-class matter.

THURSDAY,.....JUNE 13, 1895.

JUNE 20, the German Nation will celebrate the formal opening of the ship canal, that connects the River Elbe with the Baltic Sea. It is 61 miles long, 300 feet wide and 30 feet deep and the largest war vessels can get through it. It will change the farm life some, to see scores of big ships go through the farming country fields dail .

ROSWELL G. HORR, formerly a member of congress from Michigan, but now an attorney in the city of New York, is to have a discussion on silver, with Harvey the author of "Coin's Financial School." They speak informally, while sitting and each has several to assist him in case any point is overlooked or imperfectly answered. The "talks" will be published so as to give the people a full knowledge of all the points in controversy.

WAGES are being voluntarily increased by many large firms, now that times are getting better and owners of mines and factories are doing a paying business. This course, of voluntarily increasing wages, will do more than all else to stop strikes when wages are cut down. It will cause employes to see that wages must sometimes be reduced, to save employers from loss, and they will feel safer if they know that when good times come, they will be raised.

This is the ratio between gold and silver coins so often mentioned in the prevailing discussions on silver. This simply means that we consider one pound gold of standard fineness to be worth as much as sixteen pounds of silver of standard fineness. In other words any weight of gold is worth sixteen times its weight in silver. Or that standard silver pound for pound shall be considered only one sixteenth as valuable as standard gold. Coins of both gold and silver have an alloy of one tenth, nine tenths only being gold or silver.

33 BALLOTS.

At Albion last Monday before electing a county superintendent, the seven republican trustees went into secret caucus to decide which of the four candidates they would support in the election. They had to take 33 ballots before any one got a majority. On the 33d L. L. Adair received 4 votes and the other 3 divided so they had to support Adair. Five of the 6 democrats also voted for Adair for both parties had come to the conclusion that the new law would not hold good.

ONLY A JOKE.

D. W. Jenner is one of those "transformation fellers," in other words he can disguise himself so "your own mudder wouldn't know ye." J. C. Henry "et al." as the courts say, got him to go up and buy a suit of clothes at Rollins'. Now the brothers Rollins have boarded with Jenner several weeks, but on this occasion did not know him. The one on whom the joke was laid hustled about and soon had sold the "stranger" a cheap suit, to the amusement of the conspirators. Then the stranger picked up the bundle, and without a word, started off. He got to the door, when the clerk called him, "say stranger, havn't you forgot something?" But the stranger "lowed" he hadn't, and moved on. The salesman followed and overtook Jenner, even Jenner's voice did not betray him. Failing to get the cash, the salesman came back with the bundle of goods to the great delight of J. C. et al., who were waiting for him. Boys will be boys and only newspaper men ever fully "steady down" to life's realities.

Auburn will celebrate the 4th of July. Two balloon ascensions will be made by Prof. Love and his goats, forenoon and afternoon. There will also be bicycle parade, and races of every description. In the evening there will be the grandest display of fireworks ever seen in DeKalb county. More particulars later.

When you want anything in the jewelry line go to F. J. Yesbera. You always get just what you pay for then.

Friday's Daily:

MARCHED OUT.

The S. O. V. Martial Band, of Auburn, went out into the country a few miles last evening. They wanted to practice marching, and so, went afoot. It differed somewhat from buggy riding, so the boys thought, before they had covered the two or three miles that span the distance between Auburn, and the home of D. C. Marvin, the point to which they journeyed. Still, the boys have a good deal of muscle and vim, and reached there in good shape. Mr. Marvin was taken utterly by surprise, but made them welcome. His good wife however, gave the band a welcome that they needed more than anything else. She had to be taken into the secret, for a troop of young fellows, walking that distance, would be very apt to have their appetites along with them. So they had an excellent supper and treated the family, and some neighbors who dropped in, to some good music. They started home at about 11 o'clock, having enjoyed the trip great!

CommissionersCourt

Licenses to sell liquor were granted to Henry West, Samuel Bevier and Thomas Somers, in Auburn; Chas. Linkenbelt and E. E. Sherman in Garrett; to C. W. Tomlinson in Butler.

Joseph Oberlin was appointed constable in Wilmington township, John Duncan was appointed a constable in Grant township.

The superintendent of the Poor Farm August Bartels filed his quarterly report.

Daniel Thomas resigned as School Fund Appraiser of the south west commissioner's district and G. I. Patterson was appointed in his place.

It was ordered that Christian Long now an inmate of the county, home and it appearing that he has an estate of $500 or more and guardian to care for his property and person, it is ordered he be released from the poor farm and given into charge of his guardian, Price D. West, by June 10, 1895.

Just received a new lot of Souvenir spoons at Yesbera's jewelry store.

Did you see those Belt Buckles at F. J. Yesbera's jewelry store? Well they are dandies for 50c.

The two big catalpa trees on the public square have been objects of admiration for a few days. They never looked lovelier.

Another Gross of

BUCKBOARDS

To Be

Given Away

We thought we had enough for every boy in the court that wore short pants.

But our enormous trade in Children's Clothing makes it necessary for us to get another gross to give with every short pant at $2.00 and upwards. Remember, these wagons go with suit and not with furnishings. We have a large assortment of children's clothing at prices ranging from $1.00 a suit up to $7.50.

We Aim to Carry Everything You Need

in Children's Wear, and can make you prices that cannot be duplicated elsewhere. Come and see us for a nice velvet suit and Fauntleroy waists.

ST. JOE WILL CELEBRATE.

When we say "celebrate" that means July 4, and when we say "St. Joe will celebrate" it means that there will be a good old fashioned "Fo'th o' July" there. St, Joe makes a success of everything that she seriously attempts. They have had many other general meetings there, and have always had a large and well satisfied attendance.

COURT.

Thursday's Daily:

In the Jonas Emanuel Will matters E Case, executor, is ordered to pay taxes of estate out of funds thereof, and pay to window the entire income of the property after such expenses are paid.

J. B. Draggoo gets a judgment against Charles Rogers for $185.

J. R. Madden vs Sarah A Carnes was dismissed. John Moody vs Henry Reed judgment for plaintiff. Lydia B. and Oscar H. Smith were divorced. M. Sheets vs V. Dewitt, settled at plaintiff's cost Margaret Milligan vs Searight, gets judgment $188.

Tuesday's Daily.

J. P. Crimmins was examined last week and admitted to the bar. He may not enter on the active practice, but it will help him in his abstract business. The long delayed Knight ditch has been set over to next term and will be tried by Judge Adair. The case of the Union Savings Association vs Kandel is dismissed at his cost. Union Central Life vs John T. Huyck before D. R. Best as Judge, the costs to date are taxed to the defendant, and case continued to next term. Ida McFarren was divorced from Charles and is given the child.

To-day, T. R. Marshall of Columbia City sitting as special judge started to try the divorce case between Saxby McIntosh and his wife. J. E. Rose was his attorney and J. W. Baxter hers. Each principal took the stand and gave his or her side of the matter. Seeing that the case would take some time, Judge Marshall requested them to wait and finish it to-morrow morning, as a great number of witnesses were present to testify in the case of Countryman vs the B. & O. which came on next. A fire caught from a Baltimore & Ohio train about two years ago and did some damage for Countrymen and he sues for damage. His farm is east of the river, not far from the Ohio line. Attorney Harris of Defiance, and Roby, of Angola, are for Countryman, and J. E. Rose, of Auburn, and Baker of Goshen, are for the road. Mr. Baker is a son of Judge J. H. Baker, now a U S. Judge.

DEER PARK,

On the Crest of the Alleghenies.

To those contemplating a trip to the mountains in search of health and pleasure, Deer Park, on the crest of the Allegheny mountains, 3,000 feet above the sea level, offers such varied attractions as a delightful atmosphere during both day and night, pure water, smooth, wind ing roads through the mountains and valleys and the most picturesque scenery in the Allegheny range. The hotel is equipped with al, adjuncts conducive to the entertainment, pleasure and comfort of its guests.

The surrounding grounds, as well as the hotel, are lighted with electricity. Six miles distant, on the same mountain summit is Oakland, the twin resort of Deer Park and equally as well equipped for the entertainment and accommodations of its patrons. Both hotels are upon the main line of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, have the advantages of its splendid Vestibuled Limited Express trains between the East and West. Season excursion tickets, good for return passage until October 31, will be placed on sale at greatly reduced rates at all principal ticket offices throughout the country. One way tickets, reading from St. Louis, Louisville Cincinnati, Columbus, Chicago, and any point on the B & O system to Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia or New York, or vice versa, are good to stop off at either Deer Park, Mountain Lake Park or Oakland, and the time limit will be extended by agents at either resort upon application, to cover the period of the holder's visit.

The season at these popular resorts commences June 22nd.

For full information as to hotel rates, rooms, etc., address George D. DeShields, Manager Deer Park, or Oakland, Garrett County, Md. 2p.

Some of the farmers in this vicinity are complaining of a species of bug, here to fore unknown, eating up the corn and potatoes. Jonathan Shook reports that in one of his fields there are spots of as much as a half acre where the corn is entirely destroyed.

There was an interesting game of ball played here last Friday between the Waterloo and Corunna boys. Waterloo came down 60 strong to see us get licked. But the Corunna boys are not built that way. It was a warmly contested game and although the first our boys had played this season, they came out of the fray with victory perched upon their banners. It is barely possible that we will send a challenge to Chicago next.

The Widow Woman.

Several times we have been tempted to call down some of our learned brethren of the quill and pencil. At different times we have noticed discussions more or less earnest in our exchanges for and against the use of the homely o'd English phrase "Widow woman." They finally came to the conclusion that as all widows were women it wouldn't pay to use both words but would be better English to say simply "widow." They argeed that we could not say "widow man," and hence the word widow would be better alone. We beg, however, to assure these learned critics that there is high authority for the use of the word. The seventy-two eminent scholars who translated the scriptures "out of the original tongues" ought to understand the language and they use this very term. Turn to I Kings, 17th chapter, 9th and 10th verses.

Thursday's Daily.

L. D. Tusselman of Waterloo was down to-day and called on the COURIER and advanced his subscription to June 96.

Mrs. James Henderson, Mrs. Chas. Bolton and Mrs. Chas. Pommert went up to Waterloo last evening where they will attend the county Sunday School convention.

Mrs. J. J. Martin and Mrs. Eliza Shafer, of Albion, have been visiting the friends and relatives here a few days. They returned this afternoon.

Frank VanDolah and Frank Purdy were swimming south of the band saw mill Tuesday when Sherman Gall came along and the boys wanted him to go in swimming. He refused and just for fun young VanDolah told Purdy to hit him This he did and Gall had the boys arrested. They were brought before the Squire Wednesday morning and Mr VanDolah was fined $18 75.

The COURIER man visited the Agriculture Implement store of Morr & Baker, Wednesday and found there a most complete line of machinery. The Milwaukee mower is the best we have ever seen, an improvement over machines that were built a few years ago.

Uncle Moses Perry the veteran assessor of Concord was here with the rest Monday. He has been their assessing officer for fourteen years, but the tidal wave put in another man, and Uncle Perry gladly gives place to him. The new man will be a good one, if he makes as good a record.

H. G. Provines and his sister Lola came home from Valparaiso to-day, Fred. Knott and Miss Magginis will reach home to-morrow. The College there is flourishing.

While at work at the Zimmerman Mfg. Co's. factory this morning Harry Morr was hurt. He was running a small mechine when the belt flew off and struck him across the breast and shoulder, The hide was nearly all taken from the body where the belt struck him, He was taken home and will not be able to work for some time.

Tom Vanduzen. a well kumon old timer has been getting worse lately, and Tuesday was in so violent a condition that the Judge ordered him confined. But he some how gave the officers the slip Yesterday, however, Deputy Sheriff Platter got track of him and caught him down near St. John. He is now in the jail and we suppose if his condition does not change for the better, he will be taken to the asylum.

Two or three days we have tried to get a report as to the accident to Wm. Eckert in Fairfield. He was coming towards home when a bicycle scared his team and then another buggy came up behind and this made his team wild. Just as they were coming down the hill by his house, the wagon went into a deep gutter washed in the road, and he was thrown out and badly hurt. There was a bad cut on the head and a dangerous hole made into his breast. The horses got away, but about a mile further on were met by a hired man of Mr. Hovarter and stopped. The man got in to drive them back. They soon got away from him, and he too was thrown out. They then ran north to Eckert's corners, then west to the Noble county line, then south a mile or so, in all about seven miles. Mr. Eckert was pretty badly hurt, but is getting along very well,

Friday's Daily.

Dr. Swarts returned at noon from Indianapolis where he attended the meeting of the State Medical Association. The meeting was largely attended and the work done, very valuable. The Doctor was the delegate from this county. The next meeting will be at Ft. Wayne.

When the north bound noon train came in, there stepped off, Mr. and Mrs. Hiram Crowl, of Nappanee. Mrs. Crowl will be remembered by our Richland and Keyser people as Mrs. Goerte, formerly Miss Swander, a daughter of Jonathan Swander. They came here on account of the dangerous illness of her mother, Mrs. Swander. They are well acquainted with Mr. and Mrs. James Campbell at Nappanee.

terday to attend the commencement exercises at Westminster Seminary, having been favored with an invitation by Miss Hattie Dills, She returns this evening. Pearl Kelley returned home at noon today, having bid her fellow students a temporary farewell.

Mort Olds, wife and son, of St. Joe were in town over night the guests of A. B. and Mrs. Olds. We say son, because they have taken a bright little boy to raise. Mr. and Mrs. Olds had been attending the Sunday school convention at Waterloo and this morning left for Ft. Wayne where they will attend the graduating exercise of Westminster Seminary.

Squire Walter had a case in his court to day in which he had to deal out justice to the boys. It appears that on Sunday last a number of boys or young men were passing away the time sitting on the grass and talking. Among the number were Phil Gibson, Beigh VanAuken, Harry Lewis, James Simon, Paul Davenport and perhaps others. Some remark made by Phil, the nature of which we did not learn, angered young VanAuken and he struck Phil in the face a pretty heavy blow that broke his glasses. Phil had VanAuken arrested for assault and it came up to-day as stated, VanAuken was fined $5 and cost amounting for both to about $10.

I. S. Olinger, who lives west of town came near getting his hand mashed yesterday. He was unloading a log at the saw mill, when his hand got caught between the cant hook and another log, and was badly jammed. Some of the bones were probably injured, but being where he cannot get at them, he will have to let them do thebest they can. But we hope the hurt is not serious.

Mrs. John Shugers came home Wednesday evening, her son Cory having gone up to Mt. Clemens to return with her. In some ways the treatment was a great benefit, and in some ways not. Her general health seems to be better but the nervous condition she hoped to benefit, remains about the same.

Attorney D. R. Best of Angola has been here a couple of days sitting as special Judge in several cases in which Judge Penfield had formerly been engaged or in which change venue had been taken.

Jack Dorland came over from Ligonier yesterday where he has been helping to get out that big edition of the Leader. It is a 24-page edition and finely illustrated with pictures of the most prominent people and buildings. The work is a fine specimen of printer's art, being done on tinted book paper of extra quality and finish. It is the finest job we remember seeing of work in any country office.

Sunday, a number of our Masonic citizens went to Hicksville to assist at the funeral of T. J. Jordan formerly a citizen of Corunna. He had been ill for some time, the troubled being quick consumption. The Masons at Garrett had a special car, going down on the morning freight and and at the Junction were joined by the Auburn brethren. The funeral was largely attended, a large number being present from Defiance, Antwerp, etc. Our people will remember him as a prominent man a few years ago. He served several years as trustee of Richland township and later went into the employ of the B. & O. as a bridge builder. At the time of his death he was assistant to the foreman of the bridge business on this division. Those who went from Auburn are J. E. Rose, John L. Davis, J. J. VanAuken. D. E. Caruth, James McClellan, Henry A. Lesh, Geo. Rudolph, D. Y. Husselman and James Provines.

G. W. Gordon and R. H. Weamer are now in charge at the Dispatch office. Mr. Gordon though in a general sense, new to the newspaper business is an experienced business man, and Mr. Weamer an experienced newspaper man. And while we differ radically on matters of politics we wish the new firm financial success, and welcome them to the new field.

The Miamis near Peru are being listed to enable Uncle Sam to pay them an old debt, amounting to $48,528. About fifty years ago, some of the Indians got to betting away their payments, and so dragged in a number who had not bet, that innocent parties lost their money. This money, however, had been guaranteed to them by a treaty, and now, after refusing to make their losses good for fifty years, the United States is going to replace the money. About 300 Indians and their descendants of all ages, will have a share in it.

Summer Complaint.

I have two little grand children who are teething this hot summer weather and are troubled with bowel complaint. I give them Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy and it acts like a charm. I earnestly recommend it for children with bowel troubles. I was myself taken with a severe attack of bloody flux, with cramps and pains in my stomach, one third of a bottle of this remedy cured me. Within twenty-four hours I was out of bed and doing my house work. Mrs. W. L. Dunagan, Bonaqua, Hickman Co., Tenn. For sale by Robbins & McCord. 23-6

Ligoneer Banner: Mrs. Davidson, the state librarian, elected by the late general assembly by a combination in which votes were given for promises of underplaces, is about to make another move. She has notified the janitor, Michael O'Brien, who has held the place since the new capitol was finished to leave June 1. She will give the place which pays $60 a month, to her son. Truly, the New Albany Ledger says, when we look at the doings of the chosen, who came into office in Indiana on the great republican "reform" wave of 1894, it seems that public office is a family snap.

Rev. C. C. Albertson, well known in M. E. church circles has accepted a call to preach at Buffalo, N. Y.

Mr. Coe writes us that the one vote he received for county superintendent, was a volintary matter on the part of some friend on the board as he was not a candidate and that the report of the meeting in the COURIER was misleading. It should be noticed however, that we did not say Mr. Coe was a candidate. We supposed all the time that the vote was given under the circumstances named above. It is not an important matter either way as all concede that Mr. Coe had as good a right to enter the contest as any one had.

THE GRANDEST AND BEST SHOWS ON EARTH.

Walter L. Main's grandest and best shows on earth are not, strictly speaking a circus in the true sense of the term, but rather more a traveling fair. containing a world of living wonders, collected to afford lessons for studious contemplation, inspection, information and innocent recreation. The wonderful invention of Capt. Pierre Perier, of Paris, France, is also something that should be seen by every man, woman and child in the world. The captain will daily give two exhibitions of the life-saving apparatus he invented, by leaping from a towar one hundred feet high. His wonderful performance is free to all. Take the little folks to see the magnificent parade that is over a mile long and contains ten different kinds of music, a herd of elephants, a drove of camels, the finest collection of imported horses ever owned by one man, and more than a score of massive open dens of the world's rarest wild beasts. The only riding lion the world has ever known. "Wallace," is something the like of which the old nor the young have ever before had an opportunity of seeing. This great enterprise comes to Auburn. There are seventy thousand acres given up to the cultivation of oysters along the Long Island Sound front of Connecticut, and the land and plants are valued at four million dollars. The latter is probably worth twenty million dollars.

Few people know that the population of Portugal, including Madeira and the Azores, is only 5,049,729, of whom 2,619,390 are females, and four-fifths of the population are unable to read or write. Lisbon has 612,000, of whom 394,338 are unable to read or write. It is not surprising, although the census was taken five years ago, the Government has only just made up its mind to publ h these figures, which it would be hard to beat in any country of the world claiming to be civilized.

The organ of the Greek Church in Russia recently replied to the invitation of the Pope for a union of the Greek and Roman churches that such a project was impossible, and warned the Pope that if it were seriously attempted it would only add to the membership of the former. Since this invitation was sent out the Pope has tendered a similar one to the Anglican Church. The organs of that church, however, reply that such a union cannot take place. The Roman Church must come back to the Anglican fold, which it left centuries ago, and renounce its errors. This, of course, Rome will not do, and there you are. So the outlook is favorable for the continuance of three infallible churches.

The Omaha Bee is exultant over the promises of the Wyoming oil fields and the prospects that Omaha may reap some of the benefits therefrom, though Denver will be a strong competitor, as it is already figuring for a pipe line from Wyoming. It is expected by the experts that these fields ere long will be the most prolific sources of oil in this country, especially as it is generally conceded that the Ohio and Pennsylvania are giving out. Hence the Bee urges that the Omah capitalists should strike at once. It claims Omaha occupies the same relative position towards the Wyoming oil fields as Cleveland to those of Ohio and Pennsylvania. That the oil fields are chiefly near the head waters of the Platte, and consequently there will be a natural fall all the way to Omaha, and that while as a refining center Denver would have equal advantages, as a distributing center Omaha would be way ahead of its rival. It says: "The railroad lines converging in Omaha would cover a territory that has now to be supplied from Ohio and Pennsylvania, and the saving of freights in carrying the oil by pipe line instead of rail to the Missouri River would afford a very decided margin in favor of Omaha."

It is a little more than forty years since the name of Florence Nightingale became known to all the world. It was in the midst of the Crimean war, when disease was more fatal than Russian guns to the English soldiery, when, through lack of proper nursing and care and food, thousands of men were dying. Her noble work in saving the lives of the soldiers and nursing them back to health and strength is more than a twice-told tale, and is known throughout Christendom. It has won for her a fame more enduring than marble, for her name is engraven on the hearts of mankind. Among the noble and eminent women of her time she stands the foremost and the best loved. She has just passed her seventy-fifth birthday, and has received the congratulations of hosts of friends, the Queen being one of the foremost, writing her an autograph letter. The whole world rejoices that she is still with us, and prays that she long may be.

The Legislature of Michigan has just passed a law restoring the penalty of capital punishment for murder. For many years in that State the penalty had been imprisonment for life, and it has not been entirely satisfactory to the people. In successive legislatures attempts had been made to restore the death penalty, but without avail until the present moment. This now leaves Maine, Rhode Island and Wisconsin as the only States where the death penalty may not be enforced. Whether this is advance or retrogression the social science philosophers may discuss, but it is a noteworthy fact that several of the States, such as New York and Iowa, and now Michigan, after having abolished capital punishment, restored it again after the lapse of some years. Michigan gave the experiment the longest test—one might say a thorough test—for the law has been in force at least a generation. What the statistics show, if there are any affecting the question, does not appear, for they have not been published, but this change, after so long a trial, is significant. It proves that, in the popular opinion, the penalty of imprisonment for life is not adequate to the crime. Of course, we all know it is not severity of punishment that deters from crime. When, in the last century and the early part of this, hanging was the penalty for all kinds of crimes in Great Britain, from sheep stealing to murder and treason, it was hangman's harvest all the time. Blackstone enumerates over one hundred and sixty offenses for which the penalty was death, and yet crime was never so prevalent. Nor can it be proved that the death penalty ever held back a single murderer determined on the crime, but there is evidence to show that men have been willing to run the chances of imprisonment for life in order to revenge themselves upon an enemy. There are examples of several most atrocious murders in Michigan and Wisconsin by men who coolly weighed the consequences of their crime. Whether the death penalty would have stopped them or not, no one can say, but in our present state of civilization it is just as well to have it on the statute books. Doubtless it is true, as Sir Henry Wotton long ago remarked, that "hanging is the worst use a man can be put to," but there are cases where it is the only use. It is just as well to have a penalty for the most dreadful of crimes, whereby it will be made certain that the criminal will commit no more.

Meats to Tempt the Invalid.

The lecture was on meats for invalids, and in the large audience was the entire normal class of the Boston Cooking School. The first thing prepared was a young pigeon. The breast bone can be removed with a small, pointed knife, thus leaving the bird whole for the patient to eat. Have ready a broiler which has been brushed with soft butter; lay the bird perfectly flat, with the legs crossed, brush slightly on both sides with butter. Broil, with the flesh side close to the fire, until it is seared, and then move slowly for about ten minutes. Sprinkle with salt and a little pepper if the physician allows it, and serve on a slice of toast and garnish with parsley.

A slice of porterhouse steak served for the next illustration. There should be at least a half inch edge of fat, the lecturer explained, and the meat should be well veined with fat. Cut off the flank for soup and cut the meat from the upper side of the bone, which is more juicy than the tenderloin; broil this for a few minutes and squeeze out all the juice. Pour this over the tenderloin after it has been broiled, thus supplying the juice that it lacks.

From a thin strip cut from the end of the round the lecturer scraped the entire surface of red meat, leaving only the muscular tissue, which a sick person cannot digest easily. By slightly browning in little balls, about the size of a chestnut, or in wafers of stale bread this is very palatable. These sandwiches are delicious if they are toasted to a light brown.

Instant heat is necessary to keep juices in meat, but to prepare chicken jelly the juice is to be extracted. Disjoint a fowl, put the pieces in a double boiler with a pint and a half of cold water, and let it heat for two and a half hours, then add a tiny bit of mace, one clove, a little celery and a sprig of parsley. Let this simmer half an hour longer.—Boston Transcript.

Fishing in a Cornfield.

In Colorado is a ten-acre field, which is no more nor less than a subterranean lake covered with soil about eighteen inches deep. On the soil is cultivated a field of corn, which produces thirty bushels to the acre. If anyone will take the trouble to dig a hole to the depth of a spade handle he will find it to fill with water, and by using a hook and line fish four or five inches long may be caught. The fish have neither scales nor eyes, and are perch-like in shape. The ground is a black marl in nature, and in all probability was at one time an open body of water, on which accumulated vegetable matter, which has been increased from time to time until now it has a crust sufficiently strong and rich to produce fine corn, although it has to be cultivated by hand, as it is not strong enough to bear the weight of a horse. While harvesting the hands catch great strings of fish by making a hole through the earth. A person rising on his heel and coming down suddenly can see the growing corn shake all around him. Anyone having sufficient strength to drive a rail through the crust will find on releasing it that it will disappear altogether.

WHERE BLAME RESTS

REPUBLICAN POLICY CAUSED DEMOCRATS TO BORROW.

Measure of the G. O. P. Brought on the Panic—The Attempt to Have Democrats Punished for Republican Blunders Will Not Succeed a Second Time.

Whose Incompetency?

Through the mouth of that illustrious public and private financier, Charles Foster, the Republicans of Ohio have the amazing effrontery to denounce the Democratic party "for its deplorable incompetency in handling the national finances, borrowing $162,000,000 in two years."

Why did it become necessary to borrow that much money in two years? Harrison entered the White House on March 4, 1889. During the fiscal year ending four months later the revenues exceeded the expenditures by $105,053,443. During the following year, under the same revenue laws, the excess of revenues over expenditures was $105,344,496. Then the Republican party, having complete control in both houses and their own man in the White House, so changed the revenue laws and increased the expenditures that the excess of receipts fell in 1891 to $37,239,762, and in 1893 to $9,914,454. Before the end of Harrison's administration the revenues had fallen below the expenditures, and Financier Foster went to New York to negotiate a loan under the resumption act.

By whose deplorable incompetency was a surplus of more than $105,000,000 annually converted into a deficit in less than three years? As a result of whose deplorable incompetency did the deficit grow after the Harrison administration gave place to the Cleveland administration? The same revenue law—the McKinley law—under which the surplus disappeared remained in full force for more than a year and a half. The same laws increasing the continuing expenditures remained in force, and, with the exception of the sugar bounty, still remains in full force. All these were Republican laws, for which the Democratic party is in no way responsible. The revenues fell off after the panic of 1893, as they did after the panic of 1873. But to whose deplorable financial incompetency are we indebted for the panic of 1893? When that panic occurred the Republican organs throughout the country were practically unanimous in attributing it to the Sherman silver law, passed by a Republican Congress and approved by a Republican President. They, with the Republican leaders in both houses of Congress, applauded the President for calling an extra session to repeal that law.

When the disaster first befell the Republicans did not attempt to deny that their party was responsible. It was a measure of their own party which by their own admission brought on the panic and greatly reduced the treasury receipts. It is undeniable that the Republican sugar bounty and other additions to continuing expenditures and the repeal of the duty on sugar contributed to the creation of a deficit. Yet the Ohio Republicans, through Financier Foster, coolly charge that the deficit and the necessity for borrowing were due to the "deplorable incompetency" of the Democratic party! Comment would be superfluous. It would add nothing to the force of the naked facts. The attempt to get the Democratic party punished for Republican blunders and crimes succeeded in in 1894; it will not succeed again.—Chicago Chronicle.

McKinley's Set-Back.

In the Ohio convention Gov. McKinley was badly beaten. He was not a candidate for any office, but he is the head of a machine, and the traditions of Ohio require the head of a machine to control everything within reach, to give battle to every challenger. So when Mr. McKinley's candidate for Governor was beaten, the Governor was beaten. He may have a "solid" delegation to the national convention, but he cannot trust it. He has ceased to be the sole dispenser of patronage. His own followers will be disheartened, and he will be exposed to treachery. It is a vulgar and sordid game they are all playing, but they know the rules and the risks and they seem to like it.

The man who beat Gov. McKinley was ex-Gov. Foraker. He is much the same sort of a Republican as McKinley, only more so. He is keener, more active, more unscrupulous, and more vindictive.

But it is plain that Foraker could not have beaten McKinley had the general feeling of the Republican party in Ohio been as strongly on McKinley's side as it has been until recently. Foraker is a shrewd and energetic organizer, but you can't organize successfully against a strong sentiment. The final test is at the polls, and there the votes of men count who take no interest in the preliminary struggling and scheming. These men have long been great admirers of McKinley because of his very simple and intelligible, because extreme, protectionism. They have "gone back" on him, because they have begun to lose faith in protection. He was the representative of their favorite theory in politics, and the theory having lost favor, the representative suffers. Probably the average Ohio Republican would deny that he was any less a protectionist than he was five years ago, but he is, and the set-back he has given to the champion of protection shows it. The fact is that for the first time in nearly forty years the sincere protectionists, the men who really believed that the country could be taxed into prosperity and would be ruined if the tax were lessened, have had to face actual experience of lower taxes, and they find that they are not ruined. Take a single perfectly conclusive illustration. In 1893 large numbers of employers of labor declared that they would have to reduce wages if the Democrats carried the elections. Before the McKinley act was repealed they did reduce wages. Now wages are going up again. These very employers are raising them. Some are doing it willingly, some reluctantly, but all are able to do it and know that they are. Their strongest argument for McKinleyism is wiped out. Now, these men cannot help being influenced in politics by this fact. They can no longer look on McKinley as a savior of society. They will not give money lavishly to restore tariff duties that they are getting on very well without. They will not work as they have worked for the protection party. They will not try to scare their employes to voting for it, because they know it would be of no use. They have been living in dread, honest dread, of a disastrous crash, and they have landed quietly and comfortably on their feet. That does not mean that the Republican party is going to pieces, but it means that the essential Republican doctrine of extreme protection is being outgrown.—New York Times.

No Tariff on Tunnels.

New York City is preparing to construct a system of underground railways, which will involve the digging of about fifteen miles of tunnel, costing about $55,000,000. By some strange oversight the McKinley bill omitted to impose a duty on foreign tunnels, and the manufacturers of tunnels in this country will have to compete with the pauper tunnel industries of Canada and England. In those countries it is alleged that tunnels can be had for practically nothing, all that is necessary being to dig away the earth and insert the tunnel. Whereas, owing to the import conditions of the tunnel industry of the United States, the cost of underground excavations is much greater here than in foreign countries. If it is not too late the next Congress, which is a truly high tariff body, should provide for a duty of at least fifty per cent. on all imported papuer tunnels. In this way we shall be able to keep our home markets for ourselves; pay high wages to tunnel builders; and in the course of time establish the tunnel industry on as firm a footing as that of growing wool or making steel rails.

Senator Sherman Forgets.

"We are in favor of a protective tariff," says Senator Sherman. "We had such a tariff. While it was in force we had prosperity, good times and money in plenty." Is Senator Sherman falling into "second childishness and mere oblivion" that he thus forgets the truth of recent history?

"We had such a tariff" in 1873. Widespread bankruptcy followed, and for five years thereafter this country passed through the worst period of industrial depression and general business paralysis it has ever known. All over the land the highways were thronged with tramps. During all of that period "we had such a tariff," but through the highly protected industries of the Senator's own State and of Pennsylvania resounded the cries of starving labor and the rattling volleys of Pinkerton guards repressing labor riots. Surely the Senator cannot have forgotten how all this reached its climax in the terrible scenes of 1877 and continued until his own party was forced temporarily to modify its policy?—New York World.

What Makes Prosperity.

To attribute the revival in business to the hope of a return of the Republican party to power and of a new era of McKinleyism is the worst of partisan fanaticism. If any professional tariff-monger imagines that the industrial world attributes the industrial movement to such a hope, let him go and ask the Carnegie Company and its fellow manufacturers, as well as the hundreds of thousands of workingmen whose wages have recently been advanced, and he will be told that the prosperity is due to conditions of which a prime factor is the confidence that the industrial peace will be disturbed by neither tariff nor financial legislation. With these conditions party sentiment has nothing to do. The tariff idol lies prone, and the crowd of its worshippers is daily diminishing.—Philadelphia Record.

Admits Increasing Prosperity, But—

The New York Tribune, chief of calamity howlers, has at last been constrained to acknowledge the glad recovery of business. With delightful inconsequence it says that the people are beginning "to enjoy the fruit of two overwhelming Democratic defeats," and "hearty congratulations are in order for the substantial improvement in business which has already appeared." It is no small tribute to the new tariff that its most malignant enemies are compelled to acknowledge the revival in trade under its beneficent operation and influence in less than nine months from the day of its passage. In less than nine months more they will wish to forget that they were ever in favor of the McKinley tariff.—Philadelphia Record.

Silks as Luxuries.

The voice of McKinley is to be invoked in favor of higher duties on silks. Cheap silks have become one of the few luxuries of the thrifty poor, and a little group of manufacturers demand the right to tax them more for the indulgence. That there is no reason for it the record shows. Under all tariffs raw silk has been free. The present duty on manufactures of silk is 50 per cent. This is exactly what it was under the Republican commission tariff of 1883-90. The McKinleyites raised it to 60 per cent. A call for more than 50 per cent. taxation on any article of clothing will never again be popular in this country.—New York World.

Readers Who Believe Anything.

An incorrigible Republican joker insists, with an air of gravity, that the advance in wages and revival of business are "a direct consequence of the restoration of the law-making power to the Republican party." Is not the Senate a part of the law-making power—likewise the President? There are two elections between the Republicans and a restoration to power. Are wages really jumping up on that contingency? What sort of readers do the organs imagine that they have, anyway?—New York World.

How to Catch Plutocrats.

Chief Justice Fuller to the American people: "Here is your income tax, what there is left of it. It didn't hit the fellow it was aimed at. Just open this door here, labeled 'direct taxation,' and you will see how to catch the big millionaires, monopolists and speculators."

McKinley's Views.

At the latest reports Gov. McKinley's position on the silver question was still that the tariff is not a tax.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE AT CHATTANOOGA, TENN.

Second World's Meeting of the Methodist Young People's Societies—Sunrise Prayer Meetings on Lookout Mountain—Program Complete.

Followers of Christ.

THE second international conference of the Epworth League is to be held in Chattanooga July 27-30. There are many divisions of the followers of Wesley, but they are essentially one family, differing indeed a little in government, but identical in doctrine and spirit and even in methods. Of this unity the Epworth League is a striking illustration. Its functions and place in Methodist churches is similar to that of the Christian Endeavor in Congregational and Presbyterian churches. It is the young people's society of Methodism. Its object is to promote and cultivate the intelligence and piety of its members, organize and employ them in works of mercy and charity, and in every possible service of usefulness in the church and society. The league was organized in Cleveland, Ohio, May 12, 1890. Prior to that time there had been a number of young people's societies of different names in the church, each more or less independent of the rest, although generally having the same objects in view.

LOOKOUT MOUNTAIN.

The session will begin June 27, 1895, and continue four days. It will embrace the leagues of all of the Methodists in the world. The program is in the hands of the general secretaries of the M. E. Church, the M. E. Church South, and the Canadian Methodist Church. There will also be department conferences daily for the discussion of the practical work of the league in its several departments. Bishops Joyce, Vincent and Thoburn, of the M. E. Church; Galloway, Hendrix, Fitzgerald and Hargrove, of the M. E. Church South, and Sir McKenzie Bowell, premier of the Dominion of Canada, are on the program. These great leaders, with many other men of eminence, as well as a large number of the talented and promising young workers of the various Methodisms, cannot fail to make the discussion of the different topics of the highest interest and profit. The music will be a special feature of the conference. It will be under the direction of Prof. Rowland D. Williams, assisted by the Park sisters, of Boston, and a chorus of 500 voices. An immense chorus of children from the public schools of Chattanooga will also participate. Sunrise prayer meetings will be held each morning in the churches and on Lookout Mountain. Sunday morning will be devoted to sermons by the bishops and visiting ministers in the churches of the city and suburbs. Sunday afternoon there will be mass meetings in the largest churches, addressed by eminent ministers and laymen. The regular conference meetings will be held in the great tent, capable of holding 10,000 people, where the opening sermon will be preached by Bishop Galloway, and the closing sermon and consecration service by Bishop Joyce. The local arrangements for this immense gathering have been entirely in the hands of the young people of Chattanooga leagues, and they have been managed with a wisdom and skill and thoroughness that would have done credit to veterans in such service. Nothing has been omitted. Every difficulty and emergency appears to have been anticipated and provided for. The best and most extensive arrangements with the railroads have been made, securing half rates from almost every portion of the country. Excursions to the battlefields and points of interest have been provided for, as well as side trips to Mammoth cave and other points en route.

REV. DR. CLARK, Founder of the League.

NEW SECRETARY OF STATE.

Attorney General Richard Olney Is Chosen by the President.

Richard Olney of Massachusetts, the present Attorney General of the United States, is to succeed the late Walter Q. Gresham as Secretary of State. Edwin F. Uhl, of Michigan, will continue in the office of Assistant Secretary of State.

Richard Olney was born in Oxford, Worcester County, Mass., Sept. 15, 1835. He was prepared for college at Leicester Academy, in Worcester County, and was graduated from Brown University, Providence, R. I., in 1856. From that year to 1859 he attended the Harvard Law School, when he was admitted to the bar and entered the office of the Hon. B. F. Thomas, of Boston, Mass. He was a member of the Massachusetts House of Representatives in 1874. Since the year of his graduation at the Harvard Law School and his admission to the bar in 1859, he has been continually in the practice of the law in Boston. He received his appointment as Attorney General of the United States March 6, 1893, the date upon which President Cleveland entered upon his second term of office.

Minor State News.

MRS. JOHN YORK, Peru, by mistake gave her two children kerosene to drink. May prove fatal.

EVANSVILLE is to have a packing house with a capacity of 200 head of hogs and 100 head of beeves a day.

IN the last few days a flood of counterfeit ten-cent-pieces have found their way into circulation at Elwood.

JESSE CROUP, 10-year-old son of A. J. Croup, fell in the Elkhart River while fishing at Goshen and was drowned.

DODE CECIL, young farmer near Farmland, was in his barn when it was struck by lightning. He was instantly killed.

IT is estimated that the wheat crop in Hamilton county will not average a bushel to the acre, and but little will be harvested.

A NUMBER of heirs to Lord Autrim's estate in Ireland, valued at $75,000,000, reside near Elwood. They will push their claims.

JIMMY BEGGS went into White River at Columbus, for the purpose of drowning two cats. He was seized with cramps and lost his life.

LOUIS ASHWORTH, a young farmer living near Alpine, was fatally kicked in the stomach by a horse which became frightened at a passing bicycle.

SUIT for $10,000 has been filed against the Pan-handle railway at Kokomo by the administrator of the estate of Oscar Romick. Romick was killed while unloading goods from a car.

MORGAN BLACK rode up to George Fisher's house, near Mt. Vernon, and shot him dead. Fisher kept company with Black's sister and Black suspected that something was wrong.

WILLIAM MCDONALD, a tailor, who had just returned from a three weeks' unsuccessful hunt for work, committed suicide at Kokomo with laudanum, leaving a wife and two children.

ALVARADO HOMMELL, Madison, has received a "white cap" notice, saying that he will suffer bodily harm unless he executes a deed for a graveyard plat. He owns the ground but refuses to sell.

FRED SMOCK, a farm hand near Terre Haute, while returning from a call on Farmer Pennington's daughter, was shot by some unknown person and dangerously wounded. The assailant is supposed to be a jealous rival.

CHRIS MEYER'S barn, near Jeffersonville, was struck by lightning and destroyed. His daughter, who was alone at home, succeeded in rescuing seven head of horses. The barn contained several fine buggies, surreys, etc., and the loss will reach $4,000.

CHARLES STOUT, a well known resident of Monroe Township, Howard County, who has been ill, left his room and went out on the second story veranda to get a breath of fresh air. While there he fainted and fell off the structure to the ground. In the fall his head struck a step, tearing his scalp off and inflicting other injuries from which he will probably die.

THE little town of Caseyville, Clay County, was visited by fire and it required the combined efforts of the citizens of the place to save the village from destruction. Five dwelling houses were burned to the ground. The fire occurred at a late hour in the night and the occupants of the buildings barely had time to escape, losing all their household effects and clothing.

A PETITION is being circulated at Brazil, and liberally signed, asking the Governor to pardon James Booth, aged 19, Robert Rankin, aged 18, and William Wilson, aged 17, who are now serving two-year sentences for the murder of Engineer William Barr of the Vandalia, on June 6, 1894. The prisoners were strikers, and stoned Barr, who was a non-union engineer, to death.

MARION SHIDELER, a farmer aged 70, residing three miles northwest of Cambridge City, was thrown from a load of straw and died from his injuries. He was crossing the Lake Erie and Western tracks, his horses became frightened by a Big Four train using the tracks, and the team ran away. Rounding a corner, Mr. Shideler was thrown off the hay, against a tree and his skull fractured.

MRS. JOSHUA W. BERRY, sixteen miles south of Kokomo, met an awful death recently. She was smoking a pipe while at work in the garden. Her clothing took fire and she ran partly across a meadow, attempting to reach her father's house, but fell, setting fire to the dry grass. When found she was in a terrible condition, all her clothing, with the exception of her shoes, being consumed. She lived but a few hours.

JOSEPH SCHULER of Rockport, is dying from the effects of a dose of corrosive sublimate, taken by mistake. Since taking the poison he has lost his voice, the drug destroying the vocal chords. Soon after taking the dose his wife gave him the white of an egg every few minutes and greatly neutralized the poison. The drug was dispensed to Schuler by an inexperienced drug clerk, a mere boy, in the drug store of D. A. Sexton.

ON May 21, Mrs. Mary Day of Greencastle, a widow, placed $30 in paper money on a stove in an ordinary purse. She placed the top of the stove over the same for safe keeping. The next morning was a chilly one and she built a fire in the stove, which burned her pocketbook and money into an unrecognizable mass of ashes. The wreck was gathered up by a newspaper reporter, who, as an experiment, took the same to the Central National Bank to forward to Washington. This was done together with a statement of the circumstances, and the other day Mrs. Day received a draft for her $30. How the money was identified is a mystery to one unacquainted with the system employed by the government, as the bills were nothing but ashes when removed and could not be told from the other ashes of the burned book.

C. HEIM, extensive farmer of Warrick county, gives a discouraging report of the wheat crop in Southern Indiana. Several samples of wheat gathered in three different counties show up badly. Harvesting will begin shortly. In many fields binders will not enter at all. He attributes the present condition to frost.

IN a woods near Jonesville, Sam Smallwood, of that place, while squirrel hunting, was almost instantly killed by the accidental discharge of his gun. Smallwood is the third son of the family to meet death in an unnatural way. One son died from the effects of eating a poisonous herb and another was killed in a railroad wreck.

A FAST fruit train on the Wabash struck and killed William Kuyjah in the yards at Logansport. The victim was 53 years old, and was on his way to the home of Miss Minnie Goldsmith, to whom he was to be married. Kuyjah was employed at the Pan-handle shops.

AN ancient swindle is being used in Indiana towns. All the police stations in the State have cards giving the description of F. B. Johnson and J. O. Bell, wanted at North Manchester. The information is that the men enter a town and victimize the business men under the guise of being agents for the Davis, Allen & Co. Bad Debt Collecting Agency of Toledo, Ohio, and get subscribers to membership at $10 each.

Lozenges composed of muriate of ammonia and licorice are beneficial for hoarseness.

For gums that are sensitive and bleed easily rub with tincture of myrrh several times a day.

For a cold in the eye bathe it several times a day with a saturated solution of boric acid in rose water.

Salol and phenaceutine taken in five-grain doses of each drug in every three hours is helpful for muscular rheumatism.

Spruce gum is frequently beneficial for children to chew. That kind flavored with peppermint relieves indigestion or dyspepsia.

The 1-5-grain pill of sulphide of calcium every three hours, and a good dose of Rochelle salts before breakfast several times a week, for boils.

Take ten grains of Dover's powder and ten grains of quinine at bedtime for a cold. Add a good dose of villercabras water the next morning.

For muric acid in the blood get some five-grain tablets of carbonate of lithria, dissolve one in a tablespoonful of lemon juice and take the solution in a glass of water every three hours.

To tone up the appetite: Tincture of nux vomica, two drachms; tincture of colombo, one ounce; compound tincture of gentian, enough to make four ounces. Take one teaspoonful in water before each meal.

An elderly person who suffers from nervous and sick headaches should try a mixture composed of thirty-two grains of citrate of coffene, one ounce of bromide of soda and three ounces of elixir of guarana. One teaspoonful every three hours.

This remedy is said to be a certain cure of a felon, if you apply in time: Take equal parts of gum camphor, gum opium, castile soap and brown sugar. Wet to the consistency of paste with spirits of turpentine and bind on the felon with a soft linen cloth.

A cough syrup in which onions form an important part is made by taking one cup of vinegar, one cup of treacle and one-half cup of cut-up onions. Put on the stove and simmer about half an hour, or until the onions are soft. Then remove and strain. Take a teaspoonful of this frequently when troubled with a cough.

SOME ODDITIES OF MARRIAGE.

Widows and Widowers Generally Avoid Single Life and Mate Again.

It has been remarked that times of speculation are invariably accompanied by increase of marriages. Dr. Farr, the eminent statistician, hazards therefore, the suggestion that it is the spirit of speculation itself that leads many to embark on matrimony at such times. Another reason, which he is careful not to ignore, is the increased prosperity that induces and sometimes seems to accompany what he calls the periodical epidemics of speculation. A great war, after it is over, is good for marriage. So is a good harvest, so is the establishment of new industries or the extension of old ones. The reason is the same in all these instances; the increased prosperity of the general body of the people. So intimately is matrimony associated with national well-doing that it has come to be styled the barometer of prosperity. Its indications, however, are more for the future than for the present, dealing rather with the expected and anticipated than with the actual. But this only goes to substantiate what was said of marriage as speculation. The nation is sometimes extraordinarily sanguine, and when this is the case marriages are plentiful. Great popular leaders inspire this feeling. A statesman of genius at the head of affairs perceptibly increases the marriage rate. In a word, the great fluctuations in the marriages are the result of peace after war, abundance after dearth, high wages after want of employment, speculation after languid enterprise, confidence after distrust, and national triumphs after national disasters.

The marriage returns invariably show a corresponding increase for any augumentation in the duties paid upon malt, wine and spirts. They in the same way keep pace with the consumption of tea, sugar, coffee and tobacco, and with the imports of raw silk, cotton, wool and timber. The one increase is not, however, the cause of the other; both are but effects of the same cause—increased national prosperity. Marriages after banns are five times as numerous as marriages after licenses. When the price of wheat is high the diminution in the former class is comparatively much greater than in the latter. They are the first to be affected by high prices, licenses and banns being regarded as the prospective badges of capital and labor—not without important exceptions, however. Autumn is the favorite season everywhere; with a few spring is preferred. Half the weddings throughout the country are celebrated on Wednesday and Thursday. Saturday has more than the average number. Friday is not a favorite, as few marriages are celebrated on that day. Widowers are more inclined to marry than bachelors. Widows are more inclined to marry than spinsters. Both facts are eloquently in favor of the comparative advantages of matrimony. For one bachelor that marries between the ages of 50 and 55 seven widowers remarry between these ages. These are marriages out of an equal number of each class; the actual number of bachelors married will be greatest only in proportion as they exceed by seven to one the actual number of widowers living at these ages. Under the same conditions, for every spinster married between 30 and 35 two widows are remarried.—New York Dispatch.

"I Mak Siccar."

Scottish history affords us a few well-known phrases. Just before Robert the Bruce began his memorable struggle for Scottish independence, he was one day in conference with John Comyn, a claimant for the Scottish crown. He accused Comyn of betraying his designs to Edward. "You lie!" said Comyn. Bruce, enraged, drew his dagger and stabbed him; but, shocked at what he had done, he rushed out of the church where they were and cried: "I doubt I have slain the Red Comyn!"

"You doubt?" said Kilpatrick of Coseburn, one of his followers. "I mak sic-ar!" (I make sure), and running in finished the deed. The Kilpatricks have from that day adopted the words as their motto.—Chambers' Journal.

Latest Fad of British Aristocracy.

Zebras are among the latest fads of British aristocracy. Lord Rothschild has a pair of zebras broken to harness, which he drives around his country place, while recently a well-known peer was seen driving a four-in-hand of these beautiful animals through the streets of South Kensington. The question is now being discussed as to whether they cannot be broken for use as pole ponies.

An Index to Character.

Quick steps indicate energy or agitation. Tiptoe walking symbolizes surprise, curiosity or mystery. Turned-in toes are often found with preoccupied and absent-minded persons. The miser's walk is represented as stooping, noiseless, with short, nervous, anxious steps. Slow steps, whether long or short, suggest a gentle or reflective state of mind, as the case may be. The proud step is slow or measured; the toes are conspicuously turned out, the legs straightened. Where a revengeful purpose is hidden under a feigned smile the step will be slinking and noiseless. The direction of the steps, wavering and following every changing impulse of the mind, inevitably betrays uncertainty, hesitation and indecision. Obstinate people, who in an argument rely on muscular rather than on intellectual power, rest the feet flat and firm on the ground, walk heavily and slowly, and stand with the legs firmly planted and far apart.

WOMAN'S SUFFERING.

RELIEVED BY MAIL. HOW IT IS DONE.

How a Woman Works for Her Sex.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

Seated at her desk in the bureau of correspondence, this wonderful woman opens her letters from all parts of the world. A few extracts from their contents tell the story.—

FROM IOWA. "I am in a very bad condition. My courses have stopped from catching cold, and the pain is fearful. I am all bloated up; and the pain in lower part of my body is terrible. My back and head ache all the time. What shall I do for it?" Miss L——, Des Moines.

FROM NEW JERSEY. Mrs. Lizzie DeCline, 224 Grand Street, Jersey City, relates her miseries resulting from womb trouble, from which she was relieved and cured by the timely use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. She ends her letter by saying, "I owe all to you."

FROM OHIO. Mrs. Newton Cobb, of Manchester, O., writes: "I used eight bottles of your Vegetable Compound, and I am happy to say it has cured me of painful menstruations and backache. My suffering every month was dreadful. The doctors gave me morphine to ease the pain; nothing to cure me. Oh, I want to tell every one what cured me! I wish every suffering woman would write and get your advice."

FROM ILLINOIS. Miss Jennie ——, Chicago, states that she is twenty-two years of age; occupation, saleswoman in large dry goods store. Constant standing has brought on womb trouble, the symptoms of which she describes fully. She says: "Help me if you can. There are several girls I know who have written to Mrs. Pinkham, and been cured by her advice and medicine."

FROM PENN'LV'N'A. Miss Mary Smylie, who resides at 2073 E. Susquehanna Avenue, Kensington, Phila., writes: "I am a working girl, and must stand eleven hours every day. I have suffered terribly from painful menstruations and kidney trouble. At times my head was so dizzy I could hardly see. A friend recommended your Vegetable Compound. I am a different girl now: no more aches and pains. Oh, thank you, thank you!"

The above extracts from many hundred letters received daily by Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., go to show how easily ailing women can obtain advice and relief. Write to Mrs. Pinkham.

NOTES ABOUT SCHOOLS AND THEIR MANAGEMENT.

A Majority of the Best Teachers in City Schools Are Country-Bred—Crowded Schoolrooms and Health—The Evils of Overcrowding.

Advice for Country Teachers.

This article is especially intended for the younger class of teachers who are being educated in the country. No doubt, if it were being written by many teachers who have spent all their lives in the city, there would be an interrogation point after the word educated; but as the writer is a genuine country school product, it shall stand unmolested. Perhaps it might be well to say in the beginning that the advice is coming from a man still in the hey-day of youth. Many people do not like the term "advice," especially from the young. "The atrocious crime of being a young man, I shall neither attempt to palliate nor deny;" but if the reader cares to substitute "thoughts" for "advice," it will not in any way change the sense of what is to be said.

To the careful observer the fact has been apparent for a long time, that the best teachers, or a majority of them, in the city schools, are country-bred. "I know of no way of judging of the future but by the past; and judging by the past," the prominent teacher of the future will come from the country. Those of us in city schools who grew up on a farm can tell every time when we get hold of a country boy. He has that something about him that will overcome all difficulties, that is not found in the city boy. I do not intend to say one disparaging thing of the country schools, but the best teachers in the country do not stay there. Just as soon as they begin to make a reputation they are wanted in the towns and cities, and money will take them there every time. Some day the rural school districts of this State will see their mistakes, and a mighty change will come upon us. Now it is to the aforenamed class of teachers I wish to say a word. Of course the poorer class of teachers do not read educational journals, so there is no danger of reaching them.

Suddenly and almost unexpectedly "Nature Study," "Elementary Science," or whatever you may term it, is upon us, and it has come to stay. It matters not what the humanists may say to the contrary, the scientist will be his equal in the years to come. The humanist claims that the "new education" is a farce, and tends to play and careless habits of work. We do not propose to argue the question nor to deny that the humanities have accomplished great things. We do deny their accusation and declare once for all time that "there is no royal road to learning." How profitably you can spend your long hours in the country! I see it all now as it never came to me before. Nature, the great book is wide open before you. Turn its pages carefully and read and read again. Go down to the little brook that meanders through the farm of the man with whom you board. Lie flat down on the bank of that stream and watch the little fish that are there so unconsciously for your benefit alone; not one hour, nor two, nor even three will satisfy you, if you are once interested. I never spent a more profitable hour in my life than in sitting on the porch one warm evening after a hard thunder-storm, watching the toads as they came from an old cellar to catch the earthworms as they came up out of the ground.

An ant hill is a good study room, and it will require many hours to get the whole lesson.

"These emmets, how little they are in our eyes;
We tread them to dust, and a troop of them dies,
Without any regard or concern;
Yet as wise we are, if sent to their school
There's many a sluggard and many a fool
Some lessons of wisdom might learn."

I would own a good magnifying glass, a few good natural histories, a text or two on geology and some botanies. Morning and evening, early and late, whenever the weather will permit, go to the fields, the woods and the streams. One afternoon in a little country school house, as I stood within at the window, I saw a jay fly several times to a fence post and put his head into a hole made by the blue birds. An investigation after school led me to a discovery. He had carried quite a number of acorns and put them away for winter, making much better preparation for food than had the man from whose farm the acorns came. An hour down on the bank of the creek, watching the muskrat or the woodchuck, will open your eyes and lead you on to conquer other worlds. Do you know anything of the habits of the woodpecker, wren, whippoorwill, sparrow, crow, chipmunk, mole, flying squirrel, grasshopper, butterfly, crayfish, and a thousand living creatures? If not, begin at once to study them and you will be preparing for the work of ten years hence.

Do not neglect the plants and stones. Begin with the early weeks of March to search the woods and you will be surprised at the lessons you will learn and at the help these lessons will give you in the teaching of the day. The study of the stones will depend to a great extent upon the locality in which you find yourself. But it matters not where you are, there is something in nature for you to study. The children should be invited to go with you. There may be in school one who, you have thought, was a dull pupil, whose eyes will be opened and he will be born again.

These trips give you splendid opportunities for studying the children—a subject to which but little attention has been given in the years gone by. It would certainly be a very foolish doctor who would prescribe the same treatment for all diseases, yet that is just what we have been doing in the schools for years. The public schools of to-day are over-classified, and originality is crushed out. The teacher in the country school is free to work out the true plan of educating our children. Study rather how you may unclassify than how to classify. Paidology is the ology of the times, and the man or woman who comes nearest to working it out now, will be the pilot into whose hand we shall put the educational wheel by and by. How strongly I am tempted at times to cut loose and go back for a few years to the country school again, where I can plan, study, and work out some of the problems now confronting us. Let me beg of you, good friends, to improve your opportunities. Work out your educational salvation with love and joy.

And now I come to my thirdly. Live much with the poets and statesmen of this and other lands. Make Longfellow, Lowell, Whittier, Bryant, and Holmes your constant companions. Parts of them should be your own. Commit much and in your nature study you will be surprised at the wonderful knowledge these men had of the very subjects under investigation. The speeches of Patrick Henry, Daniel Webster and Abraham Lincoln are fountains from which the more you draw, the more you will find they contain. You need not feel one whit ashamed if you are found in some of your evening strolls perched upon a log, or stone, rehearsing some of these matchless gems. It would be hard for some of us to estimate the debt we owe to the pioneer teachers who, time after time, directed our attention to "Pitt's Reply to Sir Robert Walpole," "Marco Bozzaris," "Rienzi's Address to the Romans," "Massachusetts and South Carolina." Not long since I found myself repeating "Spartacus to the Gladiators at Capua." It has been stored away long years, but it comes back more readily to-day than the minister's text of a week ago.

Lastly, but not least by any means, read the Bible. Not that you may be able to discuss theology. Not that you may be a Methodist, Presbyterian, Baptist or Catholic, but that you may have constantly with you a store-house from which your pupils may "hear the conclusion of the whole matter." "Prove all things; hold fast to that which is good." No other such teachers have ever lived as Christ and Paul. If they have been the chiefs of teachers, where can we find better pedagogy?

Do not understand from what has been said that I wish to detract from the reading of magazines, journals of education, or books on education; nor from the study of the branches you are expected to teach. Far from it. These things say I unto you, that you may have life and have it more abundantly. To sum it all up then: First, study nature. Second, study the child. Third, feast largely in the field of literature—and in this I would include history. Fourth, read daily some portion of Scripture. These things do, and in ten years from this time you will be the chosen people.—Ohio Educational Monthly.

Evils of Overcrowding.

The Forum has two articles on "The Criminal Crowding of Public Schools," which show such an alarming state of facts as to raise the question in the minds of parents having children of school age whether the risks incurred in running the gauntlet of public instruction are not so gravely perilous as to outweigh the possible advantages. In Brooklyn, Boston, Minneapolis, New York, Philadelphia, Milwaukee, Detroit, Buffalo and Richmond the same difficulties exist in greater or less degree. There are not school houses enough to hold the children. There are not teachers enough to teach them. As a rule, the children do not have air space enough, adequate means of ventilation, or proper light. They are packed like sardines in crowded and stuffy rooms, where single teachers are expected to instruct classes often ranging in number from fifty to 100, and even 150 pupils.

Commenting on these alarming conditions the Philadelphia Record says: "Schools where the children are overcrowded for room and fresh air to breathe; where the teachers are overcrowded with work; where light is bad; where the desks and seats are so arranged as to insure physical discomfort, where there is no adequate provision for the care of wraps, and where often the playgrounds are restricted, dark and in proximity to closets giving forth foul odors, are, indeed, schools of pestilence as well as of instruction. They are the ready disseminators of contagious diseases. Would it not be a matter of prudence to remedy these evils before we appoint an army of truant hunters to chase children into dangerous and unsanitary confinement? Or, if we must have compulsory education, should not the area of compulsion be limited to the area in which proper provision shall have been made for the physical well being as well as the mental improvement of pupils? There are 8,000 or 10,000 children of school age in Philadelphia for whom there is no place in the school houses. What are the truant drivers to do with them? Until we shall build school houses that would be fit sanitarily for places of assemblage; until we shall provide capable teachers in sufficient number to permit of the successful discharge of their function, and until we shall properly provide for the physical comfort of both teachers and pupils, even if under any circumstances the State might judiciously exercise such a power, will necessarily be cruel or ineffective, or both."

Pennsylvania University.

It is now 140 years since what had been an academy was incorporated as the College of Philadelphia, which, thirty-six years later, became the University of Pennsylvania. The catalogue for 1894-'95 bears witness to the remarkable prosperity and usefulness which this institution has attained. It includes no divinity school, but all the other departments comprehended in universities of the highest grade are represented, and great pains are taken to assure a large measure of significance and value to each of its various diplomas. The University of Pennsylvania was one of the first, if not the very first, in this country to insist on four years of study in its medical school, and it stands firmly by the side of Yale in requiring a knowledge of Greek as well as Latin as a condition of an A. B. degree. In point of size this institution ranks among the largest of American universities. The professors, lecturers and instructors number 273, and there are 2,398 students, of whom 754 are credited to the college proper and 815 to the medical department, which is the oldest school of the kind in the United States, and has always maintained a relatively high reputation for efficacy.

Prof. Edward Everett Hale, Jr., son of the author and preacher, has resigned the chair of English in the University of Iowa, and will go to Union College, Schenectady, N. Y. Prof. C. D. Jameson, of the chair of civil engineering, has also resigned, to practice his profession.

OLDEST DOLL IN THE WORLD.

Believed to Date from the Beginning of the Christian Era.

Francella A. Hitchcock, in the "Doll's Dressmaker," tells an interesting story of the famous Bambino di Ara Coeli. It is the oldest doll in the world, and, if tradition is true, almost as old as the Christian religion, for it is claimed to have been carved out of a tree from the Mount of Olives in the time of the apostles, and to have been painted by St. Luke. Be this true or not, it has been in the eternal city many hundreds of years and is called the "Ara Coeli Bambino" (baby), because the church of that name, one of the oldest and most interesting in Rome, is its home. This church is built on the site of a very ancient Temple, and its nave is formed of twenty-two columns, the spoils of the ancient buildings, the inscription on the third on the left proving it to have been brought from the palace of the Cæsars. I shall never forget the first day we visited this vast and solemnly picturesque edifice. It was just at sunset, and golden shafts of light illuminated the mosiac floor, lighted up the richly gilded ceiling above, and flashed in wondrous brilliancy over the Presepio, or manger, where lay the miraculous Bambino in swaddling clothes, literally crusted over with diamonds, emeralds, rubies, sapphires and other precious stones, while its neck and wrists were entirely covered with strings of the purest oriental pearls.

In Uncle Sam's Service.

Many of the men who sign for a government appointment have rather hazy ideas of the duties pertaining to such a position. To sit at a desk and write for a few hours daily seems easy enough in the abstract, but how would you like the task of writing your own name every day in the week, from 9 o'clock in the morning until four in the afternoon? You would find it rather monotonous, would you not? And yet this is almost the sole duty of the Register of the Treasury. Then there is another employe of the government who gets $1,200 a year for putting President Cleveland's name to land warrants. This affixing his autograph to appointments, commissions and so forth grows into such a proportion that the chief magistrate cannot possibly attend to it all personally. Hence the necessity of hiring some one to help him in the task. Most of us tire of monotony; in the face of these facts, it must be admitted that there are many more desirable positions than those in the gift of Uncle Sam.

A LIVING SHADOW.

REMARKABLE TRANSFORMATION OF A NORTH CAROLINA MAN.

Strange, but True, Story from the Lumber Regions of a Southern State—Verified by Personal Investigation.

(From the Greenville, N. C., Reflector.)

The following interview has just been given our reporter by Mr. G. A. Rouse, the overseer at the farm of Col. Isaac A. Sugg, of Greenville, N. C. It will interest anyone who has ever had typhoid fever. Mr. Baker said in part:

"I was living in Beaufort County, and on the 2d day of October, 1893, I was stricken down with typhoid fever. I had the best physicians to attend me, and on the 15th day of January, 1894, I was allowed to get up. I was emaciated, weak and had no appetite. I could only drag along for a short distance and would be compelled to sit down and rest. This continued for some time and I began to give up hope of ever getting well. I lost my position in Beaufort County, and having secured one in Pitt County, clerking in a store, I undertook it, but was so weak I could not do the work and had to give it up. The disease settled in my knees, legs and feet. I was taking first one kind of medicine and then another, but nothing did me any good. I was mighty low-spirited. I moved out to Col. Sugg's about four or five months ago and commenced taking Dr. Williams' Pills. I took three a day for about three months. I began to regain my appetite in a week's time, and then my weakness began to disappear, and hope sprung up with a blessedness that is beyond all telling. At the expiration of the three months I was entirely cured and could take my ax and go in the woods and do as good a day's work as any man. I was troubled with dyspepsia and that has disappeared. It is also a splendid tonic for weak people. I say, Mr. Editor, God bless Dr. Williams; may he live for a long time. I know he will go up yonder to reap his reward, for he has done a wonderful lot of good. Tell everybody that asks you about Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People that if they will come to me I can certainly satisfy them as to their merits. I always carry a box of pills with me, and whenever I feel bad I take one."

We were forcibly struck with the earnestness of Mr. Baker, and his statements may be relied on.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are an unfailing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effects of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions, all forms of weakness, either in male or female, and all diseases resulting from vitiated humors in the blood. Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent postpaid on receipt of price (50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50), by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

A Protest.

Bobby had been served with a very small share of pastry and he was doing his best to smother his resentment of the discrimination.

"I am very much afraid," his mother said, "that this pie needs more shortening."

"Mamma," said the boy in an audible undertone, "that isn't what my piece needs."

"Isn't it?"

"No'm. My pie needs lengthening."—Washington Star.

The First Wheelbarrow.

The wheelbarrow is a very old vehicle. The Egyptians perhaps did not have wheelbarrows, but Giovanni Florio, an Italian-English lexicographer, who died in 1625, speaks of a wheelbarrow and Hakluyt, who died in 1616, does the same. It is impossible to say who invented the vehicle.

The Cat's Breath.

A recently-published story criticises the notion that a "cat sucks away a child's breath." This is merely an expression erroneous in its form of a physiological fact. All the felidae possess poisonous breaths, intended by nature to act as an anesthetic on their prey. If a person cares to experiment by inhaling, for instance, a cat's breath, they can easily realize the truth of this statement. Carefully watch a cat playing with a mouse. You will discover that the mouse does not suffer, but is sort of stupefied, as if by chloroform. In the "Life of Livingstone," written by himself, of explorations in Africa, he states that once, when he was seized by a lion and his arm broken, the crunching of the broken arm gave him no pain, so benumbed were his senses by the animal's breath. A cat seeks the child, its soft bed, and the warmth of its body, and lies down on the chest of the infant. Its weight impedes respiration, its breath anaesthetizes the child, and death follows. This circumstance has actually occurred, and medical records conclusively prove it.—Brooklyn Standard-Union.

Close Cultivation.

For some fifty miles about New York, the country region of small farms, and the manner in which each is kept plainly indicates the nationality of the owner. The native American likes a lawn in front of his house, and leaves uncultivated strips near the fences of his fields. Also his preference in the way of crops is for grain. The Englishman and the German devote much space to berries and vegetables, and both delight in displays of flowers before their houses. The Frenchman is sure to be a grapegrower. He, too, revels in flowers, but he fosters those that, cut or a potted plants, will find a city market. The home of the Irishman displays little outside adornment; one is sure to find a pig-pen not far from the house; he raises potatoes, cabbages and corn. The American is prodigal of soil, and lets the difficult spots alone; but the foreigner comes from countries where land is scarce and high, and he uses every inch of dirt clear to the road, making it rich with fertilizers, and finds an ample reward for his industry and skill in the end.

Australian Cedar.

The most valuable tree produced in New South Wales is the so-called red cedar, Cedrela australis, which owes its common name to the sweet smell of its wood. It is much lighter in weight than mahogany, although it bears considerable resemblance to that wood and is used for the same purposes—that is for cabinet work and furniture in general and for the fittings of buildings where the cost is not too great. Where it is kept dry it is very durable. Naturally of a pleasing red, it turns to a deeper and richer color with age, and some trees have a beautiful grain. In the Agricultural Gazette, published at Sydney, interesting particulars are given in regard to the establishment of forest preserves in this timber, and it is gratifying to learn that even in this new country extensive plantations of young cedar are being made every year and are flourishing finely.

KNOWLEDGE

Brings comfort and improvement and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

Beecham's pills are for biliousness, sick headache, dizziness, dyspepsia, bad taste in the mouth, heartburn, torpid liver, foul breath, sallow skin, coated tongue, pimples, loss of appetite, etc., when caused by constipation; and constipation is the most frequent cause of all of them.

One of the most important things for everybody to learn is that constipation causes more than half the sickness in the world, especially of women; and it can all be prevented. Go by the book, free at your druggist's, or write B. F. Allen Co., 365 Canal St., New York. Pills, 10¢ and 25¢ a box.

TRUSTEES.

THE COUNTY TRUSTEES, OLD AND NEW BOARDS HAVE AN INTERESTING SESSION.

A large number of subjects were discussed at the meeting of the Board of Education yesterday, and the new Trustees became a unit in that they should take up the work just where the old Trustees left off and continue along the same lines of progress, they decided to have the common schools of the county begin uniformly the second Monday of September. There had been some notion that it would be better to give the selection of teachers back into the power of the school meetings. But after a full discussion it was seen that such a course would be both illegal and unwise. The law authorizes no other person than the Trustee to select a teacher. It has been held that he has no right to employ a poor teacher when his money will control the services of a good one, and that therefore he has no right to put it out of his power to use his best judgment in the selection. The new trustees wisely decided to continue the old plan and select their own teachers. The new trustees by unanimous vote also decided to give one day of the meeting of the teachers' association as a township institute.

"Teachers Wages" was ably discussed by H. C Shull and others and all felt that good teachers are not paid what they are worth, while poor ones are often dear at any price; and that as far as possible teachers should be paid wages according to their professional ability and their worth in the school room. They will aim to pay about the same wages next year as was paid this year and will also try to give the same length of term.

Mr. Henry Crooks, having had the longest term of service of any members of the Board and having seen the progress and results of grading the schools from its inception in the country was given the subject of "A Course of Study and Graduation and Classification of the Schools." He said that when he became trustee in 1882 the schools were ungraded each pupil studying only what he himself chose to take and that a large number chose nothing but "reading, writing and arithmetic." Many schools had no classes in History and Physiology, while some even had no grammar taught. When Supt. Merica prepared and presented in his County School Manual of 1883, a Course of Study and insisted that pupils should be graded and classified in harmony with that course he and the school officers and teachers who worked with him met with considerable bitter opposition from both parents and pupils. Time, however, has shown the wisdom of these efforts; for to-day there is scarcely a pupil to be found anywhere in the county who is not taking the different branches.

As Mr. Merica then urged, give the pupils plenty of useful work to keep them busy and they will not only make better progress in their studies and mental growth, but it will largely solve the problem of school government. It is seldom now that we ever hear of teachers having trouble in governing their schools, and the pupils (as any observant person can see, and as exhibited in our examinations for Common School Diplomas, and the large number of pupils who annually graduate from our common schools, are not only much farther advanced at their ages, in reading, writing and arithmetic, than they were before this gradation and classification but in addition they have carried along with these the other branches. And besides many through the Young People's Reading Circle have done much general reading and study outside the regular course. The Old Trustees urged the new ones to hold the schools to their present efficient standard of gradation, and to stand firmly by their teachers in placing every pupil in his studies just where he can accomplish the best results possible for himself, the school and the community.

As stated above, a large number of subjects were discussed, and the trustees elect expressed themselves well paid for their time and trouble in attending the meeting. Excepting to make reports this meeting will be the last one of the old Board. Mr. Merica, in a very pleasant and courteous manner thanked them all for the extreme harmony and good feeling that had always existed in all their meetings, for their untiring and unselfish efforts in trying to advance the educational interests in their respective townships and corporations, and for the courtesies so continuously and uniformally shown him. He expressed the hope that the new Board would be just as harmonious in all all its work, and that each Trustee might be the means of bringing about even greater results, if possible, for the schools than that of his predecessor.

HEART DISEASE!

Fluttering, No Appetite, Could Not Sleep, Wind on Stomach.

"For a long time I had a terrible pain at my heart, which fluttered almost incessantly. I had no appetite and could not sleep. I would be compelled to sit up in bed and belch gas from my stomach until I thought that every minute would be my last. There was a feelling of oppression about my heart, and I was afraid to draw a full breath. I could not sweep a room without resting. My husband induced me to try and am happy to say it has cured me. I now have a splendid appetite and sleep well. Its effect was truly marvelous."

MRS. HARRY E. STARR, Pottsville, Pa.

Dr. Miles Heart Cure is sold on a positive guarantee that the first bottle will benefit. All druggists sell it at $1, 6 bottles for $5, or it will be sent, prepaid, on receipt of price by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

A VALUABLE FIND.

After years of study and labor there has at last been discovered a sure and never-failing remedy. It has been tested on patients who have despaired of ever being cured, and the results have been in every case, wonderful. Groff's Rheumatic Cure is unequaled as a positive remedy in all cases of Chronic and Acute Inflammatory Rheumatism, Gout, Lumbago, Sciatica, Neuralgia, especially Ovarian Neuralgia, Dysmenorrhœa and all kindred affections. It is also a valuable Blood Purifier, being especially useful in Eczema, Psoriasis, Scrofula, all Glandular Enlargements and diseases of the Liver and Kidneys. It is absolutely free from all narcotics. Severe attacks are relieved in from one to three days, and a positive cure effected in from five to eighteen days. For sale by Druggists. Children Cry for Pitcher's Castoria.

A Friend's Advice.

Some four or five years ago J. A. Goodyear, a young man full of life and vigor, left the old farm in Calhoun county, for the more active life in the city. Drifting into the telegraph business, he secured a position on the C. & N. W. railroad, at Republic, Mich. In addition to his duties as operator, he was required to sell tickets, baggage and make himself generally useful. Between the exacting officials on the one side and the consistent public on the other, he was worked and worried to such an extent that his health gave out and one day he was carried to his home, after having a severe nervous spasm; he grew from bad to worse until he had to relinquish his position, a physical wreck.

The doctor could not cure him and told him so, but advised him to go to Ann Arbor and place himself in charge of that world wide institution of learning, which he did. He continued with their treatment constantly and faithfully for four long years, receiving little, if any, benefit. While in this condition, a friend gave him a bottle of Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer, with an urgent request to use it. Not wishing to offend his friend, he promised to do so, but did not, because, as he argued with himself, "What is the use of taking that 'stuff' if the most learned nerve specialists in the world can not cure me?" But as time passed he would occasionally think of the neglected bottle of medicine given him and his promise to use it. One day he picked it up and mechanically pulled the cork, measured out a dose and took it; a change seemed to come over him, his nervousness abated, his mind became clear and he thought he felt something of his old time vigor. He continued taking the Vitalizer until he was able to sit up, then to walk a few steps; the sluggish blood in his veins became active, color returned to his flesh and he felt the need of more food. He soon improved so that he sought and became engaged in light labor and earned the first dollar in nearly two years; hope attained its long vacated position in his brain and his friends rejoiced at the wonderful change. Mr. Goodyear is now leading a thoroughly active and successful life which he says he is proud to attribute to Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer, the greatest nerve builder ever produced for nervous prostration, spasms, fits, sleeplessness, mental depression, exhausted vitality, despondency, sexual and general debility. Paulding County and its Bicycle Races.

In company with Clark Brown, one of Butler's crack riders, I left Butler at 1:50 p. m, on Wednesday, May 29, bound for the town of Paulding, county seat of Paulding county, Ohio, distance about 33 miles by the cyclometer, with the temperature ranging from 90 to 98 degrees in the shade, and a brisk southwest wind in our faces. All went well for the first five miles when a sharp turn east was made and the breeze no longer fanned our heated faces, and the sun poured his burning rays on our unprotected backs. A few miles nearly done us up and we were glad to tumble down on the grass under a shade tree to get a little rest. After a few minutes we were again rolling down the hills toward Hicksville. When within a mile or so of that place I attempted to pass a galloping team and struck some rough substance and smashed a seat spring. Undeterred by this mishap we rode on on faster than ever and reached Hicksville at 3 p. m., having run twelve miles in the seventy minutes. Here I made an effort to heal the break and succeeded in tying it up and blocking up the space under the seat so I could again ride, though it was like riding on a wagon without springs. We left Hicksville at 3:50 and made the run of seven miles to Antwerp over a rough road in 35 minutes, reaching that little city at 4:25. We rested here and took some refreshments and left at 4:50 over the Payne road and Paulding pike. The distance by our meter being a little over 12 miles, which we covered in seventy minutes over a road only passably good. We found the wide awake little town all astir in anticipatiton of the coming event. Looking backward I recall another trip to this place made in 1883, in a one horse buggy with my daughter and cousin. When we left home at 2 a. m., reached at sunrise and after one of the hardest of drives reached the hole in the woods known as Paulding Center at 2 p. m., using nine hours to get over what is now about twelve miles, and making very a diligent effort with a good horse over dry, but awful, awful roads. The city was then a scattered collection of log and frame house, not a brick structure in sight, with a very liberal sprinkling of American citizens of African descent. We consumed less than four hours in passing over the 33 miles instead of twelve as before, and over a very fine road and through a well settled country, where at that time there was scarcely a house and only a dense forest on both sides of the road. Now instead of the old tumble down town we find a beautiful square with the beautiful court house in the center and the four streets alongside almost entirely filled with substantial two and three story brick building and the streets paved with hard burned brick, but no water works or electric lights. We found comfortable quarters at a hotel recently opened by A. J. Campbell recently of Toledo. A good supper and an hours' rest, and like boys, which we are, we were soon spinning around the nicely paved streets on our wheels, to get rested, you know. My early morning slumber was disturbed by the familiar voice of David Reese, who, as agent for the Butler company came in during the night with wheels for the races. Breakfast over while my partner yet slept, I took a trip of three miles into the country to visit some old friends, returning about 9 o'clock a. m. I visited the G. A. R, I. O. O. F. and K. of P. parade to the cemetery. Our number were now increased by a half dozen more Butler wheelmen, who came down in the morning, taking a considerable more time on the 33 miles than we had the day before. After seeing the races etc. of the day, the party returned, their return going through the lands once covered by the old "reservoir" about whose banks and forests, DeKalb hunters used to go to hunt deer. THE AUBURN COURIER.

SAY : :

HOW MUCH DO YOU OWE?

Who holds your mortgage? How much interest are you paying? Do you owe a building loan association anything? If you do, how much interest are you paying them? Unless you are better posted than the majority of people who have such loans, you cannot tell. You think you are paying 6 per cent. Do you know (of course not) that you are paying at least 12 per cent. If you think not, just figure it out yourself. Now then, are you not paying 6 per cent interest and 6 per cent premium? Certainly. Well now don't you know that premium and interest are the same thing—its all interest. Can you afford to pay 12 per cent interest to a loan association when even your banks only charge 8 per cent and you think they are charging too much, and when do you expect to have your loan canceled or paid off in full? You have been told 72 or 78 months. Now then, we undertake to say that it will take you 100 months, if you will call on us we will show you so you will be satisfied that we are right. Now then, we are prepared to loan you money on monthly installment plan for 8 per cent, we charge you no membership fee and you do not have to make three or more payments in advance so that if on account of insufficient security or bad title your loan is rejected you will not lose one cent. You pay nothing unless your loan is granted. We are making farm loans at from 3 to 5 per cent with privilege of partial payments.

ANOTHER THING!

There is scarcely a day but what there is some traveling agent for some building loan association in Auburn soliciting business, selling stock upon which they charge you a membership fee of from 50 cents to $1.00 per share, which amount goes to the agent and you never get back this money thrown away. If you will call on us we will take your application for all the stock you want in the BEST (we can prove it) building loan association in the state the INDIANA MUTUAL OF INDIANAPOLIS, and charge you No MEMBERSHIP FEE AT ALL. This is certainly fair. If you have any investment stock in any association just write them a letter and ask them the withdrawal value of same, their reply will probably open your eyes. What would you say if you would deposit $8.00 per month in your bank for one year and wanted to withdraw the same and they would offer to pay you only about $80? The bank would only have to do this in one case to be compelled to retire from business. Now you pay ten dollars membership fee and 8 dollars for 12 months making 108 dollars, you lose the 10 dollars membership fee and 10 cents per share each month for expenses, making 12 dollars, or a total of 22 dollars loss upon which you would receive 6 per cent interest for average time on 96 dollars, making 2 dollars and 88 cts. from 22 dollars would leave you a loser of 19 dollars and 12 cents. In our association your stock is worth all you have paid in, with its interest added, so that upon withdrawal you do not get less than you paid. We want the people of Auburn to become familiar with this matter, and would like to have any that are interested to call and talk with us, we can give you some pointers.

We are still in the Real Estate, Insurance and R. R. Ticket business.

BY WEIGHT.

Ed Baker was in the bakery line before he left old London many years ago, and it sounds queer to hear him tell how they did business there. Bread was sold by weight and the baker was compelled by law to weigh the loaf in the presence of the customer and if it did not come down to the proper notch, he had to slice off a piece of another loaf to make good the weight. If a baker drove a wagon either about the city or out into the adjoining country he must take his scales along and weigh each loaf. If he failed to do so he might be met by a police or other officer who would ask to see his scales for weighing. About everything was sold by weight which after all is about as fair a way as could be for the weight shows the amount of material any article contains.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Dimondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist church at Rives Junction she was brought down with pneumonia succeeding lagrippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results." Trial bottles free at Robbins & McCord's drugstore. Regular size 50c. and $1.00. 1

County Orders.

County orders are good and in great demand. We remember a year or two ago, that for political effect mainly, and at the same time an accidental but temporary stringency of money, with a business man, sent the county orders down a few cents below par. But at all other times for years, they have been up to 100. But the thing we started to tell, is that a number of people are holding orders on which interest has stopped, and they know it has. There are orders amounting to about $4,000 so held. Some of the parties have been talked with personally, and say they do not know where they could lend the money if they should call and get it. Within a day or two several have spoken to us to know if we could inform them where orders could be bought, but we could not. We are sorry our county owes money so as to be obliged to issue orders, but as we have to do this, we are glad our credit is so good that people will hold them without interest.

T. F. Anthony, ex-postmaster of Promise City, Iowa, says: "I bought one bottle of 'Mystic Cure' for Rheumatism and two doses of it did me more good than all the medicine I ever took." Sold by Robbins & McCord, druggists, Auburn. 41tf

BAD WRECK!

On the B. & O., at Inverness, Four Miles East of Auburn.

MAIL AND PASSENGER TRAIN

No Persons Injured, but Considerable Damage Done.

A WHOLE CAR LOAD OF STRAWBERRIES!

The Courier Man gets There Early and Gives all the Particulars,

At an early hour this morning the report was currently circulated that a bad wreck had occured on the B. & O. a few miles east of the Junction and by seven o'clock the reporter was at the scence learning the particulars. All of our readers remember where the big wreck occured about three years ago and by that we can better describe the location of this one which occurred about one mile farther east, and just at the east end of the Inverness switch. The wrecked train is No. 3, a Mail and Express train, consisting of one refrigerator car loaded with strawberries for Chicago parties, a mail car and two passenger coaches, and was due in Garrett at 9:00 p. m. They were on time and running at the rate of about one mile a minute and about five hundred feet east of the Inverness switch one of the trucks under the refrigerator car gave way and soon jumped the track and at the same time worked back when the front end of the mail car struck it and broke its trucks. The train ran perhaps five hundred feet before it was stopped and when it did come to a standstill the mail car was elevated up on the refrigerator, which then had no trucks under at all. The next was a passenger coach and it was also badly smashed, the trucks being torn from under it but did not leave the track. The rear coach was not damaged at all and was soon taken off and run into Garrett. The track for about five hundred feet was also torn up. The worst part of the ruins fortunately is just opposite the switch and trains were only delayed a few hours, as they run by on the switch. The train was in charge of Jimmie Heatley as engineer and Mr. Tompkins as conductor.

The mail and baggage men were in the front end of their car and one of them was blackening his shoes. When the trucks first left the track they noticed it and before they could turn around felt the front end of the car raising up and they both ran to the rear end and were not hurt in the least. In the coaches were only three passengers and they were not injured. It was a very fortunate wreck as no body was hurt in the least. The refrigerator car which was loaded with strawberries was unloaded and the berries that were not smashed into jelly were sent on. The three passengers were also taken to Garrett on the engine. There seems to be something peculiar about wrecks at this particular point. Last spring four cars were wrecked and burned on the very same spot that the wreck was this morning and three years ago one mile farther west occured the big wreck where two freight trains ran to gether and injured a number of people. And about one year previous to that, on west farther about one half mile, two freight trains ran together and done considerable damage and previous to that back east about one mile and a half just on the curve two more freight trains ran together making a total of five wrecks within about six years. The wreck train with a crew of men are busily engaged in removing the broken pieces and raising the cars and putting under new trucks and by the time the COURIER reaches its reader, the ruins will be cleaned up and all the tracks replaced.

LATER:—While at the Lake Shore depot today noon, we met Rev. D. B. Keller who was one of the unfortunate passengers on the B. & O. train that was wrecked last evening. He was on his way home from Columbus, Ohio. He also says there were only three passengers on the train. The other two were in the first coach and were badly shaken up but the jam did not effect him so much as he was in the rear coach.

Rebecca Wilkinson, of Brownsvalley, Ind., says: I have been in a distressed condition for three years from Nervousness Weakness of the Stomach, Dyspepsia and Indigestion until my health was gone. I had been doctoring constantly with no relief. I bought one bottle of South American Nervine, which did me more good than any $50 worth of doctoring I ever did in my life. I would advise every weakly person to use this valuable and lovely remedy; a few bottles of it has cured me completely. I consider it the greatest medicine in the world." Warranted the most wonderful stomach and nerve cure ever known. Trial bottles 15 cents. Sold by Robbins and McCord druggists Auburn Ind. 34tf

Editorial Meeting.

The editorial meeting Thursday and Friday, at Logansport was one of the very best that Association ever enjoyed, and that is saying a great deal. At every place they have ever met, the fraternity of the town, and its people of all classes, vied with each other to do honor to the Hoosier publishers. But at Logansport they must have made it the study of the season. Not the least detail was overlooked, or failed. From the minute the "Innocent" arrived at one of the railway stations, till he packed his collar box to go home, he was under the watchful eye of someone who relieved him of even the necessity of thought, much less of exertion. The city, naturally beautiful and picturesque, has the added charm of a live progressive and busy town, developing its resources in every direction and cultivating at the same time a spirit of intellectual and social development that is charming. Its ladies are charming and and the gentlemen liberal and hospitable. We cannot say enough for either, for fear we may be deemed guilty of a desire to to flatter. The attendance was larger, there were more papers read, more discussions of business matters connected with newspaper publishing than had ever been done at any previous meeting. Of course the association could not agree on all these things, but they gained new ideas by their discussion. The banquet Thursday evening at the Murdock was a very fine affair and was attended by many of the citizens. Friday morning, after a brief business session it was announced that carriage, were in waiting to carry the strangers to Longcliff where the northern asylum for the insane, is located. It is a short distance below the city on the other side of the river. We will give a short, separate article to this institution in a day or two. Returning we went to the old college grounds on the north, near the old Eel River, or Wabash depot. The building is being put into better repair, and the grounds refitted twhen a first class business college will be opened there. The site is lovely, and from there one looks down on all the city, if we except a small part at the east end. To the beautiful cemetery next and over its various divisions were taken next. It has many fine monuments, including one to the memory of the soldiers, which is about fifty feet high, and must have cost the county quite a sum of money. We reached our hotel in time for dinner, and at 1:30 were again in business session. John B. Stoll of th South Bend Times, was re-elected president; F. W. Willis 1st vice-president; Mrs. Dan. McDonald, 2nd vice-president; Mrs. J. E. Sutton, recording secretary; Miss Josie Page, corresponding secretary, and Mr. Bitters tressurer. The ladies of the Association were given a lovely reception Thursday afternoon, at the residence of Judge Roes, of the supreme court. It was one of most marked of the many things prepared by the Logansport people, for the stranger within her gates. Later, all were treated to a free ride on the electric cars out to the old fair grounds, now Spencer's Park. We cannot do justice to the large hearted hospitality of Logansport, but will say with the scottish poet.

"Ah Logan, sweetly didst thou glide," into the good graces of the "Innocents" of the newspaper guild, whose good fairy put them for a brief season into the charmed circle of your people and its newspaper men.

Forty Barrels a Day.

Harris & Buquo., Erin, Tenn., manufacturers of the celebrated Erin Lime, say they have great faith in Drummond's Lightning Remedy for Rheumatism. One of their principal coopers was laid up with Rheumatism until induced to take Drummond's Lightning Remedy. After taking two bottles he went to work, and has since been making Forty Barrels per day. If you want this remedy, send $5 to the Drummond Medicine Co., 48 Maiden Lane, New York, and they will send to your express address two large bottles—enough for one month's treatment. New Opera House.

The brickwork of the new Opera House is now going up, up in the way Picker & Bumpus usually make it go. The walls are now several feet high all around. We are now in possession of more complete facts in the matter of details. The building, as we said is 85 feet long and 52½ feet wide. The walls are of brick on a stone and pile foundation further strengthened with cement. The structure will be fire proof, will have elevated or rising seats with a horse shoe gallery around three sides of the room. The ceiling under the gallery will be steel, as also the ceilings of the main room or auditorium. There will be a steel eye beam across the front, 52½ feet long and weighing 1,800 pounds. The roof will be either steel or tin. The ceilings will be self-supporting. The steel girders will be made by Kerr, Murray & Co. Ft. Wayne. The stage is 25 by 52 feet with four dressing rooms, scenery is furnished by Sausman & Landis Chicago. The stage opening is 28 feet, with an 18 foot drop. The building will be heated by a furnace, and will in all its parts and equipments be of the latest styles. The auditorium and horse shoe gallery will have at least 600 opera chairs with room to add chairs to accommodate 100 more if needed. The whole edifice will be a model and modern institution.

It looks like adding insult to injury to compel China to pay all the expenses of getting licked.

It takes so little to make a child happy that it is a pity any little one should ever be miserable.

It is no excuse for neglecting your duty that it hasn't thus far turned out just as you expected it to.

A Peoria paper says that "whisky is going down a little mite." If it is Peoria whisky we pity the mite.

Boston has a new pump with a capacity of 21,000,000 gallons and claims that it works right up to the handle.

It would be a great boon to the world if man's inventive genius could discover ways of regulating the weather.

Two whales are said to be cavorting around off the coast of Massachusetts, but probably this is merely a big fish story.

It is decided in Kentucky that a man may go gunning for those who cause trouble in his family without fear of legal consequences.

Joaquin Miller probably will not begin the actual work of overthrowing the Hawaiian government until he has another attack of indigestion.

A Cincinnati paper has found out that a quart strawberry box holds only a pint and a half of beans. Well, that's enough beans to buy in a strawberry box.

A farmer living in English, Ind., claims to have a lamb without any wool whatsoever on it. There are plenty of 'em around the Chicago Board of Trade.

The Kansas City Journal says that Justice Harlan "should have confined his animadversions to the proletariat." Here is a sentence which deserves solitary confinement.

Advertising costs money, and so do railroad fares. But as it is cheaper to ride a thousand miles than to walk that distance, so also it is cheaper to advertise than to circularize.

A Cincinnati dime museum advertises "Twenty Trilbys—Twenty Lovely Girls—Twenty Lovely Trilby Feet." One would have thought it impossible to get together so many one-legged girls in Cincinnati.

A New Jersey dairyman sells 13,000 quarts of milk a day. He has only thirty cows. But before we believe that these figures are a recommendation for the Jersey cow we would like to know how many pumps he has.

It is said that the Diamond Match Trust has netted from $1,440,000 to $1,530,000 profits on its capital stock of $9,000,000 in the last current year. It would seem that it would do well to expend a few thousand dollars in chemical research, and get out a safer match.

A fall of nearly 60 degrees in temperature would kill one-third of the population of the globe and cause intense suffering among another third, but in New England it is spoken about as "quite a change in the weather," and is taken as a matter of course.

It is worth noting that the Bank of England has fewer notes in circulation than it had fifteen years ago, and the total active note circulation of England is hardly greater than when the act of 1884 was passed. Bank notes are much less used in business than formerly.

And now comes the harrowing information from certain South African missionaries that Professor Garner, the monkey language man, never interviewed a monkey while he was in Africa, but merely wrote his book there and returned. That signifies little, however. He had spent one winter in Washington while Congress was in session.

"Fresh candled eggs" is a term applied many times to eggs with an intention to deceive the buyer. "Fresh candled eggs" do not necessarily mean "fresh laid eggs." In fact, they may have been laid a year or more, but if the "candling" has been "freshly" done they are what they are advertised to be. This scheme has been worked a good many times by those who desire to work off ice house eggs without laying themselves liable to a lawsuit.

The last new British man-of-war launched is 531 feet long, with an indicated horse-power of 25,000, which places her, with the Powerful, at the head of the list of first-class English cruisers. It is claimed that these two, which were both planned on a similar model, will be greatly superior to any cruisers of the same kind afloat. In view of the tendency of the owners of such vessels to swagger, members of the Peace Society will rejoice to think that the invention of a new torpedo may render them both useless before they are a year old.

The Sultan of Turkey is in a fair way to learn what the world thinks of him. And there is nothing he stands more in dread of than the free-speaking newspapers of the world. He is not by any means a fool. He keeps posted as to what the newspapers not only of London, but of New York and Chicago are saying. The formal utterances of mass meetings and of the various religious bodies, crying out against the fiendish misgovernment and massacre in Armenia and other parts of Turkey, get to his ear soon or late.

A letter received by the Associated Press from a correspondent in Hawaii who is acting as one of the soldiers guarding Queen Lil says that "the Queen is kept a prisoner in the second story of a building, over the writer's head, and passes her time in dancing. It is said that she will be kept a prisoner in her present quarters for the next five years, the term of her sentence." As Lil weighs about 250 pounds net we suspect that five years of steady dancing may prove somewhat tiresome. What is she trying to do, anyway? Is she training down? Is she trying to stamp the jail to pieces or is she preparing for a dime museum hula-hula engagement here.

It is a rare, indeed, that a monument is erected to perpetuate a great disaster which accomplished nothing more than to demonstrate the faulty construction of a bridge and emphasize the criminal carelessness of a railroad company. Yet such a monument has been put up on the scene of the horrible railroad accident at Ashtabula, Ohio, Dec. 29, 1876, in which ninety-two persons lost their lives. Over an iron bridge 165 feet long that had been built eleven years, and that was believed to be unsafe by some of the officers of the road when constructed, the heavy passenger train of the road attempted to pass, but the bridge gave way and the cars were sent to the bottom of the ravine, where they at once took fire, roasting to death many who were not killed outright by the crushing of the cars. Many of the killed, among them was P. P. Bliss, the famous evangelist singer, were never identified, their remains being charred beyond recognition. On the north side of the monument is this inscription: "To the memory of the unknown dead of the Ashtabula bridge disaster, whose remains are buried here." On some of the sides should be an inscription worded as follows: "This monument is erected to perpetuate the memory of a railroad corporation's greed in constructing a bridge for its passenger traffic, which was condemned as insecure by its engineers, and which cost the lives of ninety-two innocent persons." If the lives there sacrificed could prevent a repetition of the cause which led to this accident they would not have been lost in vain.

Men are cheap and plenty in China. Human life is of little account. So when it was thought necessary to lay a province under water, to retard the expected march of the Japanese invaders towards Peking, the Chinese mandarins did not hesitate to cut the dykes and inundate an entire section of country. That a few hundreds or thousands of miserable Chinamen were drowned was a consideration of no importance at all. There were more common people in the land than were needed, anyhow, and disregard of human life is too common in that barbarous country to excite either pity or comment. So the poor people were swept away along with their houses and gardens, and the territory was converted into a desert and a swamp, to keep the armies of the Mikado out of reach of the sacred Chinese capital. There have been inundations before this one, in history, affected by invaded people, to defend themselves. The most remarkable are those which were practiced in Holland. That part of Europe is mostly below the level of the ocean, which is only kept from overflowing the land by immense dykes, built with great patience and expense. When the Dutch revolted against the Spanish King, the troops of the latter besieged the city of Leyden, but the Dutch broke the barriers which held back the sea, and it rushed over the land, drowning out the besiegers and thus rescued the besieged. Again, when Louis XIV., with a magnificent army, invaded Holland, the same resource was adopted, and the grand monarch was obliged to escape the waves by hurrying back to France. But any civilized people who have thus been compelled to drown their own land have always done what the Chinese officials have omitted—they have given timely notice to their own people so that they could save themselves.

The Usual Reason.

Zangwill, the novelist, rarely reverts to humor in his stories, but he is a rare judge of it, nevertheless. "It was in Perth," he writes, "that, puzzling over a grimy statue, I was accosted by a barefooted newsboy, with his raucous cry of 'Hair-r-ald, Glasgow Hair-r-ald!' 'I'll take one,' quoth I, 'if you'll tell me whose statue this is.'

"'Tis Rabbie Burns,' replied he, on the nail.

"'Thank you,' said I, taking the paper. 'And what did he do to deserve the statue?'

"My newsboy scratched his head. Perceiving his embarrassment, a party of his friends down the street called out in stentorian chorus: 'Ay, 'tis Rabbie Burns.'

"'But what did he do to deserve the statue?' I thundered back.

They hung their heads. At last my newsboy recovered himself; his face brightened.

"'Well,' said I again, 'what did he do to deserve this statue?'

"'He deed!' answered the intelligent little man."

When It Rains It Pours.

The Hadramut Valley, in South Arabia, though well known in ancient times, is hardly ever visited nowadays, as the natives are a lawless set and very unfriendly towards strangers. They have a curious method of cultivating the land. The upper surface of much of the soil is sand, which is scraped off by long wooden boxes fastened to camels. Of the sand thus collected dykes are made around the district that is to be cultivated. Next the soil is lightly ploughed, and then the farmer awaits for rain. Sometimes rain falls only once in three years, but when it comes it pours in torrents, and the water is held up by the dykes. The crop then is so abundant that even if the rain fell only every third year, enough grain is grown to last the people during the interval of drought.

Not Improbable.

A Mexican professor of physics proposes to foretell earthquakes by connecting telephones to the pipes of deep artesian wells and to metal plates sunk in deep mountain crevices. Any unusual noise in the bowels of the earth would be audible in the telephone and would indicate trouble.

Dog Farms.

Dog farming is carried on extensively in China. There are thousands of large breeding establishments scattered over the northern districts of Manchuria and Mongolia, and no dog skins in the world can compare with those that come from these parts as regards either size, quality or length of hair.

RT. REV. PETER RICHARD KENRICK.

AFTER serving sixty-three years as a priest, fifty-four years as bishop and since 1847 as metropolitan of the archdiocese of St. Louis, Rt. Rev. Peter Richard Kenrick has been retired. Kenrick has been called the Richelieu of the American Church. He was born in the city of Dublin, Ireland, Aug. 17, 1806, being a younger brother of the late Rt. Rev. Francis Patrick Kenrick, archbishop of Baltimore, one of the ablest theologians this country has produced. Educated in Maynooth, Peter Richard Kenrick was ordained as a priest March 6, 1832. After a year spent as a curate in Rathmine, his learned brother, then coadjutor bishop of Philadelphia, induced him to come to this country, and in October, 1833, he settled in Philadelphia, where he took charge of the theological seminary of the diocese. Bishop Rosati, of St. Louis, feeling the need of a coadjutor, went to Philadelphia to consult with the bishop of that city on the subject. While there he made the acquaintance of Father Kenrick and was so favorably impressed with the young priest that he petitioned Rome for his appointment and was pleased to find his petition granted. Father Kenrick was consecrated Nov. 30, 1841, titular bishop of Drasa in partibus and coadjutor of St. Louis. On the death of Bishop Rosati in 1843 Dr. Kenrick succeeded to the office and when in 1847 St. Louis was erected into an archiepiscopal see he became metropolitan. Bishop John Joseph Kain, who becomes his successor, was appointed coadjutor to Archbishop Kenrick in May, 1893. He is 54 years old, was born in Martinsburg, W. Va., and was ordained to the priesthood in 1863.

TAMMANY'S GRAND SACHEM.

Frederick Smith, Ex-Recorder, Expresses His Idea of the Office.

Frederick Smyth, lately Recorder of New York City, has been chosen Grand Sachem of the Tammany society and recently he was installed in office. In his speech of acceptance of the insignia of office, he said: "The Grand Sachem of the Tammany society is not the leader of the Democratic party. He should not be supposed to be. The leader is chosen by the great body of the Democratic party. I am a politician, and I believe that every man in this country who is worthy of being a citizen should be a politician. It does not necessarily follow that by being a politician one is to be a scoundrel. We do not want scoundrels in Tammany, and we will not have them."

FREDERICK SMYTH.

CHIEF BYRNES.

Thirty-two Years on the Force of New York City.

There is no man better known throughout the country than Thomas Byrnes, who recently resigned his post as superintendent of the New York police. During his more than thirty-two years on the force Mr. Byrnes accomplished wonders and made New York City one of the safest in the world for life and property. It was a very affecting scene when, with tears in his eyes, the ex-Chief went about among the men with whom he had so long been associated, bidding them farewell.

"However," as one of New York paper puts it, "the fact cannot be forgotten and should not be ignored that Mr. Byrnes was conspicuous and powerful in the police department throughout the period in which it was becoming saturated with corruption and at its head when the infamy was disclosed. There would have been neither logic nor propriety in employing as a principal agent of reorganization the commander under whom disorganization and degeneration had reached such appalling proportions.

THOMAS BYRNES.

Thomas Byrnes was born in Ireland June 15, 1842. He was brought by his parents to New York, where he grew up and with which city he was always closely identified. He served through the war as a soldier and in December, 1863, on his return from the field, was appointed patrolman on the police force. The marked career that he made for himself then began. He was promoted roundsman in 1868, captain in 1870, head of the detective bureau in March, 1880, and inspector the same year. He succeeded Supt. Murray in the superintendency April 13, 1892, and received the title of chief under the bi-partisan police bill passed by the last Legislature.

GUARD AGAINST CYCLERS.

Contrivance Suggested for the Protection of Pedestrians.

The wheelmen in several States and cities are finding fault with the restrictions that are being put on them by the law-making authorities. In Pennsylvania they must pay toll at all the gates. In cities they are required to carry lamps and bells and keep "in the middle of the road." So many persons have been injured by careless cyclers running into them, that we suggest that pedestrians protect themselves by equipping themselves with a guard something after the above plan.

THE PEDESTRIAN'S ONLY REFUGE.

Survived Her Fifteen Children.

A very interesting woman is Mme. Rostowska, of Lille, France. Not only is she 112 years old and a major's widow, but she was the cantiniere of a Polish regiment in the Russian campaign, was under fire twelve times and received three wounds. She was decorated with the silver cross. Besides this she has survived her fifteen children, the last of whom she buried at the age of 80.

Telegraphing Without a Wire.

The Electrical Age notes the fact that when the cable between Scotland and the Isle of Mull broke recently communication was kept up without a wire by induction. The distance is two miles, and the telegraph line along the island coast was paralleled on the mainland.

MENACE REPUBLICAN PARTY ON EITHER SIDE.

G. O. P. Disciples Endeavor to Disguise Internecine Strife—Why the Public Has to Pay High Freight Rates—Tacks in Tariff's Coffin.

Embarrassed Candidates.

Republicans who are suffering from internecine strife thinly disguised profess to find Democracy rent and torn by the currency question. Let the gentlemen who are candidates for the Republican nomination next year look to their own fences. Where is Benjamin Harrison upon the silver question? He will talk loosely, of course, about both metals and all that, but he signed the rejected sop to silverites offered by the Sherman bill and was doubtless as eager as Mr. Sherman himself to repeal that same bill. Where does he stand on the currency question? Thomas B. Reed, a promising candidate, twisted and turned, wabbled and worried on the subject matter in the House. Will Mr. Reed define his position on the currency question? Mr. McKinley is so enchanted with McKinleyism and so pleased with himself that he seems to desire that there shall be no agitation of the currency question at all. In his opinion he and his ism will be sufficient for the safety and triumph of the Republican party. Mr. Depew is now, as ever, merely the granger's friend. If being and as how the granger wants silver or wants gold, why the granger's friend is with the granger, but if being as how, as Bunsby puts it, he isn't, why, then, of course!

Levi P. Morton never did say anything, and is consistently preserving profound silence as to the use of the metals. True to a policy of trimming which has placed him on both sides of the tariff, and in his own State on both sides of prohibitory legislation regarding the liquor traffic, Allison is blowing hot and blowing cold on the silver question, assuring everybody that his position is perfectly well understood, the fact being that his position is not at all understood, save as it is meant to be one that will interpose no conviction of his own against being everybody's friend.

Meantime there looms in Pennsylvania the unique figure of Cameron, and across the Mississippi, all and singular, the extraordinary body of Republican silver Senators from California, Nevada, Idaho, Colorado and Washington, who bluntly inform the great body of Republicans, as the chairman of their national committee, Mr. Carter, has informed them, that refusal upon the part of the national Republican convention to declare unmistakably for free and unlimited coinage of silver will cost the Republican party its hope for victory in 1896. The Republican party has the devil on one side and the deep sea on the other.

High Tariff and Freights.

The farmer who complains of the freight rates he has to pay on his food products and the goods he gets back in exchange for them, is beginning to find out that one of the chief causes of high freights is the great addition to the cost of building and maintaining railroads, resulting from the protective tariff. The steel rail trust, created and sustained by the high duty on all foreign rails, has cost the railroads hundreds of millions of dollars during the past thirty-five years. To earn dividends on all this additional capital, the railroads were forced to charge higher freight and passenger rates. Then the cost of rolling stock was greatly increased by the high duties on the iron, steel, lumber, glass and nearly everything else which went into locomotives and cars. And in the long run all this artificially increased cost was paid out of the charges of the roads. Had prices been allowed to reach their natural level the cost of constructing and equipping our railroads would have been very much less than it was; more roads would have been built, and the result would have been greater competition and lower charges.

Protectionists try to meet these facts by saying that we export locomotives and cars, and that therefore we can make them as cheaply as in any other part of the world. It is true that we export some of these things, but as a rule the prices for the surplus exported are much lower than is charged to the home purchaser. Besides, it is only recently that we have been exporting rolling stock, and we ship practically no rails.

As to the question of the tariff keeping up prices, it is only necessary to notice the vigor with which the steel and iron workers fought a reduction in the tariff, to prove that protection makes their products dearer. If the duty on steel rails was abolished, as proposed in the last Congress by Tom L. Johnson, one of the largest steel rail manufacturers in the country, the rail trust would collapse and the price of rails would drop fully 30 per cent. Hundreds of railroads would improve their carrying capacity by equipments of new and heavier rails, and freight rates would steadily decline.

The New Tariff on Woolens.

The attempt on the part of some "protectionist" journals to discredit the new tariff by alleging that under it the imports of woolen manufactured goods are heavier than they were under the McKinley tariff is likely to prove a boomerang.

In the first place, the Treasury statistics have not yet fully shown what the imports of woolens under the new tariff will be. There was naturally a marked increase of such imports on January 1, when for the first time the new tariff on woolens went fully into effect. The restoration of confidence in the winter also tended to encourage freer importations. And, furthermore, the allegations of the "protectionist" journals is by no means confirmed by the latest returns of the Bureau of Statistics.

But what if the imports of woolens under the new tariff did exceed those under the McKinley law? For thirty years and more the manufacturers of woolen goods in America have had excessive "protection" given them by Republican legislation, and the excessive duties levied on all foreign woolens gave the domestic manufacturers a virtual monopoly on almost every kind of woolen goods which the masses of the people use or can afford to wear. Is it any wonder that when this monopoly was weakened by the Wilson law the people should take advantage of it? It would be much to the credit of the new tariff if imports of woolens should have been very much larger than they have been. The new tariff is itself excessively high in its "protectionism," and lays inordinately heavy duties, especially on woolens, which the people will never tolerate when once they begin to realize what burdens they impose.—New York Herald.

No Free Trade in Fish.

The high tariffites do well to fight against free trade in fish. An eminent American scientist, Prof. Mark Twain, of Hartford, Conn., has shown that a fish diet is highly beneficial to the brain, and he strongly advises that each protectionist should eat a whale, a good large-sized whale, or two medium-sized whales. But while this might help the protectionists, it would be a very bad thing for the rest of the country. Suppost that the pauper fish of Nova Scotia or British Columbia were allowed to compete with the herring of Ohio, the codfish of Colorado, or the mackerel of Missouri. What would be the result? The American farmers and workingmen would be able to gratify their appetite for the pernicious codfish ball, the deadly lobster salad, or the loud perfumed mackerel, at far less expense than at present. Then their brains would begin to work, and what would become of our great protective system, the envy of all other nations (especially the Chinese), if once the farmers and workingmen commence to think? Imagination recoils affrighted from the horrible prospect. By all means let us keep the tariff destroying fish out of the country.

What Protectionists Are Thinking.

"Trade among the nations should be as free as the winds of heaven."—Patrick Henry.

"Pa, what is a robber?"

"A robber, my son, is one who takes property that belongs to others."

"Well, pa, suppose he gets a law passed to tax others to pay him a bounty on the sugar he raises, then is he a robber?"

"Pa, what is a Democrat?"

"A Democrat, my son, is one who believes in equal rights and no favors."

"Pa, were those Senators Democrats who stuffed the Wilson bill full of protection?"

"No, my son, they were wolves in sheep's clothing."

Should Unload.

McKinley's Presidential boom is so weighted with McKinleyism that it has no fair chance with the others. He should unload.

Tacks in Tariff's Coffin.

"Protection is not a theory; it is a swindle."

True democracy is based on equal rights for all, special privileges for none.

It is the weak, the helpless and the monopolists that need "protection;" labor, the producer of all wealth, needs no protection, all it wants is justice.—Hon. Tom L. Johnson.

Who filled Pennsylvania with the cheapest imported European laborers? The highly protected coal and iron monopolists. And yet they say they want a tax on iron and coal in order to "keep up American wages."

California protectionists are pushing a movement having for its object the use in that State of only Pacific Slope goods. This is logical, for if protection is good for forty-four States, it ought to be good for one.

When was free trade ever un-Democratic? When did a Democratic convention ever declare it anathema? What Democratic statesman but said it was the ultimate end of the party's tariff policy? What is there so awfully wicked in letting a man buy where he can buy the cheapest, and sell where he can get the best price?

No free-traders? Why, bless your soul, the woods are full of them. The women are all the stiffest kind of free traders. Just go down to any store whose advertisement in the morning papers announces a cut in the prices of some textile, and see the crowd of women actually struggling to get to that bargain counter.—Minnesota Democrat.

The New York Sun is the bitterest opponent of the proposition for a commercial union with Canada, and professes to believe that we would be injured by allowing Canadian goods to come in free of duty. Yet the Sun is the most prominent advocate of the annexation of Canada to the United States. How is that free trade with Canada would be a good thing if that country was a part of ours, but bad when it is under a separate government?

Facts About Putty.

Pure putty is made of whiting and linseed oil. Whiting is made of chalk which is imported from England and ground in this country. Barytes, mixed with the whiting is used as an adulterant of putty, and cottonseed oil is mixed with the linseed oil. Cottonseed oil is cheaper, and a slower dryer than linseed; its use is advantageous to small customers, for putty mixed with part cottonseed oil keeps in order longer.

Linseed oil putty is used more by decorators and painters and other large consumers who use up putty quickly.

Putty made in the Eastern cities of the United States is sold on the Atlantic seaboard and in the South, but not much Eastern putty is sold in the West, for there are putty manufactories in the Northern and Western cities.

We export putty to Canada, Mexico, the West Indies, South America, and the Sandwich Islands. Manufacturers make colored putties to order, and white, brown and black putties are kept in stock. Putty has a variety of uses; a familiar one is setting glass. Brown putty is used to point brownstone buildings and putty is sometimes used in pointing up brick buildings. Black putty is used in stove foundries. Plumbers use putty. Sometimes scene painters reduce it and put it on canvas to paint over. There are three or four putty manufacturers in New York and more in Brooklyn. A single firm of manufacturers in this city has sold more than seventeen thousand tons in a year. These seem like large figures, but they are less surprising from the fact that there are few articles of more common use.

The Centennial Commission.

Governor Matthews has announced the names of the men selected by him to compose the centennial commission. By a joint resolution of the last general assembly he was authorized to appoint a commission consisting of thirty persons, two from each congressional district, and four from the state at large. This commission is to formulate a plan and arrange for a centennial celebration of the organization of the territory of Indiana to be held in 1900. The commission is to report to the next general assembly. The appointees are:

State at Large—Col. Eli Lilly and E. B. Martindale, Indianapolis; Hugh Daugherty, Bluffton; DeFoe Skinner, Valparaiso.

First District—Philip Fry, Evansville; James Burkett, Cannelton.

Second District—Thomas Buskirk, Paoli; John Weathers, Leavenworth.

Third District—Charles L. Jewett, New Albany; Dr. H. C. Hobbs, Salem.

Fourth District—John H. Russe, Lawrenceburg; William Cumback, Greenfield.

Fifth District—John W. Cravens, Bloomington; John T. Irwin, Columbus.

Sixth District—Arthur W. Brady, Muncie; James N. Huston, Connersville.

Seventh District—U. S. Jackson, Greenfield; Charles T. Doxey, Anderson.

Eighth District—Thomas J. Mann, Sullivan; Frank McKeen, Terre Haute.

Ninth District—Eli Martin, Frankfort; C. S. Shirley, Kokomo.

Tenth District—M. M. Hathaway, Winamac; Joshua C. Hadley, Logansport.

Eleventh District—Harry B. Smith, Hartford City; H. L. Goldthwaite, Marion.

Twelfth District—Charles McCulloch, Fort Wayne, and Sol. A. Woods, Angola.

Thirteenth District—James A. Arthur, Goshen; George W. Matthews, South Bend.

The commission will meet as soon as all the appointees have accepted the appointment and effect an organization.

THE comparative exhibit of the state charitable and correctional institutions for the six months from November 1, 1894, to April 30, 1895, has been issued by the state board of charities. It is compiled from the quarterly reports. The grand net total expenditures for maintenance and construction of charitable and correctional institutions for the six months ending April 30, 1895, was $506,509.91; for the corresponding six months last year the expenditures were $523,172.25.

James City, aged 17, and Michael Cryne, aged 19, both miners at Jackson Hill, were caught by falling slate and instantly killed. Mine Inspector Fisher of Brazil, and deputy McCloud of Linton, went over to Jackson Hill to investigate.

How Is Your Blood?

If it is poor and thin and lacking in the number and quality of those red corpuscles, you are in danger of sickness from disease germs and the enervating effect of warm weather. Purify your blood with

Hood's Sarsaparilla

The great blood purifier which has proved its merit by a record of cures unequaled in medical history. With pure, rich blood you will be well and strong. Do not neglect this important matter, but take Hood's Sarsaparilla now.

Connecticut's Capital.

From 1701 to 1874 the sessions of the legislature were held alternately at New Haven and Hartford. Since 1874 Hartford has been the only capital. Hartford was the original capital of the colony of Connecticut, while New Haven was the capital of the New Haven colony. When the two colonies were united (1662) the two capitals were kept for nearly two hundred years.

Labiche's Praise.

Very many people are of Labiche's opinion about pianists. The celebrated laugh-provoking dramatist, after having listened with much attention to a young professional, could find nothing more complimentary to say to him than: "Oh, you noisy little fellow!" at the same time giving the musician a patronizing tap on the shoulder.

XENOPHON knew the names of all the soldiers who were with him during the Retreat of the Ten Thousand.

The Greatest Medical Discovery of the Age.

KENNEDY'S MEDICAL DISCOVERY.

DONALD KENNEDY, OF ROXBURY, MASS.,

Has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures every kind of Humor, from the worst Scrofula down to a common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunder humor). He has now in his possession over two hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston. Send postal card for book.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the right quantity is taken.

When the lungs are affected it causes shooting pains, like needles passing through them; the same with the Liver or Bowels. This is caused by the ducts being stopped, and always disappears in a week after taking it. Read the label.

If the stomach is foul or bilious it will cause squeamish feelings at first.

No change of diet ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it. Dose, one tablespoonful in water at bedtime. Sold by all Druggists.

NOTES ON EDUCATION.

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO PUPIL AND TEACHER.

Short-Sightedness Is Often Caused by Poorly Printed Text-Books—Public Schools Should Be Kept Free from Politics—Corporal Punishment.

How Eyes Are Injured.

Prof. E. W. Scripture, of the psychological department of Yale University, has been investigating a subject that will interest every parent in the land who has a child in the schools. Some time ago it occurred to him that it would be a good plan to find out why there was so much shortsightedness in the children who are attending the public schools, and other schools for that matter, and the result of that line of investigation will be something of a revelation to the fathers and mothers in this country who have little ones in the various institutions of learning. In a word, Prof. Scripture declares that out of every 100 cases of shortsightedness more than ninety cases are the result of school work. A representative of the New York Times called on Prof. Scripture recently, and in answer to a number of questions on this subject the professor said:

"Spectacle dealers are very serviceable to humanity, yet I propose that the parents and teachers of the land join in a benevolent boycott to drive them out of business. I don't mean to boycott the dealers directly, but to boycott the bad eyes by which we give them trade.

"Do you know why you wear glasses for shortsightedness? Did it ever occur to you that somebody is to blame for all the shortsightedness in this world? It seems a strange and almost incredible statement that, with a few very rare exceptions, all the shortsightedness in the world has been manufactured by man himself, yet this is the truth. Manufactured! Yes, manufactured by those who had charge of our childhood's days. Our parents, our teachers, our guardians, and our playmates are the persons to whom we owe the ireparable injury of the beautiful eyes that God gave us all. Manufactured! Yes, manufactured by our early sports, by our early lessons at home, by the occupations of the kindergarten, by vicious school books, and so on.

"I have a couple of children for whose education I must begin to provide; they need and must have something to do; they must have books and toys and school. In a short time the school days must begin. But can I, as a father, send them to the schools for which we pay so much, when I know the chances of ruined eyes? Can I trust them to teachers who will oblige them to use bad books—yes, 'bad' books, for a book that ruins the eyes is just as bad as a book that corrupts the morals? Who is to blame for this difficulty? Not the publisher; he makes books to sell, and will make whatever the school authorities will buy. Not the boards of education; they are busy men of the world, and, of course, have knowledge of the safe requirements for the eyes. Not the superintendents, principals and teachers; they have had no instruction on the subject, and know no better. Are the normal schools and training schools to blame? They are supposed to teach all things necessary for school work, but they are apparently ignorant on this as well as many other subjects

"What is the cause of shortsightedness? It is the amount of work near the eyes which we do during early life, and this is mainly school work. The child's eye is very soft. The strain of near work causes the eye to lengthen, and it does not recover from this lengthening.

"I cannot on this occasion discuss the extensive and careful investigations which prove that shortsightedness is due to school work. The results make it thoroughly safe and reliable to say that out of every 100 cases of shortsightedness more than ninety cases are the result of school work. I also cannot relate the great disadvantages of shortsightedness and the evils that follow upon it; the oculists and physicians can tell the story better than I can. Moreover, I will pass over for the present certain crimes of the kindergarten, although when I think of the little ones now being ruined all over the country I can hardly justify my conscience in keeping still. All small objects and fine work must be held near the eyes, in order to be seen. Consequently all fine work is a direct inducement to shortsightedness.

"But the books in the school—are they dangerous? I will let each parent answer the question himself. Get together the books your child uses in school. Now, I will give you the measurements for the worst book to be allowed in any school. If you have one of the ordinary steel measures used by mechanics you can make all measurements yourself; I mean the steel rule that is marked in sixty-fourths of an inch. Requirements to be met: Height of smallest 'n,' at least 1-16 inch; thickness of line in 'n,' at least 1-1000 inch; distance between letters, at least 3-100 inch; space between lines, at least 1-10 inch; length of line, at most 4 inches.

"I picked up a few school books the other day. Among them was a primer; type fairly good for little children, but under the different exercises were lines in thin italics, which were trying even to my own eyes. Italics should be absolutely forbidden to children under 10 years of age anyway. Should not the conscience of the lady author trouble her for the eyes she has ruined? A beginner's reading book; the very first lesson starts out with fearfully fine-lined italics, type not half big enough for the little eyes. An elementary arithmetic, the same one I had when a schoolboy; best type in the book just comes up to the least requirements for the worst books in the highest grades; more than half the book is in smaller type; and as for the minutely printed portions and the complicated fractions—heaven preserve our eyes! And so on; worse and worse they grow. Compare especially your children's geographies with the specimen. Shortsightedness—it is the blackmail we pay to careless publishers and ignorant school authorities for the sake of getting an education."

The Public Schools.

They must be kept free from the influence of politics. I frankly state that I, for one, would not send my boys to a public school unless I believed the school to be a good one. Whatever other motives may influence parents there is no doubt that many are annually deterred from sending their boys to a public school by the conviction that the education offered to their sons in return for taxes is inferior to what can be obtained by private contract. Though a father may be desirous to have his boys understand early the theory of democratic equality, he may well hesitate to let them remain comparatively ignorant in order to impress upon them this doctrine. In this age, when so much stress is laid on the importance of giving one's children the best education possible, it seems too large a price to pay.

Why, after all, should a citizen send his boys to a school provided by the State if better schools exist in the neighborhood which he can afford to have them attend? Therefore if the State is desirous to educate the sons of its leading citizens it ought to make sure that the public schools are second to none in the land. If it does not it has only itself to blame if they are educated apart from the sons of the masses of the population. Nor is it an answer to quote the Fourth of July orator, that our public schools are second to none in the world; for one has only to investigate to be convinced that both as regards the methods of teaching and as regards ventilation, many of them all over the country are signally inferior to the school as it should be, and the school, both public and private, as it is in certain localities. So long as school boards and committees, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, are composed of political aspirants without experience in educational matters, and who seek to serve as a first or second step toward the White House our public schools are likely to remain only pretty good.—Scribner's Magazine.

TEACHER'S COMING.

Pastime of Parisian Swelldom.

"A white terrier belonging to the Comtesse de Breteuil had on white doeskin leggings the other morning in the Bois when it was muddy, and," writes Vogue's Paris correspondent, "I counted five different coats, all being embroidered with heraldry, on one fat pug in one day during a stay at Biarritz last summer. Another sight there was a small, elegant perambulator wheeled by a page, in which was a black poodle with two squeaking pups, all three curled, beribboned and bangled in the very latest mode. Incredible as it may seem, some have complete wardrobes, with flannel nightshirts and other underclothing. Countess Mensdorff, a well-known Austrian grande dame, was in the habit of serving the meals of her four dachshunds in the daintiest silver and china on a low table, around which the four little black-and-tan creatures sat like babies in cushioned chairs. Napkins were tied around their necks and two maids with white aprons and caps, whose sole duty it was to look after the quartet fed them on chicken, sweetbreads, game, consomme, and custards. The Countess had visiting cards for her dogs, on which were inscribed the following names: Count Aleck Mensdorff, Countess Maben Mensdorff, Count Bob Mensdorff, and Countess Tiny Mensdorff."

War Risks Taken by Lloyds.

The latest novelty risk placed at Lloyds, London, is an insurance for several thousand pounds for twelve months against a declaration of war during that period between any two of the following seven European countries: England, France, Germany, Austria, Italy, Russia and Turkey; premium, 4 guineas per cent. Should peace prevail between all the countries named throughout the currency of the policy, the underwriters will make a clear gain of the premium; but if any one of the countries should declare war against any other of them, the underwriters will have to pay the assured total loss. The rate of premium, 4 guineas per cent., indicates that in the opinion of both assurers and assured the risk is anything but a nominal one.

Bridewell.

In London, in 1522, a palace was built near St. Bride's Well. In 1553 it was turned into a penitentiary, called officially Bridewell Hospital. From this name sprang the custom of calling penitentiaries "Bridewells." The New York Bridewell was built about 1775 and stood until 1835.

Many towns in Europe have local holidays commemorative of some important event in their history.

For Luck.

One afternoon as I was returning from a hunt through a pine forest in Oregon County, Mo., I came upon one of the settlers and his two boys cutting down trees at the back of their cabin. All were coatless and hatless, the sweat stood on their brows and they worked like beavers. They seemed to be in a great hurry.

"What's your hurry?" I asked, addressing the settler. "Have you taken the contract to furnish all the sawmills in the county with logs, or have you mistaken these backwoods for Chicago?"

He stuck his ax in a stump and looked up long enough to reply:

"Well, hits nuther, edzactly. You see, hit's thus way: This moon's been changed nigh onto four days now, und all this time Eller 'n me has been afeard to look out thu back way after dark, fur fear we'd see it thoo thu bush. And then we've had so much bad luck here lately, too, ye see. I made up my mind 'at these trees had to come down. Ye see hit's fur luck."—Arkansaw Traveler.

Giants.

There has been no subject concerning which more lies have been told than about giants. Until it was found that modern men could not be squeezed into the armor at the Tower, it was taken for granted that we had degenerated in size. This is not only not the case, but in the matter of giants we have the advantage of our predecessors. The Emperor Maximinus, indeed, was said to have been eight and one-half feet high, but ancient mensuration, especially in the case of an emperor, is not to be trusted; indeed, from its not having made him taller, it is certain there was no one else nearly so tall. Orestes, it is true, we are told, was ten feet long—after death; but he was not thought so highly of when alive; we may reasonably take eight feet as his ultimatum. Now, Chang was eight feet, and I read that there are two giants at present going about in English caravans who exceed that altitude.

The Fitness of Things.

If you are an amateur elocutionist, and are asked to read at a public or private entertainment, do not recite a piece that everybody knows—the audience feel tempted to join in. Do not recite a piece the humor of which is too subtle for the ordinary average intellect. Make a gesture now and then; it becomes monotonous to hear thirty verses without seeing a movement. Do not recite more than thirty verses. Do not recite at one particular person—it is embarrassing. Do not recite anything about being a sentinel to beauty or a bold blacksmith if you are small and puny—it provokes unkind comment. On the other hand, do not say that you are a frail little flower blown about in a great cold world, if you are six foot high and weigh 170. Last, do not recite anything unless you really know it. A moment's awkward hesitation will spoil the finest elocutionary effort.

A TOBACCO HEART.

Thousands of Americans Can't Get Life Insurance Because Tobacco Has Destroyed the Heart Action and Wrecked the Nervous System—No-To-Bac Works Many Miracles.

Delanson, N. Y., June 17.—Engineer O. N. Bates stepped off engine No. 47 with a long oiler in one hand and a bunch of blue waste in the other. Not a bystander there could help remarking his youthful, healthy look, and active, vigorous movements, and contrasting his appearance with his condition of two months ago.

"Say, Colonel, how well you look!"

"Yes, I am well; better than I have been for years."

"What have you been doing?"

"Oh, not much; No-to-bac cured me of the tobacco habit and braced me mentally and physically. In fact, made me a new man in more ways than one. I had no appetite; couldn't sleep; now I sleep like a baby and eat three times a day with a relish, for the first time in years. My heart action is regular and no longer a bar to increased life insurance. You know throttle pulling requires a pretty steady nerve, and my nerves are O. K. now. One box and a quarter of No-to-bac cured me completely in ten days, after using tobacco forty years. No-to-bac is sold by all druggists. I see the 'King No-to-bac' on nearly every druggist's counter, and made by the Sterling Remedy Company, of New York and Chicago. You ought to get one of their little books called 'Don't Tobacco Spit and Smoke Your Life Away,' and post yourself. They send them free to any one that writes. It cost me $1 to get cured, and I spent three or four dollars a week for tobacco. If I had failed to get cured I would have gotten my money back, as the makers guarantee three boxes to cure any case. I have recommended the use of No-to-bac to many of the boys on the line, and every one of them who got the genuine article, so far as I know, has been cured. Look out, don't let some of the imitations be palmed off on you for No-to-bac."

The cab bell rang, the engineer climbed up quickly on the footboard, stuck his head out of the cab window, pulled the throttle half an inch and the big train rolled away.

Where No Rain Ever Falls.

According to Belzoni, the hottest tract in the world is that between the first and second cataract of the Nile, owing to there being no rain whatever in that region. The natives inhabiting the country do not credit the phenomenon of water falling from above. For that reason all the monuments thereabouts are perfectly preserved regardless of their age. Buckingham found the chalk marks of the builders still perfect on the stones of a structure left unfinished 4,000 years ago.

Changing Her Name.

It is said that the practice of the wife assuming the husband's name at marriage originated from a Roman custom. Thus Julia and Octavia, married to Pompey and Cicero, were called by the Romans Julia of Pompey and Octavia of Cicero, and in later times married women in most European countries signed their names in the same manner, but omitted the "of." It may be mentioned against this view that during the sixteenth and even in the beginning of the seventeenth century the usage seems doubtful, since we find Catherine Parr so signing herself after she had been twice married, and we always hear of Lady Jane Grey (not Dudley) and Arabella Stuart (not Seymour). Some persons think that the custom originated from the Scriptural teaching that husband and wife are one. It was decided in the case of Bon versus Smith in the reign of Elizabeth, that a woman by marriage loses her former name and legally receives the name of her husband.

Folding Opera Glasses.

A French optician has recently brought out an entirely new kind of field or opera glass, which may be folded up flat and carried in the pocket. It has no tube or barrel whatever: the object glass and eyepiece are hinged at either end and to the underside of a horizontal bar, which is capable of being lenghthened or shortened by a simple ratch and pinion adjustment.

Was He Brave or Foolhardy?

An unusually brave deed is that of an engineer named Sample, of the British steamer Federal. While in Champion Bay, Australia, one of the water tubes of the engine burst. It being necessary to stop the escaping steam and water he stripped, walked into the steam and boiling water and turned it off, being terribly scalded in the process.

McElree's Wine of Cardui relieves the agony endured by many women month after month in modest silence. It is recommended by many physicians as the most effective remedy known for painful menstruation. The treatment can be adopted in the privacy of home, without submitting to humiliating examinations or consulting a doctor.

Mrs. W. L. Mitchell of Pratt Mines, Ala., writes: "For the past six months I have suffered awful pains at the time of my monthly periods. A few months ago my husband got me some McElree's Wine of Cardui. Since using it all the praise it should have."

J. W. Pollard, Pleasant Ridge, Miss., says: "McElree's Wine of Cardui cured my wife after four doctors had failed."

Foul breath is a discourager of affection. It is always an indication of poor health—bad digestion. To bad digestion is traceable almost all human ills. It is the starting point of many very serious maladies. Upon the healthy action of the digestive organs, the blood depends for its richness and purity. If digestion stops, poisonous matter accumulates and is forced into the blood—there is no place else for it to go.

The bad breath is a danger signal. Look out for it! If you have it, or any other symptom of indigestion, take a bottle or two of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It will straighten out the trouble, make your blood pure and healthy and full of nutriment for the tissues.

We heard of a fellow the other day who understood that the ratio of 16 to 1 meant that you had to give sixteen silver dollars for one gold dollar, and consequently he was in favor of the free and unlimited coinage of the white metal.

It would perhaps be stretching the truth to say that the corn is growing an inch an hour, but however although notwithstanding at any rate it is growing mighty fast.

Why Independence Day is Celebrated on July Fourth.

Did you ever hear how it happened we celebrate July Fourth rather than some later day? For days the members of Congress had differed over the terms of the Declaration. As the hot summer weeks progressed windows were opened, much to the delight of the mosquitoes and flies of a neighboring stable. The stockinged calves of congressional legs were assailed daily by the diminutive combatants, until at last the persistency of the most stubborn number was worn out on the fourth day of July. Now that the struggle was over the members became hilarious in their good-nature." John Hancock dashed down his great signature in such shape "that George the Third might read it without his spectacles." "Now we must hang together," it was remarked. "Yes," said Franklin, "or we shall hang separately."—From "Colonial Philadelphia," in Demorest's Magazine for July.

FIRE AT ANGOLA.

Fire broke out in Lindsey & Ramsey's hoop and barrel factory at Angola last night and is still burning. The building and all of the stock is destroyed. The Lake Shore depot and other buildings are in danger. An engine and car was sent down from Hillsdale with buckets and section men are watching the blaze. It is thought the fire would not spread any farther. The loss is about $3,000.

SHOW NOTES.

It is the general verdict that the show was a good one. The horses are especially excellent and the acting good, even the jokes were, many of them, new. There were but few snide games or takers, few pickpockets, in fact there was a lack of the toughs who generally follow a show and make themselves a nuisance. They had four bands and made a big parade and the men we met were gentlemen. Altogether the show and its men made a favorable impression. They are at Goshen today and South Chicago tomorrow.

It was a good crowd and caused less trouble than the average show crowd. Marshal West kept an eye on them and managed to nip each disturbance in the bud, as far as possible. Clyde Allman of Garrett got boisterous and the marshal locked him in the cooler. He soon tore up the sleeping bunk, and with the boards of it managed to pry off the window and get out. The marshal caught him, and he was put into jail. Frank Vandolah a tough boy walloped Sherman Gall's boy and was arrested. Today they were taken before Justice Walters who fined Vandolah $5 and costs amounting $18.55. Allman got $1 and costs amounting to $9.30. In the evening, Chris Fell and a man from Garrett named Brooks got into trouble at Berg's saloon, and in the fracas Brooks got a bad cut on the scalp. He was assisted to Dr. Swarts' office where the Doctor and Dr. Will Swarts sewed up his scalp in several places. It is believed that he must have been struck with a beer bottle. Brooks is in jail waiting to get a clear head so he can tell how it happened.

SCALDED.

Dr. Darling's little 4-year old daughter was considerably scalded yesterday. Her mother was preparing to give the little one a bath, but before she had cooled the water, the child somehow fell into it, scalding her legs considerably. She suffered a great deal at first. Dr. Phillips who dressed the burns, dressed them again this morning and found the patient much easier.

WATERLOO. LAST WEEK.

The Sunday school convention during Tuesday and Wednesday of last week was a complete success, and the great numbers attending showed conclusively the meeting were full of interest. The U. B. church was filled at all the meetings. The May convention, held in the U. B. and M. E. churches Tuesday evening attracted general interest, and both churches were packed notwithstanding the heavy rainfall.

Miss Mamie Long only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Long of California, arrived from there Wednesday, June 5th, at Waterloo. She is visiting Mr. and Mrs. Benage Long at present, and has other relatives here and in this locality. Miss Mamie has grown tall, and somewhat dignified, with an earnestness in her looks, manner and speech, that shows she realizes life has its duties. Her many friends are pleased to welcome her.

Mr. Frand Long is making his arrangements to shortly remove from California, when he will take up his residence in Chicago, where he is at present.

Dr. Fry preached an excellent sermon Sunday morning to a good congregation, suitable to the occasion, the holy communion being celebrated. Miss Cooke was received into membership with the church at this time.

Mr Dell Locke drove over from Decatur, to Ft. Wayne with Mrs. Locke and son Leon Friday, where they spent the night Saturday. Mr. Locke returned home by rail, while Mrs. Locke and son drove over to Auburn, taking dinner with her brother's family, Mr. Eugene Trout, and in the cool of the afternoon came to Waterloo, to visit her mother, Mrs. Klutz and other relatives and many friends.

THE ALUMNI.

THE FINEST MEETING YET HAD, GIVEN SATURDAY EVE BY THE GRADUATES.

It was about the finest and most enjoyable of the many enjoyable meetings we have had lately, and the Alumni have just cause to be proud of it. The members and the invited guests gathered at the Hotel Glazier between eight and nine on Saturday evening, and until the banquet was ready passed, the brief time in visiting. There were present quite a number of the graduates of years of ago, including many our people had not seen for years. When all had assembled at the tables, D. M. Link, was seen to be at the head of one of the main tables. He was the toastmaster. And after all had enjoyed the splendid attraction of the banquet he took charge. His opening remarks were in excellent taste, and he introduced the first speaker, J. C. Teeters who has been principal under Mr. Harrison the past year. His was the address of welcome to the class of '95, for it will be the plan, each year, that the Alumni will give a banquet to the new graduating class. Mr. Teeters thus opened up the literary work of the evening, and put all in a good train of thought to enjoy the succeeding exercises, which they surely did. We have not room for his excellent thoughts nor for the others, for a long and brilliant program like this is difficult to reproduce. Miss Mae Rose responded to Mr. Teeters in a well delivered and very appropriate address. Capt. Kuhlman responded to the toast "Our Alumni," and was heartily cheered, as indeed had been the others. The toastmaster next introduced Supt. B. B. Harrison, who spoke very eloquent and feelingly on "Our Public Schools." And as he and his brother M. W. Harrison who also was present, looked about on the bright faces that looked up into theirs, we felt sure they must have been proud of the pupils they had assisted to graduate here. It must have called up pleasant memories. Miss Frances Otto spoke feelingly and reverently of "Our Teachers," in a very able address. Nellie Barns responded to "Alma Mater" in a neat and well delivered speech. It was reminiscent in character and in a lighter vein than the rest, but was well received. "The Absent Ones," by Leila Baker, was nicely and feelingly given. She read letters from several who could not be present including Ollie Buss and Ed. Rainer at Chicago, Gertie Wilson at Little Rock, J. C. Clark at Bloomington, Ind., Mrs. H. C. Peterson at Albion, and perhaps others, whose names we cannot recall. And there were others named, not present, as J. F. McDowell in Mississippi, Frank Davenport at Chicago, and one, Callie Williams, who died a few years ago. The regular toasts, here closed, but a call was made for M. W. Harrison, now of Wabash, who responded in a brief speech, calling up the happy memories this occasion brought back, for he had been several years at the head of our schools and many of the Alumni had graduated under him. The music was by Mr. and Mrs. Milo Calkin, and was a nice feature of the evening. The banquet was excellent and served in good taste. The large dining room was so full, that the waiters at times found it difficult to get about, but they got there, and all were well served. We know, that it was possible to have only a limited number of our people present, but we would have been glad, could every patron of our schools, been there to hear the excellent work done by these young people. We hope to see Auburn School and Auburn Alumni go on, "from conquering to conquest."

A. J. Carmer,

Mr. Carmer died this morning at about four o'clock. He is well known, he had been a sufferer for many years, more or less with some sort of paralysis. Several years ago he was supposed to have had something of this nature, when he was found helpless in his stable where he was caring for his horses. Since then he has had difficulty in walking, owing to a partially paralyed condition, though at time he seemed improving. A few days ago it seems he had something like his old attack and the result was his death as aboved stated. Mr. Carmen was one of our best citizens and his death finds many friends to mourn his departure. The funeral is at the house Thursday at 10 a. m.

Strayed.

MADAME ROBY.

(Saturday Times-Post.)

Indianapolis, June 15.—Mrs. Roby, wife of Edward Roby, owner of the land occupied by the Roby Racetrack association, caused a scene in the state capitol Friday. She came here with her husband the night previous and early yesterday morning went over to the capitol to take the governor and the attorney general to task for their efforts to crush the industry of racing at Roby. She was denied admittance to the governor's private office and left there out of humor, for William A. Ketcham, the attorney general. Mr. Ketcham was preparing a brief when she came in and informed her, as he always does when he has no time to talk, that he could not see her, and explained the reason. Instantly Mrs. Roby seemed to grow frantic. She advanced and threw her hands about dramatically.

"I was sitting at my home," she said, when 800 women, Woman's Christian Temperance union people some of them, came to me and asked me if I knew what Ketcham had been saying against Roby people. I replied, 'No,' and they said that you had stated that every woman and man who went to the races was disreputable." Pausing to catch breath, she went on: "You are a coward, sir, and a liar, sir, and not fit to wear that button." This remark was made as Mrs. Roby caught sight of a Grand Army button on Mr. Ketcham's coat. She made a dive for it, but was not able to remove it. Then she assured the attorney general a dozen times that he was descended from "Jack Ketch."

Mr. Ketcham scribbled away on his brief, only pausing to remark that he would hear all she had to say, but would do nothing. Like a flash his assailant made a dash toward his eyes with her fingers spread open. Then she got down on her knees and in impassioned tones prayed that the attorney general's posterity might burn in hades forevermore. Her imprecations over, she rushed over to Deputy Morce's desk and began on him. He "sassed" back and Mrs. Roby angrily exclaimed: "It's just such people as you that the state labors to support."

Wednesday's Daily:

It sometimes pays to be a Nimrod, a disciple of the mighty hunters of ancient days. L. Bowers is a skillful hunter, and the man who comes along and says, "Bowers, let's go and get some squirrels," or "some ducks" is pretty sure to catch him. Yesterday Ed Weeks did this very thing and the squirrels found it to their interest to get around onto the other side of the tree and keep on sliding around, a trick they have to save their hides. We don't know how many wagon loads of squirrels they got but when they returned and dumped their game bags into Bowers' woodhouse and went into the house to cool off, there were thirty-one people sitting at the table and enjoying a fine meal in honor of his 72d birthday. They do say, that Bowers was scared. But by evening he had so far recovered as to appear on the streets. The complete success of the meeting of course, depended a good deal on Mrs. Bowers who had been let into the secret, and when the friends gathered in, she helped to get things ready by the time the two hunters returned. It was a very pleasant reunion all around.

We were informed to-day that a cyclone passed over the south west part of Jackson township Monday evening June 3 and did considerable damage to Samuel J. Lige's farm. It dug a track through his wheat field which looked as if the work had been done by a steam dredge, and in the woods considerable damage was done.

Thursday's Daily.

James A. Barns and wife left this morning for Logansport where they will attend the Northern Indiana Editorial Association. Mr. Barns is on the program for a paper entitled "News or Filling—Which?" This afternoon the Association will hold a picnic at Spencer Park, and this evening will hear a lecture, delivered by Rev. J. M. Driver, D. D., of Marion upon, "The Newspaper Editor and His Two Bowers." Friday will be devoted to a carriage ride about the city and the closing business session of the convention.

Hon. S. S. Shutt of Spencerville was in town yesterday in the interest of the gravel road case. This case has been set for hearing next Week.

Our heavy weight shoe man, Jake Rant, was celebrating his twenty-seventh birthday yesterday. To do this up in style he went down to Ft. Wayne. He left the store nearly an hour before train time and went to the depot. Here he sat down and was busily engaged in a conversation when the train pulled in. Jake happened to think he had not bought a ticket and hustled into the office but of course the agent was out attending to the train and he was compelled to pay full fare to the conductor from Auburn to Ft. Wayne and return. Jake informed us last evening he would take our scalp if we mentioned it but it amused us and we give it to our readers and will publish our obituary later.

Early this morning, a young man started up the Waterloo road, "awheel" and from that point will take the Coldwater road or the road to Hamilton, and in a general way work up in the direction of Adrian, from which point he will run to his home at Tecumseh, Mich. His name is Henry McClure, and his starting point, was Wabash College at Crawfordsville, Ind., where he has been a student for some time. After a brief rest at Tecumseh, he starts for Europe, where he will spend the summer in travel, going on a bicycle. He expects to assist in paying the expense of the trip by writing letters to various Indiana newspaper giving a description of the place visited and the noted things and persons seen. A fellow student will accompany him and will furnish correspondence of a of a similar kind to Michigan,

We met J. N. Cool Ex Sheiff Ralston and Sidney Cool, on the streets at Logansport Thursday. Mr. Cool is, we are told, doing well in his buggy factory there, with lots of business and excellent prospects. Mr. Ralston had gone down there a week or so ago to help him through a rush of business. We think he will be home Monday, Yesterday we visited briefly at the home of Mrs Cool, and found her well and comfortably situated The same may be said of Mrs McQuiston, whom we met at her home, near by. She is in better health than she has been for a long time. Mr. McQuiston is book-keeper in Cool's factory. Walking along the street in the evening we were accosted by Charlie Snell an Auburn boy, and passed a half hour very pleasantly with him. He is a cook and since he has been at Logansport has been employed part of the time at the Murdock and part of the time at a leading restaurant. He is evidently doing well, and a business man who happened to come up spoke highly of him.

We were agreeably surprised last evening by a call from Miss Mamie Long of SanDiego, California. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ed Long, formerly residents of this place and of Waterloo. She came to Waterloo a week ago and will spend the summer with friends here and at Pleasant Lake, The former little girl is a mature young lady but she finds plenty of friends to welcome her to the old neighborhoods.

Samuel Pepple of Smithville, Texas has been at home several days, and we came on him by accident to-day. He says every thing is o. k. down there though it has been hot and dry. And we are seriously studying over the question, "What calls Sam up here?"

People going along by Hoff's grocery wonder what anyone could do with those clay pipes, the stems of which are nearly two feet in length. They were brought back from Germany by Charley Hoff on his recent visit to the old home, and are said to be used a good deal over there. To us they are a sort of curiosity.

The two Mercer boys from Corunna were here to-day, and accumulated a big jag. When they left town they were trying to get up a little Chino-Japanese war among themselves. In some manner they managed to jerk their horse till it fell down two or three times. We don't know how they got home and we think they didn't care.

Mrs. D. C. Marvin, who lives southeast of town, was greatly surprised yesterday, for she had forgotten it was her 58th birthday. She was spending the day with neighbors, when Mr. Marvin told her she had callers at home. She was greatly taken back when she found the house full of friends, from both town and country, and they had baskets full of good things. That insured a big supper, which all enjoyed of course. Then there were many presents for Mrs. Marvin. It was a joyful day.

Summer Complaint.

I have two little grand children who are teething this hot summer weather and are troubled with bowel complaint. I give them Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy and it acts like a charm. I earnestly recommend it for children with bowel troubles. I was myself taken with a severe attack of bloody flux, with cramps and pains in my stomach, one third of a bottle of this remedy cured me. Within twenty-four hours I was out of bed and doing my house work. Mrs. W. L. Dunagan, Bonaqua, Hickman Co., Tenn. For sale by Robbins & McCord. 23 6

Reader, did you ever take SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR, the "KING OF LIVER MEDICINES?" Everybody needs take a liver remedy. It is a sluggish or diseased liver that impairs digestion and causes constipation, when the waste that should be carried off remains in the body and poisons the whole system. That dull, heavy feeling is due to a torpid liver. Biliousness, Headache, Malaria and Indigestion are all liver diseases. Keep the liver active by an occasional dose of Simmons Liver Regulator and you'll get rid of these troubles, and give tone to the whole system. For a laxative Simmons Liver Regulator is BETTER THAN PILLS. It does not gripe, nor weaken, but greatly refreshes and strengthens.

Good For a Cough.

While at Peekskill, N. Y., Mr. J. A. Scriven, a prominent manufacturer of New York City, purchased a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. Such good results were obtained from its use that he sent back to the druggist from whom he had obtained it for two more bottles of the same remedy. When you have a cough or cold give this preparation a trial and like Mr. Scriven you will want it when again in need of such a medicine. It is a remedy of great worth and merit. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord. 23-6

Costs But a Trifle.

While in Topeka last March, E. T. Barber, a prominent newspaper man of La Cygne, Kan., was taken with cholera morbus very severely. The night clerk at the hotel where he was stopping happened to have a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy and gave him three doses which relieved him and he thinks saved his life. Every family should keep this remedy in their home at all times. No one can tell how soon it may be needed. It costs but a trifle and may be the means of saving much suffering and perhaps the life of some member of the family. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord. 23 6

Sometime ago I was troubled with an attack of rheumatism. I used Chamberlain's Pain Balm and was completely cured. I have since advised many of my friends and customers to try the remedy and all speak highly of it. Simon Goldbaum, Sant Louis Rey, Cal. For sale by Robbins & McCord. 23-26

KICKED

Harry Williamson came near being seriously hurt Sunday evening. He was looking at the showmen as they unloaded at the Junction, and when they took out the ponies, he was asked to hold one of them. It became uneasy in a little while and began to struggle and kick. Harry was hit above the eye, and an ugly cut made. He was taken to Mr. Clark's and the wound washed, and fortunately it was not serious.

THE NEWS RECORD.

SUMMARY OF A WEEK'S HAPPENINGS.

The Latest News as Flashed Over the Wires from All Parts of the World—Regarding Politics, Religion, Casualties, Commerce, and Industry.

A Disastrous Conflagration.

As the result of a fire at Greenville, Ohio, which started in a stable at the rear of the Winter block, the large wholesale store of Westerfield Bros. is in ruins, as are the steam laundry, Daily Tribune and Courier newspaper offices, the Methodist Episcopal church, Deutsche Umschau, Dr. Matchett's office, the large livery stable of H. E. Davis on the north side of Third street, and the home of Mrs William Sullivan, adjoining. The fire was the work of incendiaries, and in the excitement thieves looted the town. Two ineffectual attempts were made to set fire to other buildings in different parts of the city. Two persons were injured. They are Charles Dairymple of the Mozart store and Dell Daugherty, a member of the city fire department. The entire loss at a conservative estimate will reach $225,000.

Saloonists Can Sell on Prescriptions.

In the trial of a case before Mayor Cochran of Bourneville, Ohio, a new construction was placed on the liquor laws of Ohio which, if sustained by the higher Courts, will produce a radical change in prohibition communities. Bourneville has a prohibition ordinance, and Martin Frey, who sold liquor in his general store before the ordinance was passed, was arrested for violating it. At the trail Frey admitted selling the liquor, but in defense produced a prescription of a physician of Bourneville, on which it was sold. The prosecution claimed that the right to sell liquor on a physician's prescription was vested alone in druggists, but in Mayor Cochran's Court a different view was taken and Frey was acquitted.

Price of Pig Iron Advanced.

The Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Company, the largest iron producers in the South, have announced another advance of 50 cents per ton in the price of Southern pig iron. This raise makes an advance of $1.50 on No. 1 foundry since May 1. The practical consummation of a selling pool between the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Company, the Sloss Iron and Steel Company and the Pioneer Mining and Manufacturing Company, which produces nine tenths of the Southern iron, gives these three big concerns control of the Southern market, and the advance is looked upon as the first result.

Horrible Suffering.

Los Angeles (Cal.) special: One of the survivors of the wrecked sloop Crest, who returned from San Clement's Islands, tells of the sufferings of himself and companions. After being struck by the storm the sloop drifted around for several days. The water and provisions giving out, they killed a dog and drank his blood which kept them alive till the shore was reached. One of the party went crazy from thirst before the camp of the hunters on the mainland was reached. Here they were fed and cared for, and after several days' rest were sent to San Pedro on a sloop.

Tramp Thieves.

At South Bend, Ind., three tramps climbed from the roof into a freight car on the Lake Shore Road where were eight other tramps. After robbing them of what valuables they possessed one started to climb back on the roof. He was drunk and fell on a cattle guard, breaking his back and died shortly afterward. One of the other two claimed to be his brother. Both then drove the eight out of the car while running at 25 miles an hour. None were hurt. The dead man's identity is not known.

Frightful Explosion.

The Union Cotton Press, situated at the corner of South Peters and Terpsichors street, New Orleans, was the scene of a terrible explosion, which resulted in one man being killed and a dozen wounded, and seven or eight missing. The Union press is one of the largest presses in the city and was operated by the firm of Frankenbush & Bortand, the structure covering nearly the entire square running from South Peters strset to New Levy street.

Frightful Collision.

Elkins (W. Va.) special: On the Dry Fork Railroad, a squad of railroad workmen had boarded a car of lumber and undertook to run it down a grade by the brakes alone. It crashed into a handcar on which were five men going to work. John Dailey was crushed into a shapeless mass; Michael Kitterman, arms and legs cut off; Felix Ray, back broken; Solomon Willoughby, both legs and one arm broken; Michael Doran, injured internally.

A $10,000 Steal.

The theft of a $10,000 package while in the custody of the postoffice, has just come to light at Montgomery, Ala. Josiah Norris & Co., sent the package to a New York bank and a postal agent had the receipt from the Montgomery postoffice. Charles Armstrong, an employe of the postoffice, came in with the pouch empty. He said he found it on the street. He is under arrest.

Overlooked by Burglars.

Expert burglars visited Cedarville, Ohio, and made a good haul. The safe of Andrew Bros. & Co. was broken into and about $500 taken. There were several thousand dollars in notes in the safe left undisturbed, while $30 in money was overlooked.

The Festive Hopper.

Swarms of grasshoppers alighted on an oat field on the infirmary farm, at Sandusky, Ohio, and completely annihilated it. A piece of meadow land was treated the same way, leaving it as though a flock of sheep had grazed on it for a week.

Fell Into a Furnace.

Harry McCoolage was repairing the top of a furnace stack at Heckshe's Iron Works, near Conshohocken, Penn. The fires had been partially drawn. By some means McCoolage fell inside the stack and plunged down 65 feet into the furnace, where his body was quickly cremated.

Tramped to Death.

Jacob Coit was tramped to death by a stud horse belonging to George Harpster, at Ottoville, Ohio.

Balloonist Killed.

Battle Creek (Mich.) special: Fred Pate, colored, of this city, was killed while making a balloon ascepson at Marcellus. The balloon had ascended but a short distance when Pate discovered that it was leaking. It floated over a clump of trees and remained perfectly still. It was impossible to use the parachute and the aeronaut finally dropped into a tree. He managed to grasp a limb and hold on for a moment, but it broke and he was dashed to the ground, two of his ribs being driven into the lungs. He lived about two hours. A large crowd witnessed the accident. Tate had made hundreds of ascensions and once before was nearly killed.

UNDER WALLS.

Horrible Explosion at Fall River, Mass.—Many Crushed to Death.

Fall River special: The worst catastrophe that has visited this city since the granite mill fire, occurred at the Langley loom harness shop, on County street. A new boiler of the Kendall make exploded in the basement of the two-story wooden building, blowing out the entire end of the structure, knocking the supports from side and allowing the upper floor to settle into a mass of ruins. There were forty-five persons at work in the shop, and only nine are known to have escaped alive. Among those were Henry J. Langley, the proprietor; George E. Davot, the foreman, and two girls named Champaigns and Desrosiers. The flames communicated with the ruins and they began to burn briskly. The firemen rushed to the scene and made heroic efforts to rescue the imprisoned work people. Shrieks of girls in the ruins were mingled with the agonizing cries of their friends who hurried to the scene when the first news of the catastrophe occurred. Ambulance cabs were sent out hurriedly and every physician who could be reached was sent at once to the scene. The offices and houses in the vicinity were turned into temporary hospitals.

There are about fifty persons employed in the shops, the greater percentage being women. Machinist Tripp was among those who escaped, also a girl named Jambert and her sister-in-law, who worked side by side on the third floor. One was unhurt and the other was slightly bruised. The Jambert girl says that none of the girls or men knew what had happened. There was a terrible report followed by a shock; the roof seemed to lift and then fall completely demolishing the whole building. The Jambert girl and her sister-in-law were thrown into the middle of the road. The former escaped uninjured, but the latter was badly cut about the face and arms.

SINKING.

An Entire Town in Danger of Disappearing.

Hazleton (Penn.) special: On Monday night the supporting pillars in the Beaver Brook Mine began to give way and the town of Audenried, which is built immediately over it, was thrown into a state of wildest excitement. The gangways of the mine are 600 feet below the surface, and a total collapse meant the complete destruction of the town. The people were warned of their peril by fissures and openings which appeared in the earth between the hotel and company store and immediately beneath the houses of the most prominent townspeople. Several buildings careened to one side, throwing the occupants from their beds.

The possibility of being buried alive was too horrible to contemplate. People went frantic, and pandemonium reigned throughout the town. The openings in the earth continued to become wider and more numerous, and a total collapse was momentarily looked for. The internal disturbance continued all night, but the crash did not come. The people camped in the meadow a safe distance from the coal vein's outcrop. Nobody thought of saving household effects, and these are left in the houses until the settling ceases, or the sinking takes place and they are swallowed in the earth. Among the houses destroyed are those of Mine Superintendent D. R. Roberts, General Manager H. E. Lubken, John McGee, and Wm. Bailey. The disturbance has not yet ceased, and the greatest excitement prevails.

WIDESPREAD.

From Every Part Come Tidings of Business Prosperity.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade says:

"It is no longer a question whether business improves. Not for a long time have our reports from all parts of the country been so uniformly favorable. The daily average of bank clearings in June is 24.8 per cent. lorger than last year, though 11.4 per cent. less than in 1892. The most potent influence has been the receipt of more favorable advices regarding growing crops. Even official statements helped, because altogether less gloomy than previous rumors. Labor troubles are getting out of the way, wages in many establishments are rising, and with the iron industry just now leading, there is general improvement in manufactures. Monetary conditions also help. The time draws near when, with good crops, exports will bring gold hither, and though foreign operations in stocks and bonds have been insignificant during the week, the effect of previous transactions has not been exhausted. Much diminished receipts of money from the interior indicate better employment in business, especially at the West, and the volume of commercial loans steadily rises, and is now fair for this season, even in a good year."

TOWN IN RUINS.

Geneva, Ind., Is Visited by a Most Disastrous Conflagration.

Geneva, Ind., was visited by a most serious conflagration. Fire was discovered in A. J. Judy's frame grocery store building on Line street, between the Shamrock Hotel and the Grand Rapids and Indiana railroad depot. The grocery is in a row of small frame buildings, and despite the efforts of the firemen the flames spread with unrelenting fury. The sparks flew in all directions and in a very few minutes Line street on both sides for a distance of a block and a half was in a sheet of flames. The citizens were in a fever of excitement, as the entire town seemed doomed. The alarm was sounded and all occupants of the threatened buildings were rescued without the loss of a single life. The flames spread fast and furiously, and within a few hours thirty Line street business houses were reduced to ashes. The Grand Rapids and Indiana depot was burned, and all telegraphic communication cut off. The loss will reach $100,000.

A Man Afire.

With forked tongues of fire leaping from every part of his body, his face livid with agony, while hundreds of people witnessed the man's torture, Joseph Tumas, employed at the rolling mills, at East Chicago, Lake County, ran down the streets of that town, his clothing being a mass of flames. At every step Tumas cried aloud in his agony, and with the superhuman strength of a mad man fought off his fellow laborers, who attempted to stop him in his mad race for life. Exhausted at last and with pieces of cooked flesh dropping from his body, Tumas sank to the ground, and when assistance arrived nearly every vestige of clothing had been burned from his body, while the smell of burning flesh filled the air. Tumas' clothing caught fire from an explosion of cinder, in the East Chicago Rolling Mills.

Forest Fires Still Raging.

Bradford (Pa.) Special: Forest fires continue to destroy property. The other night word came from Simpson stating that the flames were dangerously near to the wells of Urquhart and Lavens and that it would be difficult to save the property from destruction. A force of 150 men had a hard fight with the destroying element near Lafayette Corners. Nearly 2,000,000 feet of lumber at W. D. Johnson's mill was destroyed, entailing a loss of $150,000. The lumber was partially insured. The mill was saved. Another fire near Taintor's destroyed a large quantity of wood for Hamlin & Knowles. Fires are reported from various other parts.

Effect of the War in Colombia.

The State Department at Washington has received information of the serious devastation the revolution in Colombia is causing. It also shows the very straitened circumstances in which the government finds itself, owing to the war. The government is out of funds and is making tax levies, which are very hard to bear, placing onerous export and excise taxes on coffee, which is the principal crop of the country. The revolution also has drained the country of men and has resulted in the destruction of crops and of animals used for transportation.

Against the Saloons.

The Synod of the Reformed Church of America which has been in session at Grand Rapids, Mich., adopted a resolution declaring against saloons and resolving that the Synod, as a body, and the members, as individuals, do all in their power to discourage the rum traffic. The permanent committee on Sabbath observance spoke in the very highest terms of the work being done by the clerks' union throughout the country in forcing the business houses in many cities to close their doors on Sunday. The next meeting will be held at Catskill, N. Y., in June, 1896.

Otto Gresham Declines an Office.

Washington Special: Otto Gresham, son of the late Secretary Gresham, was in the city recently settling up his father's private business here. He also called and paid his respects to the members of the cabinet. The president proffered a lucrative office to young Gresham, but he declined it, preferring to stick to his law practice, which affords him a handsome income. Mr. Gresham says that there is nothing in the report that a large subscription had been made up at Chicago and given to his mother, nor is such a subscription asked or expected.

Gold in Oklahoma.

Never in the history of Oklahoma has there been such excitement as there is over the finding of gold in Washita county. Old miners say the ore is richer and better than the mines of California and New Mexico. The tests have been made for forty miles up Boggy creek and the veins get richer. Towns near gold fields are nearly depopulated by the citizens leaving for the gold regions, also the farmers. The town of Villa Rico, near the mines, was laid out five days ago, and has many thousand inhabitants.

A Plague of Grasshoppers.

A strange phenomena was witnessed near Elkhart, Ind., recently, when an immense horde of grasshoppers swooped down upon the farm of Trustee Schillinger, living about six miles south. Nothing but the bare stems of wheat, clover and potato vines were left by these strange pests. His crops were entirely ruined. Other farms near by met with similar devastation. Such a sight has never been before witnessed in this section.

Opening of the Canadian Soo Canal.

Sault Ste Marie (Mich.) special: The opening of the Canandian Soo canal took place here recently. The new canal opens through St. Mary's Island, on the north side of the rapids of St. Mary's River and with the river, provides Canada with independent communication between lakes Huron and Superior. The total length of the canal and its approaches is 18,100 feet. The total cost has been $4,000,000. The St. Mary's River is spanned by an immense swing bridge for the Canadian packet traffic.

Two Jail-Birds Escaped.

Leonard Devine, charged with malicious destruction of property, and Edward Purcell, who had pleaded guilty to a charge of gambling, and been fined $50, escaped from the county jail at Zanesville, Ohio, in a daring manner. A confederate on the outside had given them tools, with which they unlocked the safety door. They then asked Sheriff Worstall's wife for a newspaper, and when she opened the door knocked her down and escaped.

Fatal Cyclone.

Guthrie (O. T.) Special: A small cyclone, accompanied by the heaviest rainfall ever known in Oklahoma, visited this section recently. The electric light tower on Capitol Hill in this city was demolished, and over forty houses and barns were blown down near Carney. Fred Dodge, a farmer, was struck by lightning and killed. No other casualties were reported.

Spain Will Buy Warships.

Madrid special: The royal asent has been given the bill adopted by the Senate the other day, authorizing the Government to raise, in case of need, a loan of 600,000,000 pesetas on account of Cuba. It is believed that vessels will be purchased abroad and sent to Cuba in order to more thoroughly patrol the coast of that island.

Might Be a Lynching.

Miss Edna Williams, a popular young woman of Galliopolis, Ohio, was assaulted in an outrageous manner late the other evening by a negro named Edward Broyn. Brown was arrested and locked up. The jail is guarded, as there is considerable talk of a lynching.

Fell Into the Fire.

Jacob Abrahamson, aged 75, living near Valparaiso, Ind., while burning brush, was overcome by the heat and fell on the blaze. Before assistance reached him his clothes were burned nearly off. His injuries are considered fatal.

Presidential Plums.

The President has made the following appointments: Allen Thomas, Consul General to Venezuela; Emory F. Best, Assistant Commissioner General of the Land Office.

TORN DOWN BY MOBS.

CHENG-TU MISSIONS WRECKED BY HEATHEN.

Reports of Rioting Confirmed, but It Is Possible the Missionaries Escaped—Other Places Threatened—Terre Haute Fears Saloon Interests.

Viceroy Liu Blamed.

Shanghai advices say the report of the total destruction of the missions of Ching-Tu-Fu, Kiating and Yoachohu has been confirmed. The local officials refused protection to the missionaries until the mob had completed the work of demolishing the buildings. The mission stations at other places have been threatened. About twenty adults, besides a number of children, took refuge at Ching-Tu-Fu and Yamen. Viceroy Liu is blamed for the affair.

Cheng-Tu is the capital city of the province of Se-Chuen, the westernmost and largest province of China. It borders on Thibet, and has a population of 35,000,000 people. Cheng-Tu is the largest of seventeen cities numbering over 100,000 inhabitants each. The city is situated in a hilly region, and the country around it is poorly cultivated. The province is seamed by mountain ranges, and only a few valleys of the 200,000 square miles embraced in the province are susceptible of a high degree of cultivation. The people of the hilly and mountainous district, including the region around Cheng-Tu, are semi-barbarous. They kept up tribal organizations, and not only are warlike, but bitterly opposed to foreigners. Cheng-Tu is from 800 to 1,000 miles from the seacoast, and the whole province of Se-Chuen is inaccessible by water except in the rainy season, when the river Yang-tse-

MAP SEOWING CHING-TU AND SURROUNDING TERRITORY.

Kiang, in the southern part of the province, is navigable for local traffic.

Wu-Chang, the point to which a French gunboat is said to have gone, is in the province of Hupeh, adjoining Se-Chuen on the east. It is a city of 800,000 inhabitants, at the head of navigation for seagoing vessels on the Yang-tse-Kiang, and is 600 miles and more from the scene of the reported massacre of Christians.

Not Reported in Washington.

The Chinese legation in Washington has received no information as to the reported massacre of missionaries. It is stated at the legation that Cheng-Tu is a large city in the interior of China. The people are far removed from the centers of foreign commerce such as Canton and Shanghai. Recently, however, by the treaty of peace with Japan, the interior city was one of several places to be opened to foreigners and foreign commerce. This, it is explained, has agitated the people, who lived by themselves from time immemorial. The missionaries are the only foreigners who have heretofore settled at Cheng-Tu. Their number is not known. It is said, however, that the number of missionaries, including their families, in the entire province of Se-Chuen, of which Cheng-Tu is the capital, must be less than 100, including all nationalities.

ROMANCE AND TRAGEDY.

Case in Which Marriage and Murder Are Singularly Mingled.

A remarkable ending to a romance and tragedy occurred at Lebanon, Ind., recently when Mrs. George T. Galt married William Jackson, who twenty years ago shot and killed her first husband and who had been at the time sentenced to twenty-one years' imprisonment.

In January, 1875, the place was thrown into the wildest excitement by the shooting of George T. Galt, one of its wealthiest residents, by Lawyer William Jackson. Three years prior to the tragedy John C. Davis was cashier of the First National Bank of Lebanon and a highly respected citizen. He was the father of three girls, and upon them he bestowed all his affections, his wife having died a few years before. His greatest desire was that his daughters might each wed a man who was well supplied with this world's goods and of irreproachable character. When May, his eldest, began receiving the attentions of William Jackson, a young law student, with apparent favor, the father entered strennous objections and forbade the would-be lover to again call on his daughter.

About a year afterward May was married to George T. Galt, a widower, who, besides being one of the wealthiest men in Lebanon, was known to a few to be quite a sport.

Happiness did not reign supreme in the Galt home, and as the husband grew more reckless, Mrs. Galt left him in December, 1874, and began suit for divorce, choosing as her attorney young Jackson, who had in the meantime been admitted to the practice of law. Galt accosted Jackson on the street and Jackson drew a pistol and fired four shots in rapid succession. Galt fell to the sidewalk and died within a few moments. Jackson was immediately arrested and charged with murder, and although Mrs. Galt came to his rescue and spent a large sum of mopey, he was convicted and given a sentence of twenty-one years in the penitentiary.

Upon the recent release of Jackson from prison the widow married him, the ceremony being performed by the same minister who had married her to Galt over twenty years ago.

BANKERS OF ILLINOIS MEET.

President Dreyer Urges Them to Be Steadfast for Sound Money.

The convention of the Bankers' Association of the State of Illinois held in Rock Island was the most largely attended and most interesting ever held by the association. It was the fifth annual gathering, and it brought together the most prominent men of finance and affairs in the State.

E. S. DREYER.

Reports of the different officers showed the association to have a membership of 400 and with a cash treasury balance of $500. Henry W. Yates, of Omaha, delivered an address on "The Fallacies of Free Silver," it being an exhaustive discussion of the monetary question from the standpoint of sound currency, and commended the change of Secretary Carlisle's conviction on the silver issue, which was pointed to as a cheering sign of the times.

President Dreyer in his annual address called attention to the work of the association, mentioning first the abolition of the days of grace by the Legislature. Another bill passed by the Legislature was that amending the law governing the indorsement upon negotiable instruments so as to effectually determine the liability of indorsers. He recommended that the garnishee law be so far amended that any banker who may have been garnisheed for sums supposed to be deposited with him by a second party may be permitted to file his answer in court by affidavit instead of being compelled to answer in person, as is the case now. On the currency question he urged the bankers of Illinois to stand steadfast for sound money.

TEMPERANCE MEN DISCHARGED

Leaders of the Nicholson Movement at Terre Haute in Trouble.

At Terre Haute, Ind., President Mater and Secretary Dick of the Nicholson union, the organization of young church people to enforce the new Nicholson saloon law, have been discharged by their employers, two prominent retail houses, and there is great excitement in temperance and church circles on account of it. Their employers told them that their connection with the movement was proving to be detrimental to the trade of the stores. Dick's employer wanted him to sign a paper repudiating the policy of the union, and when he refused to do so he was told that he was betraying the interests of his employer, who discharged him. The employer is a member of the Presbyterian Church and the official board of that church had a meeting to take action "regretting" his course.

A call has been issued for a silver convention at Topeka, Kan.

Atlanta, Ga., will endeavor to get one of the national political conventions.

Ex-Congressman Bland's friends intend to start a Presidential boom for him.

At least 1,500 delegates were appointed to the silver convention at Memphis, Tenn.

Senator Thurston, of Nebraska, believes McKinley will be nominated by the Republicans for President.

Gov. Thornton, of New Mexico, says both parties there are united for free silver. The territory will apply for admission into the Union next winter.

The Boise, Idaho, Statesman has reliable information that a movement is on foot to make W. A. Clark, the Montana copper millionaire, the Democratic candidate for Vice-President.

The advocates of "sound money" of Kansas City, Mo., have sent an invitation to Secretary Carlisle to deliver a speech on the financial question there at an early day, to be named by the Secretary.

Secretary of the Interior Hoke Smith has returned from Atlanta, Ga., to Washington. He had nothing to say concerning the rumor of his candidacy to succeed Senator Gordon, who has announced that he will not stand for re-election.

GREAT SILVER RALLY

ENTHUSIASTIC FREE COINAGE MEN AT MEMPHIS.

Fifteen Hundred Delegates from All Sections of the West and South in Attendance—Senator Turpie, of Indiana, in the Chair.

Meet Was a Success.

Friends of silver representing twenty States of the South and West held a two days' convention in Memphis. Fifteen hundred delegates, comprising Democrats, Republicans and Populists, but with "honest money," thereby meaning gold and silver, as the slogan of all, filled the lower floor and a large portion of the balconies at the Auditorium when the gathering was called to order. On the stage, besides the officers of the Central Bimetallic League of Memphis, under whose auspices the gathering was held, were many of the leading advocates of the free coinage of silver in the United States. They included Senators Bate and Harris of Tennessee, Jones and Berry of Arkansas, George and Walthall of Mississippi, Marion Butler of North Carolina, Tillman of South Carolina, ex-Gov. Prince of New Mexico, Senator Turpie of Indiana, Gov. John G. Evans of South Carolina, ex-Gov. Eagle of Arkansas, ex-Congressman William J. Bryan of Nebraska, Gen. A. J. Warner of Ohio, C. S. Thomas and Alva Adams of Colorado, Alexander Delmar of California nd Congressmen and bankers from Tennessee and adjoining States by the dozen.

A permanent organization was effected the first day, with Senator Turpie of Indiana as chairman, and addresses were delivered by that gentleman and Alexander Delmar of California in the afternoon, and by Congressman Sibley of Pennsylvania, C. S. Thomas of Denver and Aaron Wilcott of Indiana in the evening.

At 2:15 o'clock President W. N. Brown of the Central Bimetallic League of Memphis called the convention to order and introduced Judge L. H. Estes of Memphis, who offered prayer. President Brown then called for nominations for permanent chairman and Senator Isham G. Harris, the ante-bellum governor of Tennessee, was given an enthusiastic reception when he arose to present the name of Senator David Turpie of Indiana.

Mr. Harris said he had no idea of making a speech; that he only wished to state in a word the purpose and objects of the convention. It was called by the Central Bimetallic League of Shelby County, a strictly non-partisan organization composed of Democrats, Republicans and Populists. Its doors were thrown open to every American citizen who honestly believed in the propriety, the advisability and the necessity of the rehabilitation of silver. Their doctrine is bimetallism, and by bimetallism they mean the free and unlimited coinage of all the gold and all the silver produced in this country. "We are here," continued the Senator, "as a band of freemen to consider this all-absorbing question which now confronts the American people. We are here to consider the coinage question, and that question only."

The Senator from Indiana was warmly received. After he had been elected by acclamation he assumed the chair and addressed the convention.

At the evening session Senator William M. Stewart of Nevada presided, and introduced Congressman Joseph C. Sibley of Pennsylvania. Mr. Sibley was greeted with thunders of applause, and in a two hours' speech aroused his audience to a high pitch of enthusiasm. He made an earnest appeal for independent political action in 1896. His auditors were evidently with him, for every attack upon Secretary Carlisle, the President or Senator Sherman was greeted with a noisy demonstration.

The second day's session was devoted to speeches by some of the most distinguished of the visitors, and the consideration of the report of the committee on resolutions.

WASHINGTON GOSSIP

The President has accepted an invitation to visit the Cotton States Exposition at Atlanta Oct. 21.

Postmaster General Wilson delivered the annual address to the students of Central College at Fayette, Mo.

Secretary Herbert delivered the oration at the commencement of the Alabama Agricultural and Mechanical College at Auburn.

J. Walter Blandford, who was private secretary to Mr. Olney while he was Attorney General, will hold a like position with him as Secretary of State.

The trial of Capt. Henry W. Howgate on two indictments charging forgery and falsification of accounts while disbursing officer of the signal service, in 1879 was begun Monday.

The President has denied an application for a commutation of sentence of death imposed on Joseph A. Beam for the murder in Washington of his stepdaughter, Miss Anna Leahy. Beam was sentenced to be hanged July 26.

Minister Ewing informs the Department of State that a new department—the ministry of industry and labor—has been created in Berlin, and Nyssens, a member of parliament for Louran, has been appointed to direct the office.

The Post Office Department has issued a fraud order against Wilson Foster and Foster's Art College of St. Louis, Mo., excluding the company's matter from the mails. Its scheme was to sell tickets for crayon portraits, which, it is said, were never delivered.

E. P. Baldwin, auditor of the Treasury Department, has issued a circular requiring the action of appraisers, gangers, weighers and measurers to be in duplicate and requiring entries, invoices and certificates to be forwarded to the auditor for the Treasury Department.

The results of the special investigation made by the Department of Agriculture in 720 cotton growing counties show that in eighty-eight there will be little or no change in acreage as compared with last year. The general average for the country is 81, against 88.3 last year and 85.6 in 1893.

Wheat percentages: Acreage, 96.1 per cent; condition, winter wheat, 71.1 per cent, against 82.9 May 1, condition reported was 83.2. Spring wheat shows average whole country, 97.8 per cent; average percentage of all wheat is 97.1. The percentage of spring wheat for entire country is 99.5.

No official information has been received at the Indian bureau concerning the charges made against the chief of the Creek nation and the treasurer of that tribe as to unlawfully paying out funds of the tribe. The supposition of the officials at Washington is that the whole trouble is nothing but a political squabble.

THE NEWS RECORD.

SUMMARY OF A WEEK'S HAPPENINGS.

The Latest News as Flashed Over the Wires from All Parts of the World—Regarding Politics, Religion, Casualties, Commerce, and Industry.

A Disastrous Conflagration.

As the result of a fire at Greenville, Ohio, which started in a stable at the rear of the Winter block, the large wholesale store of Westerfield Bros. is in ruins, as are the steam laundry, Daily Tribune and Courier newspaper offices, the Methodist Episcopal church, Deutsche Umschau, Dr. Matchett's office, the large livery stable of H. E. Davis on the north side of Third street, and the home of Mrs William Sullivan, adjoining. The fire was the work of incendiaries, and in the excitement thieves looted the town. Two ineffectual attempts were made to set fire to other buildings in different parts of the city. Two persons were injured. They are Charles Dalrymple of the Mozart store and Dell Daugherty, a member of the city fire department. The entire loss at a conservative estimate will reach $225,000.

Saloonists Can Sell on Prescriptions.

In the trial of a case before Mayor Cochran of Bourneville, Ohio, a new construction was placed on the liquor laws of Ohio which, if sustained by the higher Courts, will produce a radical change in prohibition communities. Bourneville has a prohibition ordinance, and Martin Frey, who sold liquor in his general store before the ordinance was passed, was arrested for violating it. At the trail Frey admitted selling the liquor, but in defense produced a prescription of a physician of Bourneville, on which it was sold. The prosecution claimed that the right to sell liquor on a physician's prescription was vested alone in druggists, but in Mayor Cochran's Court a different view was taken and Frey was acquitted.

Price of Pig Iron Advanced.

The Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Company, the largest iron producers in the South, have announced another advance of 50 cents per ton in the price of Southern pig iron. This raise makes an advance of $1.50 on No. 1 foundry since May 1. The practical consummation of a selling pool between the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Company, the Sloss Iron and Steel Company and the Pioneer Mining and Manufacturing Company, which produces nine tenths of the Southern iron, gives these three big concerns control of the Southern market, and the advance is looked upon as the first result.

Horrible Suffering.

Los Angeles (Cal.) special: One of the survivors of the wrecked sloop Crest, who returned from San Clement's Islands, tells of the sufferings of himself and companions. After being struck by the storm the sloop drifted around for several days. The water and provisions giving out, they killed a dog and drank his blood which kept them alive till the shore was reached. One of the party went crazy from thirst before the camp of the hunters on the mainland was reached. Here they were fed and cared for, and after several days' rest were sent to San Pedro on a sloop.

Tramp Thieves.

At South Bend, Ind., three tramps climbed from the roof into a freight car on the Lake Shore Road where were eight other tramps. After robbing them of what valuables they possessed one started to climb back on the roof. He was drunk and fell on a cattle guard, breaking his back and died shortly afterward. One of the other two claimed to be his brother. Both then drove the eight out of the car while running at 25 miles an hour. None were hurt. The dead man's identity is not known.

Frightful Explosion.

The Union Cotton Press, situated at the corner of South Peters and Terpsichors street, New Orleans, was the scene of a terrible explosion, which resulted in one man being killed and a dozen wounded, and seven or eight missing. The Union press is one of the largest presses in the city and was operated by the firm of Frankenbush & Bortand, the structure covering nearly the entire square running from South Peters strset to New Levy street.

Frightful Collision.

Elkins (W. Va.) special: On the Dry Fork Railroad, a squad of railroad workmen had boarded a car of lumber and undertook to run it down a grade by the brakes alone. It crashed into a handcar on which were five men going to work. John Dailey was crushed into a shapeless mass; Michael Kitterman, arms and legs cut off; Felix Ray, back broken; Solomon Willoughby, both legs and one arm broken; Michael Doran, injured internally.

A $10,000 Steal.

The theft of a $10,000 package while in the custody of the postoffice, has just come to light at Montgomery, Ala. Josiah Norris & Co., sent the package to a New York bank and a postal agent had the receipt from the Montgomery postoffice. Charles Armstrong, an employe of the postoffice, came in with the pouch empty. He said he found it on the street. He is under arrest.

Overlooked by Burglars.

Expert burglars visited Cedarville, Ohio, and made a good haul. The safe of Andrew Bros. & Co. was broken into and about $500 taken. There were several thousand dollars in notes in the safe left undisturbed, while $30 in money was overlooked.

The Festive Hopper.

Swarms of grasshoppers alighted on an oat field on the infirmary farm, at Sandusky, Ohio, and completely annihilated it. A piece of meadow land was treated the same way, leaving it as though a flock of sheep had grazed on it for a week.

Fell Into a Furnace.

Harry McCoolage was repairing the top of a furnace stack at Heckshe's Iron Works, near Conshohocken, Penn. The fires had been partially drawn. By some means McCoolage fell inside the stack and plunged down 65 feet into the furnace, where his body was quickly cremated.

Tramped to Death.

Jacob Coit was tramped to death by a stud horse belonging to George Harpster, at Ottoville, Ohio.

Balloonist Killed.

Battle Creek (Mich.) special: Fred Pate, colored, of this city, was killed while making a balloon ascenson at Marcellus. The balloon had ascended but a short distance when Pate discovered that it was leaking. It floated over a clump of trees and remained perfectly still. It was impossible to use the parachute and the aeronaut finally dropped into a tree. He managed to grasp a limb and hold on for a moment, but it broke and he was dashed to the ground, two of his ribs being driven into the lungs. He lived about two hours. A large crowd witnessed the accident. Tate had made hundreds of ascensions and once before was nearly killed.

UNDER WALLS.

Horrible Explosion at Fall River, Mass.—Many Crushed to Death.

Fall River special: The worst catastrophe that has visited this city since the granite mill fire, occurred at the Langley loom harness shop, on County street. A new boiler of the Kendall make exploded in the basement of the two-story wooden building, blowing out the entire end of the structure, knocking the supports from side and allowing the upper floor to settle into a mass of ruins. There were forty-five persons at work in the shop, and only nine are known to have escaped alive. Among those were Henry J. Langley, the proprietor; George E. Davot, the foreman, and two girls named Champaigns and Desrosiers. The flames communicated with the ruins and they began to burn briskly. The firemen rushed to the scene and made heroic efforts to rescue the imprisoned work people. Shrieks of girls in the ruins were mingled with the agonizing cries of their friends who hurried to the scene when the first news of the catastrophe occurred. Ambulance cabs were sent out hurriedly and every physician who could be reached was sent at once to the scene. The offices and houses in the vicinity were turned into temporary hospitals.

There are about fifty persons employed in the shops, the greater percentage being women. Machinist Tripp was among those who escaped, also a girl named Jambert and her sister-in-law, who worked side by side on the third floor. One was unhurt and the other was slightly bruised. The Jambert girl says that none of the girls or men knew what had happened. There was a terrible report followed by a shock; the roof seemed to lift and then fall completely demolishing the whole building. The Jambert girl and her sister-in-law were thrown into the middle of the road. The former escaped uninjured, but the latter was badly cut about the face and arms.

SINKING.

An Entire Town in Danger of Disappearing.

Hazleton (Penn.) special: On Monday night the supporting pillars in the Beaver Brook Mine began to give way and the town of Audenried, which is built immediately over it, was thrown into a state of wildest excitement. The gangways of the mine are 600 feet below the surface, and a total collapse meant the complete destruction of the town. The people were warned of their peril by fissures and openings which appeared in the earth between the hotel and company store and immediately beneath the houses of the most prominent townspeople. Several buildings careened to one side, throwing the occupants from their beds.

The possibility of being buried alive was too horrible to contemplate. People went frantic, and pandemonium reigned throughout the town. The openings in the earth continued to become wider and more numerous, and a total collapse was momentarily looked for. The internal disturbance continued all night, but the crash did not come. The people camped in the meadow a safe distance from the coal vein's outcrop. Nobody thought of saving household effects, and these are left in the houses until the settling ceases, or the sinking takes place and they are swallowed in the earth. Among the houses destroyed are those of Mine Superintendent D. R. Roberts, General Manager H. E. Lubken, John McGee, and Wm. Bailey. The disturbance has not yet ceased, and the greatest excitement prevails.

WIDESPREAD.

From Every Part Come Tidings of Business Prosperity.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade says:

"It is no longer a question whether business improves. Not for a long time have our reports from all parts of the country been so uniformly favorable. The daily average of bank clearings in June is 24.8 per cent. lorger than last year, though 11.4 per cent. less than in 1892. The most potent influence has been the receipt of more favorable advices regarding growing crops. Even official statements helped, because altogether less gloomy than previous rumors. Labor troubles are getting out of the way, wages in many establishments are rising, and with the iron industry just now leading, there is general improvement in manufactures. Monetary conditions also help. The time draws near when, with good crops, exports will bring gold hither, and though foreign operations in stocks and bonds have been insignificant during the week, the effect of previous transactions has not been exhausted. Much diminished receipts of money from the interior indicate better employment in business, especially at the West, and the volume of commercial loans steadily rises, and is now fair for this season, even in a good year."

TOWN IN RUINS.

Geneva, Ind., Is Visited by a Most Disastrous Conflagration.

Geneva, Ind., was visited by a most serious conflagration. Fire was discovered in A. J. Judy's frame grocery store building on Line street, between the Shamrock Hotel and the Grand Rapids and Indiana railroad depot. The grocery is in a row of small frame buildings, and despite the efforts of the firemen the flames spread with unrelenting fury. The sparks flew in all directions and in a very few minutes Line street on both sides for a distance of a block and a half was in a sheet of flames. The citizens were in a fever of excitement, as the entire town seemed doomed. The alarm was sounded and all occupants of the threatened buildings were rescued without the loss of a single life. The flames spread fast and furiously, and within a few hours thirty Line street business houses were reduced to ashes. The Grand Rapids and Indiana depot was burned, and all telegraphic communication cut off. The loss will reach $100,000.

A Man Afire.

With forked tongues of fire leaping from every part of his body, his face livid with agony, while hundreds of people witnessed the man's torture, Joseph Tumas, employed at the rolling mills, at East Chicago, Lake County, ran down the streets of that town, his clothing being a mass of flames. At every step Tumas cried aloud in his agony, and with the superhuman strength of a mad man fought off his fellow laborers, who attempted to stop him in his mad race for life. Exhausted at last and with pieces of cooked flesh dropping from his body, Tumas sank to the ground, and when assistance arrived nearly every vestige of clothing had been burned from his body, while the smell of burning flesh filled the air. Tumas' clothing caught fire from an explosion of cinder, in the East Chicago Rolling Mills.

Forest Fires Still Raging.

Bradford (Pa.) Special: Forest fires continue to destroy property. The other night word came from Simpson stating that the flames were dangerously near to the wells of Urquhart and Lavens and that it would be difficult to save the property from destruction. A force of 150 men had a hard fight with the destroying element near Lafayette Corners. Nearly 2,000,000 feet of lumber at W. D. Johnson's mill was destroyed, entailing a loss of $150,000. The lumber was partially insured. The mill was saved. Another fire near Taintor's destroyed a large quantity of wood for Hamlin & Knowles. Fires are reported from various other parts.

Effect of the War in Colombia.

The State Department at Washington has received information of the serious devastation the revolution in Colombia is causing. It also shows the very straitened circumstances in which the government finds itself, owing to the war. The government is out of funds and is making tax levies, which are very hard to bear, placing onerous export and excise taxes on coffee, which is the principal crop of the country. The revolution also has drained the country of men and has resulted in the destruction of crops and of animals used for transportation.

Against the Saloons.

The Synod of the Reformed Church of America which has been in session at Grand Rapids, Mich., adopted a resolution declaring against saloons and resolving that the Synod, as a body, and the members, as individuals, do all in their power to discourage the rum traffic. The permanent committee on Sabbath observance spoke in the very highest terms of the work being done by the clerks' union throughout the country in forcing the business houses in many cities to close their doors on Sunday. The next meeting will be held at Catskill, N. Y., in June, 1896.

Otto Gresham Declines an Office.

Washington Special: Otto Gresham, son of the late Secretary Gresham, was in the city recently settling up his father's private business here. He also called and paid his respects to the members of the cabinet. The president proffered a lucrative office to young Gresham, but he declined it, preferring to stick to his law practice, which affords him a handsome income. Mr. Gresham says that there is nothing in the report that a large subscription had been made up at Chicago and given to his mother, nor is such a subscription asked or expected.

Gold in Oklahoma.

Never in the history of Oklahoma has there been such excitement as there is over the finding of gold in Washita county. Old miners say the ore is richer and better than the mines of California and New Mexico. The tests have been made for forty miles up Boggy creek and the veins get richer. Towns near gold fields are nearly depopulated by the citizens leaving for the gold regions, also the farmers. The town of Villa Rico, near the mines, was laid out five days ago, and has many thousand inhabitants.

A Plague of Grasshoppers.

A strange phenomena was witnessed near Elkhart, Ind., recently, when an immense horde of grasshoppers swooped down upon the farm of Trustee Schillinger, living about six miles south. Nothing but the bare stems of wheat, clover and potato vines were left by these strange pests. His crops were entirely ruined. Other farms near by met with similar devastation. Such a sight has never been before witnessed in this section.

Opening of the Canadian Soo Canal.

Sault Ste Marie (Mich.) special: The opening of the Canandian Soo canal took place here recently. The new canal opens through St. Mary's Island, on the north side of the rapids of St. Mary's River and with the river, provides Canada with independent communication between lakes Huron and Superior. The total length of the canal and its approaches is 18,100 feet. The total cost has been $4,000,000. The St. Mary's River is spanned by an immense swing bridge for the Canadian packet traffic.

Two Jail-Birds Escaped.

Leonard Devine, charged with malicious destruction of property, and Edward Purcell, who had pleaded guilty to a charge of gambling, and been fined $50, escaped from the county jail at Zanesville, Ohio, in a daring manner. A confederate on the outside had given them tools, with which they unlocked the safety door. They then asked Sheriff Worstall's wife for a newspaper, and when she opened the door knocked her down and escaped.

Fatal Cyclone.

Guthrie (O. T.) Special: A small cyclone, accompanied by the heaviest rainfall ever known in Oklahoma, visited this section recently. The electric light tower on Capitol Hill in this city was demolished, and over forty houses and barns were blown down near Carney. Fred Dodge, a farmer, was struck by lightning and killed. No other casualties were reported.

Spain Will Buy Warships.

Madrid special: The royal asent has been given the bill adopted by the Senate the other day, authorizing the Government to raise, in case of need, a loan of 600,000,000 pesetas on account of Cuba. It is believed that vessels will be purchased abroad and sent to Cuba in order to more thoroughly patrol the coast of that island.

Might Be a Lynching.

Miss Edna Williams, a popular young woman of Galliopolis, Ohio, was assaulted in an outrageous manner late the other evening by a negro named Edward Brown. Brown was arrested and locked up. The jail is guarded, as there is considerable talk of a lynching.

Fell Into the Fire.

Jacob Abrahamson, aged 75, living near Valparaiso, Ind., while burning brush, was overcome by the heat and fell on the blaze. Before assistance reached him his clothes were burned nearly off. His injuries are considered fatal.

Presidential Plums.

The President has made the following appointments: Allen Thomas, Consul General to Venezuela; Emory F. Best, Assistant Commissioner General of the Land Office.

TORN DOWN BY MOBS.

CHENG-TU MISSIONS WRECKED BY HEATHEN.

Reports of Rioting Confirmed, but It Is Possible the Missionaries Escaped—Other Places Threatened—Terre Haute Fears Saloon Interests.

Viceroy Liu Blamed.

Shanghai advices say the report of the total destruction of the missions of Ching-Tu-Fu, Kiating and Yoachohu has been confirmed. The local officials refused protection to the missionaries until the mob had completed the work of demolishing the buildings. The mission stations at other places have been threatened. About twenty adults, besides a number of children, took refuge at Ching-Tu-Fu and Yamen. Viceroy Liu is blamed for the affair.

Cheng-Tu is the capital city of the province of Se-Chuen, the westernmost and largest province of China. It borders on Thibet, and has a population of 35,000,000 people. Cheng-Tu is the largest of seventeen cities numbering over 100,000 inhabitants each. The city is situated in a hilly region, and the country around it is poorly cultivated. The province is seamed by mountain ranges, and only a few valleys of the 200,000 square miles embraced in the province are susceptible of a high degree of cultivation. The people of the hilly and mountainous district, including the region around Cheng-Tu, are semi-barbarous. They kept up tribal organizations, and not only are warlike, but bitterly opposed to foreigners. Cheng-Tu is from 800 to 1,000 miles from the seacoast, and the whole province of Se-Chuen is inaccessible by water except in the rainy season, when the river Yang-tse-

MAP SHOWING CHING-TU AND SURROUNDING TERRITORY.

Kiang, in the southern part of the province, is navigable for local traffic.

Wu-Chang, the point to which a French gunboat is said to have gone, is in the province of Hupeh, adjoining Se-Chuen on the east. It is a city of 800,000 inhabitants, at the head of navigation for seagoing vessels on the Yang-tse-Kiang, and is 600 miles and more from the scene of the reported massacre of Christians.

Not Reported in Washington.

The Chinese legation in Washington has received no information as to the reported massacre of missionaries. It is stated at the legation that Cheng-Tu is a large city in the interior of China. The people are far removed from the centers of foreign commerce such as Canton and Shanghai. Recently, however, by the treaty of peace with Japan, the interior city was one of several places to be opened to foreigners and foreign commerce. This, it is explained, has agitated the people, who lived by themselves from time immemorial. The missionaries are the only foreigners who have heretofore settled at Cheng-Tu. Their number is not known. It is said, however, that the number of missionaries, including their families, in the entire province of Se-Chuen, of which Cheng-Tu is the capital, must be less than 100, including all nationalities.

ROMANCE AND TRAGEDY.

Case in Which Marriage and Murder Are Singularly Mingled.

A remarkable ending to a romance and tragedy occurred at Lebanon, Ind., recently when Mrs. George T. Galt married William Jackson, who twenty years ago shot and killed her first husband and who had been at the time sentenced to twenty-one years' imprisonment.

In January, 1875, the place was thrown into the wildest excitement by the shooting of George T. Galt, one of its wealthiest residents, by Lawyer William Jackson. Three years prior to the tragedy John C. Davis was cashier of the First National Bank of Lebanon and a highly respected citizen. He was the father of three girls, and upon them he bestowed all his affections, his wife having died a few years before. His greatest desire was that his daughters might each wed a man who was well supplied with this world's goods and of irreproachable character. When May, his eldest, began receiving the attentions of William Jackson, a young law student, with apparent favor, the father entered strenuous objections and forbade the would-be lover to again call on his daughter.

About a year afterward May was married to George T. Galt, a widower, who, besides being one of the wealthiest men in Lebanon, was known to a few to be quite a sport.

Happiness did not reign supreme in the Galt home, and as the husband grew more reckless, Mrs. Galt left him in December, 1874, and began suit for divorce, choosing as her attorney young Jackson, who had in the meantime been admitted to the practice of law. Galt accosted Jackson on the street and Jackson drew a pistol and fired four shots in rapid succession. Galt fell to the sidewalk and died within a few moments. Jackson was immediately arrested and charged with murder, and although Mrs. Galt came to his rescue and spent a large sum of money, he was convicted and given a sentence of twenty-one years in the penitentiary.

Upon the recent release of Jackson from prison the widow married him, the ceremony being performed by the same minister who had married her to Galt over twenty years ago.

BANKERS OF ILLINOIS MEET.

President Dreyer Urges Them to Be Steadfast for Sound Money.

The convention of the Bankers' Association of the State of Illinois held in Rock Island was the most largely attended and most interesting ever held by the association. It was the fifth annual gathering, and it brought together the most prominent men of finance and affairs in the State.

E. S. DREYER.

Reports of the different officers showed the association to have a membership of 400 and with a cash treasury balance of $500. Henry W. Yates, of Omaha, delivered an address on "The Fallacies of Free Silver," it being an exhaustive discussion of the monetary question from the standpoint of sound currency, and commended the change of Secretary Carlisle's conviction on the silver issue, which was pointed to as a cheering sign of the times.

President Dreyer in his annual address called attention to the work of the association, mentioning first the abolition of the days of grace by the Legislature. Another bill passed by the Legislature was that amending the law governing the indorsement upon negotiable instruments so as to effectually determine the liability of indorsers. He recommended that the garnishee law be so far amended that any banker who may have been garnisheed for sums supposed to be deposited with him by a second party may be permitted to file his answer in court by affidavit instead of being compelled to answer in person, as is the case now. On the currency question he urged the bankers of Illinois to stand steadfast for sound money.

TEMPERANCE MEN DISCHARGED

Leaders of the Nicholson Movement at Terre Haute in Trouble.

At Terre Haute, Ind., President Mater and Secretary Dick of the Nicholson union, the organization of young church people to enforce the new Nicholson saloon law, have been discharged by their employers, two prominent retail houses, and there is great excitement in temperance and church circles on account of it. Their employers told them that their connection with the movement was proving to be detrimental to the trade of the stores. Dick's employer wanted him to sign a paper repudiating the policy of the union, and when he refused to do so he was told that he was betraying the interests of his employer, who discharged him. The employer is a member of the Presbyterian Church and the official board of that church had a meeting to take action "regretting" his course.

Senator Squire, of Washington, favors Reed for the Presidency.

A call has been issued for a silver convention at Topeka, Kan.

Atlanta, Ga., will endeavor to get one of the national political conventions.

Ex-Congressman Bland's friends intend to start a Presidential boom for him.

At least 1,500 delegates were appointed to the silver convention at Memphis, Tenn.

Senator Thurston, of Nebraska, believes McKinley will be nominated by the Republicans for President.

Gov. Thornton, of New Mexico, says both parties there are united for free silver. The territory will apply for admission into the Union next winter.

The Boise, Idaho, Statesman has reliable information that a movement is on foot to make W. A. Clark, the Montana copper millionaire, the Democratic candidate for Vice-President.

The advocates of "sound money" of Kansas City, Mo., have sent an invitation to Secretary Carlisle to deliver a speech on the financial question there at an early day, to be named by the Secretary.

Secretary of the Interior Hoke Smith has returned from Atlanta, Ga., to Washington. He had nothing to say concerning the rumor of his candidacy to succeed Senator Gordon, who has announced that he will not stand for re-election.

GREAT SILVER RALLY

ENTHUSIASTIC FREE COINAGE MEN AT MEMPHIS.

Fifteen Hundred Delegates from All Sections of the West and South in Attendance—Senator Turpie, of Indiana, in the Chair.

Meet Was a Success.

Friends of silver representing twenty States of the South and West held a two days' convention in Memphis. Fifteen hundred delegates, comprising Democrats, Republicans and Populists, but with "honest money," thereby meaning gold and silver, as the slogan of all, filled the lower floor and a large portion of the balconies at the Auditorium when the gathering was called to order. On the stage, besides the officers of the Central Bimetallic League of Memphis, under whose auspices the gathering was held, were many of the leading advocates of the free coinage of silver in the United States. They included Senators Bate and Harris of Tennessee, Jones and Berry of Arkansas, George and Walthall of Mississippi, Marion Butler of North Carolina, Tillman of South Carolina, ex-Gov. Prince of New Mexico, Senator Turpie of Indiana, Gov. John G. Evans of South Carolina, ex-Gov. Eagle of Arkansas, ex-Congressman William J. Bryan of Nebraska, Gen. A. J. Warner of Ohio, C. S. Thomas and Alva Adams of Colorado, Alexander Delmar of California nd Congressmen and bankers from Tennessee and adjoining States by the dozen.

A permanent organization was effected the first day, with Senator Turpie of Indiana as chairman, and addresses were delivered by that gentleman and Alexander Delmar of California in the afternoon, and by Congressman Sibley of Pennsylvania, C. S. Thomas of Denver and Aaron Wilcott of Indiana in the evening.

At 2:15 o'clock President W. N. Brown of the Central Bimetallic League of Memphis called the convention to order and introduced Judge L. H. Estes of Memphis, who offered prayer. President Brown then called for nominations for permanent chairman and Senator Isham G. Harris, the ante-bellum governor of Tennessee, was given an enthusiastic reception when he arose to present the name of Senator David Turpie of Indiana.

Mr. Harris said he had no idea of making a speech; that he only wished to state in a word the purpose and objects of the convention. It was called by the Central Bimetallic League of Shelby County, a strictly non-partisan organization composed of Democrats, Republicans and Populists. Its doors were thrown open to every American citizen who honestly believed in the propriety, the advisability and the necessity of the rehabilitation of silver. Their doctrine is bimetallism, and by bimetallism they mean the free and unlimited coinage of all the gold and all the silver produced in this country. "We are here," continued the Senator, "as a band of freemen to consider this all-absorbing question which now confronts the American people. We are here to consider the coinage question, and that question only."

The Senator from Indiana was warmly received. After he had been elected by acclamation he assumed the chair and addressed the convention.

At the evening session Senator William M. Stewart of Nevada presided, and introduced Congressman Joseph C. Sibley of Pennsylvania. Mr. Sibley was greeted with thunders of applause, and in a two hours' speech aroused his audience to a high pitch of enthusiasm. He made an earnest appeal for independent political action in 1896. His auditors were evidently with him, for every attack upon Secretary Carlisle, the President or Senator Sherman was greeted with a noisy demonstration.

The second day's session was devoted to speeches by some of the most distinguished of the visitors, and the consideration of the report of the committee on resolutions.

The President has accepted an invitation to visit the Cotton States Exposition at Atlanta Oct. 21.

Postmaster General Wilson delivered the annual address to the students of Central College at Fayette, Mo.

Secretary Herbert delivered the oration at the commencement of the Alabama Agricultural and Mechanical College at Auburn.

J. Walter Blandford, who was private secretary to Mr. Olney while he was Attorney General, will hold a like position with him as Secretary of State.

The trial of Capt. Henry W. Howgate on two indictments charging forgery and falsification of accounts while disbursing officer of the signal service in 1879 was begun Monday.

The President has denied an application for a commutation of sentence of death imposed on Joseph A. Beam for the murder in Washington of his stepdaughter, Miss Anna Leahy. Beam was sentenced to be hanged July 26.

Minister Ewing informs the Department of State that a new department—the ministry of industry and labor—has been created in Berlin, and Nyssens, a member of parliament for Louran, has been appointed to direct the office.

The Post Office Department has issued a fraud order against Wilson Foster and Foster's Art College of St. Louis, Mo., excluding the company's matter from the mails. Its scheme was to sell tickets for crayon portraits, which, it is said, were never delivered.

E. P. Baldwin, auditor of the Treasury Department, has issued a circular requiring the action of appraisers, gaugers, weighers and measurers to be in duplicate and requiring entries, invoices and certificates to be forwarded to the auditor for the Treasury Department.

The results of the special investigation made by the Department of Agriculture in 720 cotton growing counties show that in eighty-eight there will be little or no change in acreage as compared with last year. The general average for the country is 81, against 88.3 last year and 85.6 in 1893.

Wheat percentages: Acreage, 96.1 per cent; condition, winter wheat, 71.1 per cent, against 82.9 May 1, condition reported was 83.2. Spring wheat shows average whole country, 97.8 per cent; average percentage of all wheat is 97.1. The percentage of spring wheat for entire country is 99.5.

No official information has been received at the Indian bureau concerning the charges made against the chief of the Creek nation and the treasurer of that tribe as to unlawfully paying out funds of the tribe. The supposition of the officials at Washington is that the whole trouble is nothing but a political squabble.

HILDA

By Charlotte M. Braeme

CHAPTER XV.

At times, in the midst of his happiness, Lord Bayneham paused to wonder why he was so favored—why heaven and earth seemed to have poured their choicest gifts upon him. He was completely and thoroughly happy; there was not even the shadow of a cloud in his sky.

Lord Bayneham brought his beautiful young wife back to London. The house belonging to Lady Hutton had been sold. The Countess Dowager of Bayneham and Miss Earle accepted Claude's invitation to pass what remained of the season with him in Grosvenor Square.

Nothing annoyed the still brilliant mother of the young earl more than that title of dowager. Half in deference to her prejudice the fair wife who had taken her place was known as "Lady Hilda."

During her son's absence Lady Bayneham had arranged all her plans. She intended to reside at Listoff, a small estate that her husband, the late earl, had settled upon her, and Barbara had no thought of leaving her aunt.

"I cannot hope to keep you long with me," said Lady Bayneham to her niece. "You are sure to marry soon."

Miss Earle smiled and made no reply. Protestations were not much in her line; but she knew many years must elapse ere she could forget that lesson which it had taken her a lifetime to learn. Yet even as she sighed there came to her the memory of Bertie's handsome, eager face, telling its own tale of love and devotion.

* * * * * * *

The fair and lovely young bride created a marvelous sensation. As Miss Hutton, a simple, beautiful girl, shy and retiring, she had been greatly admired; as Lady Bayneham, a wealthy heiress, wedded to one of the noblest peers in England, she was irresistible. She had lost that half-timid expression that had amused the habitues of the great world. Lady Hilda was as sweet and gracious as she had ever been, but there was with it a quiet, easy dignity that suited her well. Barbara privately believed that in the solitude of the Swiss mountains Claude had given his wife some lessons in world training. Whatever had effected the change, it was for the better; even Lady Bayneham, proud and difficult to please, was charmed by the graceful ease and sweet dignity of her son's wife.

"She has not Barbara's thorough-bred, patrician manner," said that lady to herself; "but it might have been worse."

The tide of popularity rose strongly in Lady Hilda's favor. Had not every thought been absorbed in her husband, her little head must have been turned by the homage and flattery offered to her; for no house in London was so popular as Lord Bayneham's. His wife's lovely face and superb voice, Barbara's keen intellect and bright wit, and Lady Bayneham's serene and charming manner, were all sources of attraction. Thus the time passed rapidly, like a dream of fairyland.

"Claude," said Barbara, one morning, as she stood by her cousin's side watching Hilda carefully arranging some roses, "supposing life to be a hill, you have attained its summit; what are you going to do now?—sit down and rest?"

"No," he replied, with a bright, hopeful smile, "I must help others up also. Why should I rest, Barbara? I have done no work yet."

"I do not think either love or pleasure can ever fill a man's life," said Barbara; "he must have something of deeper interest still."

"I shall find it in politics," said Lord Bayneham; "we have had some brave warriors in our family, but not many statesmen. I shall make statesmanship my aim. Look out for my maiden speech next session, Barbara."

He looked so handsome and so triumphant as he spoke, that Miss Earle gazed at him half in wonder, half in admiration.

"I have asked my mother to return with us to Bayneham," he continued, abruptly. "Hilda would be sure to feel nervous with a large party of guests, just at present. Is there any need for the ceremony of asking you to join us, Barbara?"

"Not much," she replied, with a smile. "Who goes to Bayneham?"

"I have asked Bertie," he replied; "he has taken to politics. Only imagine, Barbara—two years ago he was the most careless, easy-going man it was possible to meet; now he has taken a kind of fever. He is secretary in some Government office, and if he does get into Parliament I predict that he will make a sensation."

Barbara's face flushed deeply, she hardly knew why.

"Continue your list," she said, hastily.

"My mother has asked Lady Grahame; you know her pretty well, I suppose—fat, fair, happy and forty, with a good jointure, and possessing what she calls the great advantage of belonging to some of the best families in England. She is popularly supposed to be on the lookout for a successor to the late lamented Sir Wilton Grahame."

"Let us hope she may find one," said Barbara.

"Then we have a rival beauty in the person of Miss Deverney; the number of Graces must be complete, you know."

"What a wretched compliment!" said Miss Earle, quietly. "You have not studied the delicate art of saying pretty things."

"It is difficult to satisfy you. We have my old friend, Sir Harry Higham, and one or two more eligibles. You will find the party quite large enough, Barbara."

And so Miss Earle discovered, for great as were the resources of Bayneham Castle, they were stretched to the utmost. Every spare room had an occupant, and it was long since so gay and brilliant a crowd had assembled in those old walls.

There was plenty of society at Bayneham; the neighborhood abounded in what the countess called, with great emphasis, "really good families;" and the really good families hastened, one and all, to attend the court of the young queen who had come to reign over them. There were times when even the dowager herself could not help being charmed by the winning grace and pure loveliness of her son's wife.

"I have quite come to the conclusion, Barbara," she said one day to her niece, "that Hilda was a relative of Lady Hutton's—perhaps the daughter of some poor cousin. One can tell she belongs to a good family. I never saw anyone more thoroughly ladylike or better bred."

Miss Earle agreed with her aunt; she was pleased, too, at seeing how thoroughly Bertie admired his friend's wife.

To Hilda herself life seemed one long, beautiful dream. She was but a fair, loving, gentle child. She had been nursed in love; she only knew care and sorrow by name. The one single grief of her life was softened by the healing hand of Time. The flowers that bloomed brightly beneath the summer sun were not more fair; the birds that sang were not happier than she was. She liked to be alone at times, and think of it—to dream over again every event of her short, happy life.

One morning—the first time for many days—she found herself free, and without any duty that required attention. Most of her guests had driven over to Laleham Priory, and she had not been able to join them. Lady Grahame, who also declined the ride, was in close conversation with her maid, and Sir Harry Higham had remained at home to write letters.

Out in the garden the sun was shining brightly; the flowers were at the height of their beauty. The large branches of the tall trees waved as though inviting Hilda to enjoy the shade beneath them. It was all pleasant and fair. She hastily threw a lace shawl over her pretty morning dress, and placed a coquettish little hat on her bright golden hair, and went through the garden. The gate that led to the park was open, so she passed through it, and down the broad, shady path that led to the lodge.

The lodge was a pretty cottage, picturesque enough in its rich dress of green creepers with their purple flowers. Lady Hilda stopped to speak to one of the children playing near the gate; then, without any definite purpose, looked down the high road that led to the town of Dulston.

Suddenly her startled glance fell upon the figure of a woman who was seated upon the moss-covered stone near the gate, a woman poorly dressed, but with something strange in her attitude. She had been looking eagerly down the broad path, when the first glimmer of the white dress shone through the trees. She asked one of the children, "Who is that lady over there with the white dress and golden hair?"

"That," said the child, "is—is the young Lady Bayneham, my lord's wife."

Then, not being particularly clean or presentable, the boy ran off, where her ladyship could not see him.

The woman seated herself upon the flat moss-covered stone; a strange look, as of deep quiet, came over her face; her eyes seemed to drink in every movement of that tall, slender, white-robed figure. But Lady Hilda never saw her until she looked out of the park gate into the high road. Then she noted with wonder the careworn, beautiful face, the tired look of the large violet eyes, and the drooping despondency of the whole figure. As she drew near the woman rose, when something in her face caused Lady Bayneham to stop and look kindly at her.

"My lady," said the woman, her eyes still fixed on the lovely young face, "pray forgive me. I have been away from England many years. It is so long since I saw an English flower. Will you give me one of those roses that grow there?"

With the sweetness that never failed her, Hilda gathered a beautiful rose, and held it out to the woman.

"You look tired," she said, in her kind, musical voice. "Have you traveled far?"

"Yes, many miles," she replied, taking the flower from the thin white hand.

"Can I offer you anything else?" said Lady Bayneham, gently, half drawing out her purse as she spoke.

"No, my lady," cried the strange woman. "I had a longing to holding an English flower in my hand again, and I thank you very much."

As though she could not trust herself to speak another word, she turned away, and was soon hidden by the branching trees. Lady Bayneham looked after her in some surprise.

"What a beautiful, sorrowful face!" she said to herself; "there is a whole story written in it."

CHAPTER XVI.

"We must do something in return for all these invitations, Hilda," said Lord Bayneham. "It is more than three months now since we returned, and although we have had what one may call parties every day, it is time we did more. What do you propose?"

"A ball," she replied, her fair, young face glowing with delight at the thought. "And, Claude, ask Barbara to come down for it. I am sure she will be pleased."

"We shall soon have Christmas here, and my mother promised to spend it at Bayneham," said Claude. "Suppose we wait until then, and give a ball that all the country will remember. Bertie promised us a week. What do you say?"

"It will be best," she replied, more sedately, for, though longing to see Barbara, and enjoy a ball, Hilda looked forward with more awe than delight to the visit of her stately mother-in-law.

Hilda had almost forgotten the little incident that happened in the summer. Once or twice she thought, with wonder and admiration, of that beautiful, sad face, so worn and pale, and then in her heart felt thankful that those mysterious trials and troubles which wreck other lives had not shadowed hers.

King Winter did not appear in his usual garb; there was no snow or frost when Christmas came, but, contrary to all natural laws, the weather was even warm and mild. There was an attempt at rain, a feeble gleam of sunshine, but none of what English people call "seasonable cold."

Notwithstanding the absence of snow and frost, there was no lack of holly and mistletoe in the Castle. It was many long years since Christmas had been kept in such royal state at Bayneham, nor was there any lack of gayety among the guests assembled there.

One night was given to charades—Bertie being stage manager, and thoroughly well did he accomplish his task. He had what he called "magnificent materials," and he knew how to use them.

"I have a grand idea," said Bertie one morning to Lord Bayneham; "they spoke of having some tableaux-vivants to-night. I consider that we have amongst us the three most perfect types of beauty. We could manage a beautiful picture—'The Gift of the Golden Apple.' You may be Paris, Miss Earle would make a magnificent Minerva, Miss Deverney is a perfect Juno, and Lady Hilda would represent the golden-haired Aphrodite as few others could. What do you think, Claude?"

"Let us have a rehearsal at once," replied Lord Bayneham, charmed with the idea, "if the ladies are willing."

* * * * * * *

When the curtain was drawn up it was acknowledged by all that Bertie's idea was a brilliant success. It would have been difficult to have found three women more beautiful, or differing more decidedly in their style of beauty.

Miss Deverney—tall and majestic, with a figure and carriage full of dignity, a face of the purest Grecian type, straight brows and dark hair—was Juno, in all her majestic beauty. Bertie declared the wonderful tissue of her robe must have been "woven moonbeams." Barbara Earle's pure, eloquent face, the calm, serenity of eye and brow, the expression so full of intellect and feeling, fitted her well for the part of Minerva, the wise, beautiful, serene daughter of the gods. Between them stood Aphrodite, a fair, lovely face, bright as a morning sunbeam, a profusion of golden hair falling over the white shining robe.

Lord Bayneham had refused the part of Paris, so Bertie took it, and he stood before the beautiful Aphrodite, just offering to her the golden apple he held in his hands.

It was a beautiful picture, so perfect in its details that there was a universal demand for a second opportunity of seeing it.

Bertie had enjoyed the rehearsals, for he made an invariable rule, the moment they were finished, of offering the apple to Barbara, telling her he was a second Paris, with a far better judgment than his predecessor.

That evening, when Barbara Earle, tired and exhausted, reached her own room, she saw a small packet addressed to her, lying on the toilet table. She broke the seal and found a small box. When that was opened, lying in a soft nest of white velvet was a most beautiful little golden apple. It was made with a small loop, so that it could be worn at the end of a chain, or suspended to a bracelet; there was a slip of paper, and on it these words were written:

"Barbara, will you accept this from me in my own character of Bertie Carlyon?"

Miss Earle, understanding exactly how much that meant, resolved upon taking time for deliberation before she made any reply.

On the morning following, Bertie was anxiously waiting for her appearance; but Barbara avoided any tete-a-tete with him. The day after was spent in preparing for the grand ball, which Lord Bayneham declared should excel any given in the county; and its queen was to be his fair young wife.

The evening so anxiously looked for came at last. The whole neighborhood round Bayneham seemed alive with the rolling carriages. The Castle was one blaze of light and warmth. The ball was brilliantly and numerously attended. It was something like a dream of fairyland—the rich hangings, the fragrant exotics, the little scented fountains that rippled so musically, the gleaming of jewels, the sweet, soft music, the bright, beautiful faces.

It was a brilliant and successful evening, more so, perhaps, to Bertie than anyone else. He secured two waltzes with Barbara, and probably spent the happiest moments of his life in the conservatory with her.

"Barbara," he said, as they stood watching the lamps that glowed like pale moons among the green plants—"Barbara, do you accept or refuse my little present?"

"The golden apple?" she said, with a smile; "neither, Mr. Carlyon, I hold it in reserve."

"Is there any hope for me, Barbara?" he said, his handsome face flushed with joy. "I have loved you ever since I knew how to appreciate what is noble and good. Could you ever care for me?"

"It will depend upon yourself," she replied. "When you come to me with some claim to admiration and respect, you shall have my answer. I shall say more when you have accomplished some of those great deeds we spoke of."

With that answer Bertie Carlyon was content.

GRADY'S GEESE TO THE POUND.

Maxwell Street Policeman's Captures Upset Police Court Proceedings.

Four big white geese occupied a cell at the Maxwell Street Station the other day, says the Chicago Tribune, and drowned with their noisy honking the trial of cases before Justices Dooley and Eberhardt.

"What did the defendant say?" queried Justice Eberhardt of a witness, and from the cell-room came in reply:

"Quack, quack, quack."

Over in Justice Dooley's room that eloquent attorney, Joe Epstein, was defending a prisoner, and in closing his argument said: "All I can say, Judge, is—" But before Epstein could finish his sentence the geese had chimed in with their "quack, quack, quack," and the Judge and audience had a laugh at Epstein's expense. It was that way all day until Capt. Barcal had the noisy birds transferred to the barn, where they still quacked and honked until taken to the city pound. During the court hours officers and bailiffs went to the cell-room and pounded on the door of the goose cage with their clubs, but it did no good. The geese would have their say, and they said it in a very loud and aggressive manner.

It was late Sunday night when Policemen Grady and Perlet brought their prisoners to the station and booked them on a charge of disorderly conduct. The policemen had found the geese behaving in a riotous and scandalous manner on the right-of-way of the Chicago and Alton Railway, where they had been dumped by two boys who for some unknown reason didn't care to carry the fowls while the policemen were around. At the approach of Grady the geese put out their necks and utered a chorus of hisses. The policeman rapped for help and Perlet responded. But it was only after a hard chase that the offending geese were landed at the station, and there Grady was dismayed to find that the Desk Sergeant didn't want to book his prisoners.

"You can't arrest a goose," said the Sergeant.

"But I have," said Grady. "An' what's more, I've a clear case against 'em uv resisting an officer, for this big white wan chewed me arum all the way to the station. An' as for disorderly conduc', the noise they made whin I tried to drive thim off the track was worse nor the shouting the night we all wint down and voted for Hinky Dink."

So Grady had his way and down went the geese into the cell. Neither Justice Dooley nor Justice Eberhardt would try Grady's prisoners, and Capt. Barcal took the responsibility of sendiag them to the pound, before the force became completely demoralized. Attorney Epstein offered to furnish bonds for the good behavior of the geese if released in his custody, but Capt. Barcal would not accept it, having heard that roast goose is one of Epstein's favorite dishes.

Rev. Timothy Dwight, who died recently at Whitesborough, N. Y., organized the first Presbyterian church in California in 1849, and was one of the pioneer missionaries to the Sandwich Islands.

FALL OF KHARTOUN.

TEN YEARS SINCE CHINESE GORDON WAS KILLED.

A Brave and Romantic Figure in Which Heroism and Religion Held an Equal Share—Monument to Gordon in Trafalgar Square, London.

His Life in China.

In these prosaic days we are wont to think that bravery, heroism and devotion to an ideal are no longer to be met with. Such indeed is often the case, but still our modern life has produced some characters fully as chivalric as any warrior of the middle ages and has furnished incidents more dramatic than those of any other century. So recently as ten years ago was brought to an end the life of Gen. Gordon, than whom no man more brave, more courageous and more admirable has ever been seen. Ten years ago the city of Khartoum fell, and in the ensuing massacre was put out that noble and beautiful life.

Charles George Gordon was born in England in 1830 of well-to-do parents. His father was a soldier and one of a family of soldiers; his mother is said to have been a woman of humorous and cheerful disposition, which traits she certainly transmitted to her son. Gordon followed in his father's steps and received a military training. Not much is known of his school days and we are told that he never displayed more than the average talent. His first military service was in the Crimean war, in which he served with great courage and received rather a severe wound at Sebastopol.

He was next dispatched to China on an expedition sent out by England and he remained there some years. It was at this time that Gordon began to come prominently forward in his profession. China was then engaged in trying to put down the Tai Ping rebellion which threatened the national life. He threw himself heart and soul into the Chinese cause and was in 1863 appointed by the Emperor commander-in-chief of the army. For two years he was engaged in vigorous warfare and at the end of that time found his efforts crowned with success and the rebellion suppressed. The delighted Emperor conferred on him high military rank and invested him with the yellow jacket and the peacock's feather—the mightiest in honors in the imperial gift. It was from these circumstances that he was nick-named "Chinese" Gordon, a title which he became known by much more than by his own name.

GEN. GORDON.

The next important event in Gordon's life was an expedition to Central Africa under the Egyptian Government. Gordon's life in Africa was most interesting. His bravery and courage made such an impression on the natives that they regarded him rather as some god than as a man; his constant effort to put down the slave trade excited their keenest admiration and the deep religious motives of the man, which were the mainsprings of his whole life, impressed the Africans even more than his military genius. Gordon was made pasha by the Khedive and a few years later England made him governor general of the Soudan. During his term of service he continued his warfare against the slave trade, he effected many reforms in the way of lightening extortionate taxes and dismissing unjust officials and, finally, he put down several formidable rebellions. His reputation among the natives for justice and courage increased and when, in 1880, he finally resigned his post and returned to England he left behind him lamentations, grief and tears.

After Gordon's departure affairs in the Soudan got into an alarming condition. The gaining control of the Suez Canal by English capitalists had given England a hold in Egypt and had naturally led to a sort of protectorate. Such a state of affairs was all well enough in a state of peace, but now that disturbances were arising England's position became one of great responsibility. This disturbing factor was Mahomet Ahmed, the Mahdi, whom we know as the False Prophet. This man went throughout the Soudan proclaiming himself as the chosen of God, the promised deliverer of Islam, who was to free Mohammedans from the rule of unbelievers whether Egyptians or English. The Arabs flocked in swarms to this man, swore allegiance to him and joined the army which he was raising against his enemies. By 1883 the Mahdi's forces had gained formidable proportions. One by one the strongholds of the Khedive fell into their hands, as did many held by the English. At last Gen. Hicks was sent against the Mahdi with a strong regiment. The followers of the False Prophet surprised them and a horrible massacre followed which scarcely any Englishman survived. Gen. Baker, who was marching to Hicks' assistance, was next attacked, three-quarters of his men were slain and he himself narrowly escaped to a gunboat, whence he made his way to England.

When this news reached England it caused the greatest possible consternation. The Government saw its bravest troops slain, its best commanders cut down and knew that unless something were done to hinder the Mahdi's victorious advance the country must lose all hold in the Soudan. There was just one man to whom the Government could turn; this was Gordon; on his shoulders must rest the whole responsibility of maintaining England's glory.

Gordon accepted the mission, and in January, 1884, went to Egypt and leisurely proceeded to Khartoum, the chief city in the Soudan. He was received with loud acclaims, the people crowding about and proclaiming him as their savior and deliverer. He proceeded to take command of the city and to bring something like order out of the confused affairs of the people.

The Mahdi, meanwhile continued his onward course and made for Khartoum. Before he knew it Gordon found himself shut up in the city which the Mahdi now besieged. Encouraged by Gordon the city made a noble resistance, but soon the people were reduced to a most desperate condition. Famine broke out; sickness followed in its train and Gordon saw himself in desperate straits. He sent appeals, pitiful in their distress, to the home Government praying for relief; but statesmen and ministers delayed and disputed, and it was not till the last of the year that help was sent him. Gen. James Stewart and a force came near Khartoum early in 1885, but only to meet the enemy in desperate conflict, in which Stewart was killed and 12 per cent. of his men slain or rendered incapable of fighting.

Khartoum had fallen the day before their advent, as reports months afterward showed. Gordon had attempted to dislodge the Mahdi and failed. Then came the news of the approach of the reserves and the Mahdi determined to storm the city before their arrival. A colleague of Gordon's, Ferig Pasha, wanted him to give up the place; Gordon became very angry and a violent discussion ensued. Meanwhile the distress in the city increased and Gordon was at his wit's end what to do. The suffering, the doubt and the difficulties of that strong soul can be better imagined than described; the hope of rescue, the heart-sick feeling of despair were all his.

Sir Charles Wilson and Lord Charles Beresford next attempted Gordon's rescue. They approached by water and reached Khartoum on the 28th. Gordon's flag was no longer to be seen, and so they turned back without finding out definitely what the condition of the city was.

But it could not last. A few days later and the Mahdi overpowered the small force of defenders and entered the city. A terrible massacre was at once inaugurated and thousands perished. In the general slaughter Gordon was killed, though how is not known to this day. The accounts are most conflicting and all that is certain is his death. Even that was doubted for many months, and it was long thought he might possibly have survived. Perhaps this strange and mysterious end is of a piece with the mystical character of the man which almost raises him out of the ranks of ordinary mortals to some higher plane, making him to resemble Galahad or Bayard or Arthur.

George Washington's Rag Doll.

A number of women at Huntington, L. I., interested in the success of a "people's room" searched among the old residents of the town for curious and quaint things, and held an exhibition of them last evening in the upper rooms of the People's Building on Main street.

One of the most interesting exhibits was a rag doll which was made by a great-grandmother of Mrs. J. H. Ripley, of New York, and presented to George Washington when he was a boy. It is now the property of Mrs. Ripley, who is a summer resident of Huntington.—New York Herald.

Sprinkles of Spice.

His teeth are loose and his nose is a sight,
And his head!—they've in bandages bound it;
He went out to look for trouble last night
And he found it.
—Boston Courier.

Wyld—Can't you overcome your thirst for rum? Tramp—Yes, sir, with a dime.—Life.

He—I've been watching for a chance to kiss you for the last ten minutes. She—You must be near-sighted.—Life.

He—You reject me because I am poor. Heiress—Say, rather, that you are poor because I reject you.—Boston Transcript.

The Soft Answer—He (just proposed)—You hesitate. Have I a rival, then? She—Oh, no. On the contrary, you are my fiance's rival.—Vogue.

"Father," said the boy, "what is insolvent?" "Insolvent," was the reply, "is merely a long word used to describe a short condition."—Household Words.

She—I have an instinctive feeling that I can trust you. He (passionately)—Ah, my darling, would that some others felt that way!—New York Herald.

"You used to do a little trading on 'Change, didn't you, Higgs?" "Yes." "Were you a bull or a bear?" "Neither, Blobbs. I was a lamb."—Chicago Tribune.

New Boarder—What's the row upstairs? Landlady—It's the professor of hypnotism trying to get his wife's permission to go out this evening.—Spare Moments.

"I hear, Miss Impecune, that you have the bicycle craze." "Yes. That is, I have the craze, but I'm sorry to say that I haven't the bicycle."—Harper's Bazar.

This world's a most eccentric place—
The thought we can't dislodge—
One-half is begging for the work
The other wants to dodge.
—Washington Star.

Stern Father of the Girl—I saw you kiss my daughter as I passed the parlor a while ago, and I want you to know I don't like it. Young Man—You may not, but I do.—Boston Globe.

Proud Father—This is a sunset my daughter painted. She studied painting abroad, you know. Friend—Ah! that explains it. I never saw a sunset like that in this country.—Tid-Bits.

Perdita—If you continue much longer to play poker with my father I won't marry you. Jack Dashing—If your father continues to play poker much longer with me I won't need to.—Princeton Tiger.

Landlord Logic.—Prospective Tenant—I like the top floor best. Why doesn't the fireescape go lower than the third floor? Agent—It isn't needed. The first three floors are empty.—Harper's Bazar.

New woman has a lot to learn,
Emerging from her prison.
The new man says it's now his turn
To talk; she's got to listen.
—New York Recorder.

Little Miss Muggs (haughtily)—My sister never goes out without a chaperon. Little Miss Freckles (disdainfully)—My sister wouldn't be allowed to, either, if she was like your sister.—Chicago News.

Father—Fritz, I saw you last evening helping home an intoxicated student. Don't do it again; it makes a bad impression. Fritz—Oh, that's all right. I only did it to get even with him.—Fliegende Blaetter.

Figg—Wonder why it is that these professional pugilists are such confounded talkers. Fogg—Perhaps it is because of a determination on their part never to be struck speechless.—Boston Transcript.

"I'm very much afraid," his mother said, "that this pie needs more shortening." "Mamma," said the boy in an audible undertone, "that isn't what my piece needs." "Isn't it?" "No'm. My piece needs lengthening."—Washington Star.

Mrs. White—And do you mean to say that you and your husband always agree about everything? Mrs. Black—Always; except, of course, now and then when he's out of humor or pig-headed, or something of that sort!—Boston Transcript.

Roddster—I say, old fellow, can you lend us a pair of scales for a few days? Married Chum—We have a pair, but sorry to say they are out of order; they weigh heavy. Roddster (excitedly)—The very thing; we're going fishing!—Boston Courier.

Outertown (enthusiastically)—Citily, old man, you ought to move out to Lonelywood. Its peacefulness and quiet would make you live twice as long as you will. Citily—But if I were living out there I shouldn't care to live twice as long.—Judge.

"Only think," exclaimed Fenderson, "of the many uses to which paper is now put!" "I know," replied Bass. "I was at the theater the other night, and I was told it was all paper. And it was a fine, substantial-looking structure, too."—Boston Transcript.

"I heard, sir, that you said my piano playing sounded part of the time as if I were jumping on the keys with both feet." "Exactly, madam. I referred to the pianissimo passages. Any one who would stop to think would know that such small and delicate feet as yours could only produce the softest effects."—Washington Star.

Honeymoons Out of Fashion.

There is a new and unromantic fashion fast gaining ground. London brides and bridegrooms have fallen out of love with the idea of a honeymoon, and are adopting the expedient of going straight away to their new home; or, if the new home is not quite in order, of staying at a hotel until the painters and upholsterers have done their work for good and all. There is much to be said both for and against the abolishment of the honeymoon.

A Friend's Advice.

Some four or five years ago J. A. Goodyear, a young man full of life and vigor, left the old farm in Calhoun county, for the more active life in the city. Drifting into the telegraph business, he secured a position on the C. & N. W. railroad, at Republic, Mich. In addition to his duties as operator, he was required to sell tickets, baggage and make himself generally useful. Between the exacting officials on the one side and the consistent public on the other, he was worked and worried to such an extent that his health gave out and one day he was carried to his home, after having a severe nervous spasm; he grew from bad to worse until he had to relinquish his position, a physical wreck.

The doctor could not cure him and told him so, but advised him to go to Ann Arbor and place himself in charge of that world wide institution of learning, which he did. He continued with their treatment constantly and faithfully for four long years, receiving little, if any, benefit. While in this condition, a friend gave him a bottle of Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer, with an urgent request to use it. Not wishing to offend his friend, he promised to do so, but did not, because, as he argued with himself, "What is the use of taking that 'stuff' if the most learned nerve specialists in the world can not cure me?" But as time passed he would occasionally think of the neglected bottle of medicine given him and his promise to use it. One day he picked it up and mechanically pulled the cork, measured out a dose and took it. A change seemed to come over him his nervousness abated, his mind became clear and he thought he felt something of his old time vigor. He continued taking the Vitalizer until he was able to sit up, then to walk a few steps; the sluggish blood in his veins became active color returned to his flesh and he felt the need of more food. He soon improved so that he sought and became engaged in light labor and earned the first dollar in nearly two years; hope attained its long vacated position in his brain and his friends rejoiced at the wonderful change. Mr. Goodyear is now leading a thoroughly active and successful life which he says he is proud to attribute to Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer, the greatest nerve builder ever produced for nervous prostration, spasms, fits, sleeplessness, mental depression, exhausted vitality, despondency, sexual and general debility. Wabash Depot Touched

Sometime Sunday night the Wabash ticket office was broken into and the money drawer broke open. No money was in the drawer and consequently no money was taken. Mr. Zent had not gone over the tickets when the reporter was there this morning and hence did not know if any were taken. It is thought they gained an entrance at the south window.

MRS. LUCETTA BOWAN.

Mrs. Bowan has been a sufferer for some time, but death came to her relief yesterday morning, June 16 at 3 o'clock. There had been some question as to her ailment and a post mortem was had, conducted by Dr. Nusbaum assisted by Dr. Willard Swarts. The operation was witnessed by Drs. D. J. and Vesta M. Swarts and Drs. A. L. and F. M. Hines. Dr. A. F. Phillips was also present. They found a growth on the liver involving the surrounding structure and also a gallstone was found. Mrs. Bowan will be buried to-morrow, the funeral being at the M. E church at 10 a. m.

All True

P. A. Sibert who was on the Pyle farm for two years, living in Mr. Pyle's house, was in to-day, and says that the account of the gas explosion, spoken of in Conrad Mann's statement a few weeks ago, was all true. He was in the house at the time and heard the explosions. Besides he has heard them and the other strange noises several times. They are especially frequent and plain in winter. We give this additional statement because some seem to doubt as to these strange doings. But everyone who has heard them is as certain as to the existence of gas, as Mr. Pyle himself.

BROWNE-COXEY.

After having been cast out by Coxey, Carl Browne took advantage of the former's absence from town Friday afternoon to secretly marry his daughter Mamie, the Goddess of Peace of commonweal fame, Browne is forty-eight and the girl eighteen years old. The facts leaked out Saturday. The bride has returned to her father's home and the groom announces he will not claim his wife until the Fourth of July, when he intends to have another spectacular ceremony. They were united in a photograpo gallery, the expectation being to sell pictures of the event. The child's mother, Mrs. Coxey No. 1, is prostrated by her daughter's indiscretion, Coxey's friends are furious with indignation because of Browne's act in marrying an unsophisticated school girl in the absence of her father.

Gen. Coxey is at Philadelphia and said: "I shall not make any trouble when I reach home. My home will be open to her at any time in the future should she repent of her bargain.

MADE FOR US.

Those who heard the witty poem recited by Gertie Caruth, at the Grammar School Commencement last evening, may feel an interest in its history. It is by Will Carleton and was written for one of our county teachers' institutes several years ago and dedicated to the teachers of the county. The institute was held that year at Butler, the Editor of this paper being at that time county superintendent. Mr. Carleton had been engaged to give a reading of his poems for one evening, and the meeting was in the Lutheran church. The house was crowded and the assembled teachers were greatly pleased to to hear a famous poet recite his own verses. After giving us, in excellent style several of his then best ones, he, to the great amusement of the teachers recited this one, "The Teacher's Guests" as he called it. It was very appropriate for such a gathering. After the meeting was over it was remarked to him, that was a new poem or at least we never heard it before. To which the poet laughingly replied. "No you never heard it before, for it was made for this meeting and I dedicated it to the teachers of your county," of course we all felt flattered but the incident had been almost forgotten till its reproduction last evening by Miss Caruth.

Four Big Successes.

Having the needed merit to more than make good all the advertising claimed for them, the following four remedies have reached a phenomenal sale. CROPS.

In passing through the country between here and Logansport this week we took some pains to look at the growing crops and found the outlook rather discouraging for wheat. It is small and short and often very thin. Still, some fields will produce part of a crop provided the stalk is long enough to cut for sometimes the head is found to be much better than the stalk would seem to indicate. Corn looks pretty well and some of it is unusually large for the season. Grass makes a poor show and the same may be said of oats, though both may yet be benefited by rains. But the wheat crop is too far advanced to receive much benefit from even a continued and heavy rain. Outside of DeKalb county it did not bid fair to make a third of a crop possibly not that. In our own county we think it is better but it is not very encouraging. In some parts of our county, are some fields of wheat that are good but that is not the rule. We have been favored with more rain than other sections.

Waterproof collars and cuffs that will not wilt, are not effected by moisture and look just like linen are all the fashion now. They are made by covering a linen collar or cuff with "celluloid" and are the only waterproof goods made with an interlining, consequently the only ones that will stand wear and give perfect satisfaction. Try them and you will never regret it. Always neat, and easily cleaned. When soiled simply wipe off with a wet cloth or sponge. Every piece of the genuine is stamped as follows:

TRADE ELLULOID MARK.

Ask for those so marked and refuse any imitations, as they cannot possibly please you. If your dealer does not keep them, we will send a sample direct on receipt of price. Collars 25c each, Cuffs 50c. pair. State size and whether stand-up or turned-down collar is wanted.

COMMENCEMENT.

THE THIRTEENTH ANNUAL COMMENCEMEN OF THE HIGH SCOOLS ONE OF ITS VERY BEST.

About eight last evening the graduates of our High School faced as fine an audience as any class could wish, an audience that came to admire and appreciate Our people are loyal to our school and the graduates and they came prepared to enjoy the exercises to the utmost. The class was composed of excellent material, and altogether, as fine a class in fact as we have had. They are Marie Bishop, Elsie Caruth, Nellie Gilbert, Mary E. Rose, Mae Hamilton, Lester Feagler and Joseph Tarney. A delayed train prevented our hearing Miss Gilbert or Miss Caruth but their productions were said to be excellent by those fortunate enough to hear them. Miss Caruth has an especial gift in elocutionary work and is always pleasing. Lester Feagler was the first we heard, and at the start we feared our young friend was going to be frightened, but did not go that way, for he was soon at ease and gave a very successful talk on a rather difficult subject, "America for Americans." Joseph Tarney spoke on "A modern Phase of Education" which he handled well. His youthful, in fact, boyish appearance, made one think of him more as a member of some of the lower classes, but his treatment of the subject was all one could wish. Mae Hamilton, "A Man's a Man for a' That" was good and she has an easy way at her work that gained her a favorable consideration from the start. She is a good reader, and we emphasize this as we are aware that few young people can lay claim to it. Few us make it sufficiently emphatic to induce more of our otherwise finely educated people to add to their other accomplishments, this one, which will greatly enhance the value of all the others. May Rose is a success in all her exercises of this kind. She has that valuable quality in a reader or speaker, that enables her to sustain herself with ease and natural strength, on to the close. So many young people start too strong, under the influence of the first effort and then weaken. Others are weak and frightened at the first and must warm up with the work before they can overcome this. Then, too, her subject was excellent. "The Modern Micawber," for we have him with us always. Marie Bishop took a new departure, giving her subject "Dream of a Senior on the Eve of Graduation," in verse. People should be generous in criticising compositions in verse for it is a difficult style of composition. From a literary point of view it was very creditable and was all through very entertaining, just as one would expect from general words, even at the risk of making this too lengthy. But we have our excuse in the fact that we have no dearer interests than our young people and no more valuable means to assist these interests than our schools. Then we say in a general statement, that this class is composed of better readers as an entire body than any that has preceded it. Not only was the more mechanical part of the reading better as to inflection pause and tone, but the enunciation was better, the articulation was clearer and purer and the delivery more deliberate than is usual. Let our young people be impressed with this simple statement, that these qualities we have just mentioned are more valuable than precious metals to anyone who reads or speaks to others in public. The best orations they could produce would make little impression if weakly or carelessly, or indifferently given. A deliberate, clear and distinct reading enables the hearers to grasp the thought contained. And this is the chief aim of all public speaking or reading. These good qualities were especially noticeable in Miss Servoss' Class Address which followed. She is very much at ease and all through her excellent talk made the audience feel that she had so mastered her subject that it had become her servant and she could do with it as she pleased. And she pleased to give it in excellent taste.

In conclusion, we do not intend, in these good words for the class of '95 to flatter them, but to encourage not only them but those who come after them. For several years our graduating classes have seemed to be starting out on a line of improvement which has wrought a wonderful amount of good. There is much more of excellence still to be attained. Be encouraged.

We add a few words as to the music The orchestra Borst's, did the finest work that any orchestra either local or foreign ever has done in Auburn. We cannot speak too highly of this feature. There were other good features we like. The graduates arose in turn with great promptness, yet no appearance of haste. There was nothing for Mr. Harrison or Mr. Teeters, both of whom were on the stage, to do. It had all been done before. Then the class motto was "of the best, "Honor Waits at Labor's Gate." This was in plain English like that of the Grammar Class. The diplomas were presented with the briefest possible words, and always at this point the people have lost a part of their interest and are ready to close.

FIRE AT BUTLER.

Guisinger's saw mill, at Butler caught fire and burned to the ground last night. The mill was all ablaze before it was discovered. We could could not learn what the loss amounted to but it was a small mill and completely destroyed.

Right Arm Paralyzed!

Saved from St. Vitus Dance.

"Our daughter, Blanche, now fifteen years of age, had been terribly afflicted with nervousness, and had lost the entire use of her right arm. We feared St. Vitus dance, and tried the best physicians, with no benefit. She has taken three bottles of Dr. Miles' Nervine and has gained 31 pounds. Her nervousness and symptoms of St. Vitus dance are entirely gone, she attends school regularly, and has recovered complete use of her arm, her appetite is splendid."

SAY : :

HOW MUCH DO YOU OWE ?

Who holds your mortgage? How much interest are you paying? Do you owe a building loan association anything? If you do, how much interest are you paying them? Unless you are better posted than the majority of people who have such loans, you cannot tell. You think you are paying 6 per cent. Do you know (of course not) that you are paying at least 12 per cent. If you think not, just figure it out yourself. Now then, are you not paying 6 per cent interest and 6 per cent premium? Certainly. Well now don't you know that premium and interest are the same thing—its all interest. Can you afford to pay 12 per cent interest to a loan association when even your banks only charge 8 per cent and you think they are charging too much, and when do you expect to have your loan canceled or paid off in full? You have been told 72 or 78 months. Now then, we undertake to say that it will take you 100 months, if you will call on us we will show you so you will be satisfied that we are right. Now then, we are prepared to loan you money on monthly installment plan for 8 per cent, we charge you no membership fee and you do not have to make three or more payments in advance so that if on account of insufficient security or bad title your loan is rejected you will not lose one cent. You pay nothing unless your loan is granted. We are making farm loans at from 3 to 5 per cent with privilege of partial payments.

ANOTHER THING!

There is scarcely a day but what there is some traveling agent for some building loan association in Auburn soliciting business, selling stock upon which they charge you a membership fee of from 50 cents to $1.00 per share, which amount goes to the agent and you never get back this money thrown away. If you will call on us we will take your application for all the stock you want in the BEST (we can prove it) building loan association in the state the INDIANA MUTUAL OF INDIANAPOLIS, and charge you No MEMBERSHIP FEE AT ALL. This is certainly fair. If you have any investment stock in any association just write them a letter and ask them the withdrawal value of same, their reply will probably open your eyes. What would you say if you would deposit $8.00 per month in your bank for one year and wanted to withdraw the same and they would offer to pay you only about $80? The bank would only have to do this in one case to be compelled to retire from business. Now you pay ten dollars membership fee and 8 dollars for 12 months making 108 dollars, you lose the 10 dollars membership fee and 10 cents per share each month for expenses, making 12 dollars, or a total of 22 dollars loss upon which you would receive 6 per cent interest for average time on 96 dollars, making 2 dollars and 88 cts. from 22 dollars would leave you a loser of 19 dollars and 12 cents. In our association your stock is worth alll you have paid in, with its interest added, so that upon withdrawal you do not get less than you paid. We want the people of Auburn to become familiar with this matter, and would like to have any that are interested to call and talk with us, we can give you some pointers.

We are still in the Real Estate, Insurance and R. R. Ticket business.

Festival.

The Smithfield Center Sunday school will give a social at the Center on Saturday evening June 29, for the benefit of the school. There will be ice cream, cake, and all needed things to make up a pleasant time. The school is comparatively new, and has been built up by the people. All should patronize them.

Scott-Weamer.

At the home of the bride on West Fourth street at 4 p. m., Sunday June 23 occurred the marriage of Horace F. Scott, of Aberden S. D. to Mrs. Sallie Weamer. The ceremony was performed by Rev. J. K. Walts of the M. E church, in the presence of the relatives and a few friends. Mr. and Mrs. Scott left at 7:35 over the B & O. for a two weeks' sojourn at Washington, Buffalo, Niagra Falls, New York, Chautauqua and other principal eastern cities. Only those present besides the relatives were, Dr. and Mrs. Nusbaum, Mrs. John Robbins, Albert Weaver, and Mrs. T. G. Morse and daughter Lela, of Angola. The COURIER joins with their many friends in congratulations.

The people of Garrett will give this fine representation July 4 at 7:30 just before the fire works and all who are present in the town that day should not fail to attend as it is a fine thing. Remember the time and place, Garrett, July 4, at 7:30 p. m.

Auburn Orchestra.

The fine orchestra heretofore known as the Borst Orchestra, but now called the "Auburn Orchestra," will now be prepared to furnish music to parties needing their services. They are under the direction of Milo Calkin, and all communications should be addressed to him.

No Difference.

Are you rich or poor? It makes no difference, if you are afflicted with any of the thousand and one nervous troubles to which we Americans are subject, and which appears to have baffled our best physicians. A specific has been found—Vitaline and Nervetone—the invention of a celebrated Scotch chemist, the talk of Europe just introduced in the United States by the Hall Medicine Company, Toledo, O, and for sale by Fischler & Son druggists. It never disappoints. Avoid dangerous substitutes and imitations. 25 26

CASTORIA

for Infants and Children.

MOTHERS, Do You Know that Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, many so-called Soothing Syrups, and most remedies for children are composed of opium or morphine?

Do You Know that opium and morphine are stupefying narcotic poisons?

Do You Know that in most countries druggists are not permitted to sell narcotics without labeling them poisons?

Do You Know that you should not permit any medicine to be given your child unless you or your physician know of what it is composed?

Do You Know that Castoria is a purely vegetable preparation, and that a list of its ingredients is published with every bottle?

Do You Know that Castoria is the prescription of the famous Dr. Samuel Pitcher. That it has been in use for nearly thirty years, and that more Castoria is now sold than of all other remedies for children combined?

Do You Know that the Patent Office Department of the United States, and of other countries, have issued exclusive right to Dr. Pitcher and his assigns to use the word "Castoria" and its formula, and that to imitate them is a state prison offense?

Do You Know that one of the reasons for granting this government protection was because Castoria had been proven to be absolutely harmless?

Do You Know that 35 average doses of Castoria are furnished for 35 cents, or one cent a dose?

Do You Know that when possessed of this perfect preparation, your children may be kept well, and that you may have unbroken rest?

Well, these things are worth knowing. They are facts.

The fac-simile signature of Chas. H. Fletcher is on every wrapper.

Old Settlers.

The meeting began at 10 a. m. in the public square, though as usual but little could be done. They were called to order by the president J. E. Rose and prayer was offered by Rev. J. D. Brosy. The minutes of the last meeting were then read by the secretary, D. Z. Hoffman. A committee was appointed to select names for next year's officers as follows: B. A. Hadsell, L. J. Blair, C. J. Coats, O. C. Clark, D. Y. Husselman. Adjourned till 1:30 p. m.

AFTERNOON.

Meeting was called to order on time, and after a song by the glee club, the regular business began. The first on program was

GEN. BLAIR'S SPEECH.

Sixty years ago, there were but 60 families DeKalb County. Now note all the vast multitudes of the county occupy these fertile fields to attest the endurance of the pioneers and fertility of our soil. I was a boy of six years then, and so far am not particularly responsible for the good management of the business of that early day. The speaker compared the hardships of early day, with the greater ease of later conditions. Then, the fields were small and hard to plough, compared with the present fields. The distance we had to go to town. He remembered there were only three buggies in the county at one time, and for even these, no good roads to run them Only a few men are now left of these early settlers. He spoke of J. J. Gunsenhouser yesterday who at 90 walked to Butler. He told some anecdotes of the cheerfulness and pluck of the old pioneers, and illustrated it by telling of the two veterans, one having lost the right arm and the other the left, consoled each other, with the fact, that the two would only have to buy one pair of gloves.

The early settlers were large hearted and hospitable. He could remember when several families gathered at his father's house and though the building was small there was plenty of room, and all were surely sheltered, "and there was always room for one more." Perhaps we should not judge closely as to modern hospitality for then there was no other place to shelter them except in the home of the pioneer. Pioneers ought to be allowed to say "I helped and my neighbors helped to do all this." But we cannot be detained here long. Many are old some are infirm, the rain is falling; as night comes on it may be worse. We must not sacrifice the health or endanger the lives of these, so we shall soon close.

These are the men who stood side by side when the log house was built, when the heavy logs were piled high in the log heap in the clearing of farms. Let us spare them from more physical suffering. He spoke of the time there were no grain cradles in the county. Then wishing them all many happy returns of this day he bade them good bye. The glee club then sang in their best style, an inspirting song, while the raised umbrellas told of the failure of the rain to prevent their enjoyment of the music. The club are, Mrs. Garwood, Mrs. R. Shull, Miss Maude Trover, J. M. Widney, George Stealy, T. P. Scott and B. M. Hastings.

BIOGRAPHER'S REPORT.

At the call of the President, J E. Rose, M. B. Willis the biographer read the following names of the pioneers who had passed away during the year:

Mrs. Peter Wyrick, Peter Showalter, Rosanna Skilling, Maria Erehart, C. Tryon, Holmes Link, John Lutz, J. D. McAnally, Laura Webster, James Till, John McCune, Jonas Eberly, Anthony Dodge, Daniel Salander, Rosanna Garrett, Wesley S. Maxwell, Nathan Squires, Catherine Schoup, Margaret Sheets, Lucetta Bone, A. J. Carmer, John W. Shaffer.

Mr. Rose then called attention to the organization of a county historical society. W. H. McIntosh reported as to what had been done and in an earnest speech, urged, as the biographer also had that more care be taken in reporting matters of interest to the association. On motion of B. A. Hadsell, the chair was instructed to appoint a committee of three as a preliminary step. B A. Hadsell, W. H. McIntosh and M. B. Willis were appointed.

Mr. Zeigler then recited Will Carleton' famous poem. "Over the Hills from the Poorhouse."

The report of the committee on election of officers, here reported the following list, which was adopted L. J. Blair, president; E. D. Hartman, vice president; D. Y. Husselman, sec.; D. W. Fair, treas; J. E. Rose, biographer. For township vice-president; Butler Phil. Noel; Jackson, Wm. Carr; Concord, R. G. Coburn; Newville, S. G. Flint; Stafford, I. Gunsenhouser; Wilmington, P. B. Nimmons; Union, G. W. Gordon; Keyser, Elias Fisher; Richland, G. I. Paterson; Grant, R. N. Crooks; Fairfield, Adam Deetz: Smithfield, J. E. Thomson; Franklin, John N. Clark; Troy, W. R Emerson.

There was a speech by Jonathan Boyle followed by handshaking. Then the Trumpet Note Band, that had discoursed sweet music for them, played again and adjournment followed. In spite of threatening and actual rain, the meeting was a splendid success.

OLD TIMES.

The following is a supposed speech of an Old Settler, and finds its way to our table and as it follows nicely on the talks of an Old Settlers' day we give it space.

I tell ye times have changed a pile
Since I was in my teens;
We young fellers had a way them days
Of livin' within our means.

We did not squander all our "stuff"
While courtin' of a girl;
But saved a bit fer startin'
In the matrimonial whirl.

These days a man witn scarse enough
Fer lodgin' an' fer board,
Pays out the surplus cash he has
The cash he oughter hoard,

A takin' his gal a drivin'
An' buyin' opera seats,
An' ice cream soda an' all sich
Evanescent sort o' treats.

When I was young, it wasn't so
We had the jolliest times,
A tendin' raisin's and huskin's
An' yet we saved our dimes.

Now, the young feller of to-day
Knows nothing of the fun,
His father had in sleigh rides
Not in cutter, but in pung.

My time is short, so with a snort
I'll stop right now to say,
We had the jolliest times
In the good old fashioned way.

Old Time Economy.

A man went to a Pennsylvania inn the other day and took a bag of oats out of his wagon box to feed the horse, thereby avoiding the 25 cents fee for a horse feed. He went to a grocery and bought some crackers and cheese, but the landlord kicked when the man asked permission to eat his lunch in the dining-room.—Exchange.

And yet what this farmer did was quite a common practice in Pennsylvani fifty years ago. All the landlord expected of such customers was that they buy a few three-cent glasses of whiskey, or, in case they stay over night, pay ten cents for the use of a bed provided they did not bring blankets and sleep on the floor, and five cents for a cup of coffee in the morning. Before the advent of canals and railroads in that state, huge four and six horse teams drove from Pittsburg to Philadelphia, loaded with the products of the distilleries of the former city on going east, and with merchandise on returning. The teamsters had to economize in the manner spoken of, and the tavern keepers were glad to get their custom, little as it amounted to.

STABBED!

A horrible stabbing affair occurred between Mooresville and Norris Chapel Saturday evening. Clement Clinger and Milo Albright, two lads about 16 years of age who reside with their parents about one mile north of Mooresville had, it seems, been having some trouble about Mr. Clinger crossing over Mr. Albright's farm and tramping down his corn, Mr Albright, father of the boy notified Mr. Clinger that he should not destroy his corn, and it seems the son had also told other parties that Clinger had tramped down their corn. Saturday evening the two boys met, Mr. Clinger was in his buggy and Mr. Albright was on his bicycle. As they passed by Mr. Clinger called Mr. Albright a d——d liar and dared him to stop. Albright immediately stopped and Clinger jumped out of his buggy and went at him with his pen knife. He stabbed him three or four times, one gash being in the center of the breast, another at the right of the breast and one in the right arm. All of these were in to the bone. A few words were then passed and Clinger again stabbed Albright making in all nine times. Mr. Albright did not realize he was hurt much and soon mounted his wheel and rode off. He only went about one mile when he gave out and had to be carried to his home. Two doctors were summoned from Butler and upon investigation found some of the wounds very bad The blood oozed out of the gash every time he would breath. He was under the doctor's care all day yesterday. There has not, as yet, been any thing done with Mr. Clinger and it is thought he would not try to get away and hence will be left till the grand jury meets.

Forty Barrels a Day.

Harris & Buquo., Erin, Tenn., manufacturers of the celebrated Erin Lime, say they have great faith in Drummond's Lightning Remedy for Rheumatism. One of their principal coopers was laid up with Rheumatism until induced to take Drummond's Lightning Remedy. After taking two bottles he went to work, and has since been making Forty Barrels per day. If you want this remedy, send $5 to the Drummond Medicine Co., 48 Maiden Lane, New York, and they will send to your express address two large bottles—enough for one month's treatment. A Death Blow to Roby.

In an exhaustive opinion handed down by the Indiana Supreme Court and in which opinion all the Judges concur, the Governor gained a substantial victory over the Roby Racing Association, his contentions being fully sustained by the court. The laws of Indiana provide that no racing meet shall last more than fifteen days and thirty days must intervene between each meet by the association. The Roby association has been changing its name every fifteen days to conform to the law, but the court now says: "The contention of the racing association that it has the right to sublet the track and thus provide for continuous races is plausible, but such a construction of the law would defeat its whole purpose."

Murdered for Their Money.

Barboursville (Ky.) special: What is considered reliable information was received here that Gus Lobe and wife, formerly of this place, were robbed and murdered by a band of outlaws in Harlan County. Lobe was a German peddler and often carried a large amount of money with him. His wife at the time of the robbery had $400 in her possession, and Lobe $200. When attacked the two made a determined resistence and were both riddled with bullets. There were six men in the band and are supposed to live near Hagan, Va. The murder was committed between Hagan and Harlan Courthouse.

Gen. Gresham's Will.

The will of Gen. Walter Q. Gresham, late Secretary of State, has been admitted to probate at Chicago. It is written in Judge Gresham's own hand writing, upon one sheet of paper, dated December 18, 1888, and is as follows: "I give, devise, and bequeath to my wife, Matilda Gresham, all my estate, property, and effects, real, personal and every kind and description and wheresoever situated, to have and hold absolutely. I appoint my said wife sole executrix of this will."

The Iron Trade.

Iron and steel men report great improvement in every branch of their trade. Wages are being advanced and prices are going up. It is announced that the Lackawanna Iron and Steel company with general offices in New York, has posted a notice at its factories increasing wages of employes 10 per cent. to commence July 12. The advance affects nearly 6,000 men. News also come that the Fair Hill rolling mills of Philadelphia, had advanced wages 10 per cent.

The Prize Ring.

Dan Creedon of Australia, whipped Billy Hennessy of Boston, in six rounds, in the Suffolk Athletic Club, West Newton street, Boston. It was plain to the 800 spectators present that Creedon would win after the first round, but Hennessy made a plucky battle while it lasted. In the sixth round, when he was floored with a left-hand punch, which dazed him, he made a desperate attempt to regain his feet, but a right-hand swing on the jaw put him out.

The Earth Torn.

A few days ago there was an explosion of natural gas at White Bluff, Dickson county, Tenn., that threw up several tons of earth and stones, and next day another explosion occurred near the scene of the first. Great blocks of stones weighing several tons were thrown out. The roar of escaping gas can be heard for some distance. People of Dickson county are greatly excited over it.

Total Japanese Casualties.

A list of the total casualties in the Japanese armies during the war has been officially published. Six hundred and twenty-three were killed in battle and 172 died of wounds. Two thousand nine hundred and eighty one were wounded, but not fatally, and 2,479 died of cholera and 2,981 of other diseases.

The Price of Oil Raised.

The Standard has made another two-cent raise in the price of Ohio oil, the price now being 79c a barrel. Another shortage in the supply on hand is reported to be the cause of the raise, which was made in the hope of again stimulating the independent producers in their efforts to bring the oil to the surface.

Distressing Accident.

While attempting to adjust a belt at Morris' factory, at Beaver Dam, Ohio, Archie Ransbottom was caught and whirled around the shaft until he was battered to death. His father witnessed the accident, but did not know it was his son until he was taken down dead.

Katie Couldn't Wait.

Katie McCoy, 14 years of age, residing on Lawrence street, Philadelphia, committed suicide under peculiar circumstances. Her elder sister promised to present her with a shirt waist. The sister disappointed the child, whereupon Katie hanged herself with a clothes line.

Fourteen Poisoned.

At a family reunion near Tilton, Iowa, fourteen persons have been poisoned. Jacob Trout died, but the others will recover. The poison is supposed to have been in water taken from an unused well A dead bat was found in the well.

Havoc in the Oil Field.

A special from Wapakoneta, Ohio, says: Lightning and storm played havoc in the oil field in this vicinity. Nichols & Levy's loss will reach about $1,000, while in the Buckland field the loss cannot now be estimated.

Indian Skeletons Found.

A large mound was opened at Lynn, Ind., for gravel for use on the streets and roads, when it was found to be an ancient burying ground. One hundred skeletons were exhumed, some of them being found at a depth of eight feet. They are supposed to be the remains of Indians of the mound-building age. Some were standing erect, others sitting, and some of the heads were between the knees. A number of spear heads, arrow heads, stone axes and rude implements were also found among the skeletons.

Wreck Caused by Flood.

The north-bound-flyer of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas was wrecked at a point ten miles north of Houston, Texas. The wreck occurred at a branch of White Oak Bayou, which is usually dry, but had been swollen by heavy rains. Engineer Henry Garrett, when within twenty yards of the bridge, saw it sag and applied the air-brakes. The engine remained on the track, while the tender, baggage car, smoker, and two coaches left the track and turned over. Conductor Johnson walked back to Houston, a distance of about eight miles, and a relief train was sent to the scene with surgeons. About a score of passengers were injured, some fatally.

CUBAN NEWS.

The Insurgents Win a Gallant Battle.

Havana special: A battle was fought on the 20th inst., between insurgents and Spanish near Vega Alta, in the Province of Remedios, in which the latter were defeated. The insurgents were commanded by Roloff and the Spaniards by Colonel Salamanco, son of the General of that name. Salamanco was killed with about sixty of his men. The insurgent loss was small. Every day now adds to the strength of the insurgents. There are uprisings in San Jose, Las Lajas, Santiago de Las Vegas, Guira and Alquizar. The Spaniards seem utterly unable to cope with the revolution. In addition to numerous uprisings, the Spanish army is in a mutinous state. The soldiers are badly treated and poorly fed, and desertions are increased.

Col. Bassallo, with 480 men, has deserted and joined the insurgents. A Lieutenant of Volunteers with fifty men has also deserted near Camauga. One hundred men, composing the First Battallion of Volunteers, stationed here, have been arrested and put in the cabanas for refusing to go into the field. Coronado, editor of La Discussion, was arrested for publishing reports from correspondents in the field. The Cubans here are greatly excited and elated by the news that the United States will force Spain to pay the Mora claim. They say the news will cause thousands to join the insurgents under the impression that the United States is really hostile to Spain.

INTERNAL REVENUES.

Report of the Fiscal Year Shows a Gain of Nearly $90,000.

Washington special: A statement prepared at the Treasury Department shows the aggregate receipts from internal revenue sources during the eleven months of the fiscal year ending May 30, 1895, to have been $131,420,636, a gain of about $89,400 over the same period last year. The receipts from the several sources of revenue are given as follows: Spirits, $74,232,200; same period last year, $75,860,447; tobacco, $27,215,082; same period last year, $26,081,580; fermented liquors, $28,046,059; same period last year, $27,821,054; oleomargarine, $1,323,361; same period last year, $1,619,706; income tax, $77,130; miscellaneous sources, $526,801; same period last year, $137,608.

During the month of May there was a decrease from May, 1894, of $1,858,632 in the receipts from withdrawals of spirits, and $7,632 from oleomargarine. The increases were: Tobacco, 139,758; fermented liquors, $283,708; miscellaneous sources, $16,144.

Bank Robbers Foiled.

An attempt was made to rob the Exchange National bank at Colorado Springs, Colo., but it failed, as Sheriff Bowers had been informed of the plot several days before and officers were watching for the would-be robbers. Fred George and "Red" Hutchins entered the bank and George pulled a revolver and called on Cashier Heron to throw up his hands. He dropped behind the counter. George and Hutchins were quickly seized by Sheriff Bowers and Deputy Sheriff Bramlett, who followed them into the bank. E. M. Kennedy, a livery stable man, who was on guard at the bank door, and Robert O. McFarland, who was in charge of the team with which the robbers intended to escape, were also arrested. The prisoners are residents of the Springs. It is said that Hutchins is the man who gave the information of the plot to the authorities.

A Saloon Mobbed.

The village of Ba scom, Ohio, is greatly excited over an affair which happened in that town recently. On May 18 last Hopewell Township voted "dry," and since that time, it is alleged, Sidney J. Patterson has been conducting a place there, where he sold liquor. They have been using every effort to get rid of Patterson, and the other day about 75 people entered the place and began demolishing everything in sight. The shelves were torn down and everything movable loaded into a wagon and carted away. Jesse Kime, the clerk, drew a revolver on the looters, but was overpowered. Patterson has sworn out warrants for the arrest of 31 persons, a number of whom are women. Rev. W. K. Arnold, United Brethren minister, was the leader of the citizens.

Protecting Italians.

A telegram has been sent by the Italian counsel at Denver to Governor Hughes, asking him to protect the Italian laborers in the Congress mines, eighty miles north of Phœnix, Ariz., adding that the consul had telegraphed Secretary Olney the situation and asked his interference to protect their lives. Later a telegram from Secretary Onley arrived saying, "Protect the Italian miners at Congress mine." N. O. Murphy, delegate to congress, telegraphed immediately to Congress and received the reply, "No trouble here; but few Italians employed."

Horribly Burned.

A colored woman, cooking in the family of Ben Nance, at Hopkinsville, Ky., seized a skillet of grease that had caught fire on a stove and started for an open door to throw it out, when she accidentally ran against Mrs. Nance and her daughter with such violence as to upset the burning grease over all three of them, setting their clothing on fire. Mr. Nance was called, but did not succeed in extinguishing the flames until his wife was probably fatally burned. Miss Nance and the cook were also dangerously, if not fatally, burned. Their condition is critical.

The Business World.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade says: From all parts of the United States the best advices obtainable, tell of a rising tide of trade and industry which threatens here and there to mount too fast. The volume of all business is by no means equal to that of 1892 as yet, though in some important branches it is larger than in that or any other year. Two influences of tremendous power contribute to the rise, encouraging crop news and the confident replenishing of stocks, which have been for two years depleted to the utmost.

Pleasure Seekers Drowned.

A pleasure party of six members, all prominent young people of Tuskegee, Ala., were on a fishing excursion at Perry's mill-pond, when their boat capsized, precipitating them into the water. All except Miss W. C. Torrence clung to snags and stumps. She held to the capsized boat, which began sinking. When she cried for help Lewis Cox, who could not swim, went to her rescue, and in his efforts to save her both were drowned. The others were rescued after a two-hour struggle in the water.

Shot by a Spy.

Tampa (Fla.) special: Captain General Campsoa has been shot by a Cuban spy named Puerta Sanchez. This is currently reported in Havana and has just reached this point through passengers on the Masscott. Sanchez it is reported, after having shot the captain general, jumped overboard and swam to shore, amid a shower of bullets from the man-of-war.

Fire at Pittsburgh.

Fire burned Neil & Co.'s livery stable on Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh. Four men were in the stable at the time, two of whom were rescued. The other two men are as yet unaccounted for. Forty-six head of horses perished in the flames. A number of fine carriages were also destroyed. The loss will reach $10,000. Several dwellings were also burned.

Gored Her to Death.

Mrs. Mary Myers, wife of a prominent farmer at Rochester, Ohio, died in great agony, from the effect of being gored by a mad cow a few days ago. The infuriated cow rushed upon her and buried one of its horns in the woman's abdomen, making a sickening wound from which the intestines protruded. Heroic efforts were made to save Mrs. Myers' life, but in vain.

British Landing at Formosa.

The London Times has a Hong Kong dispatch which says that the British cruiser, Painbow, has landed a hundred marines at Aping, Formosa, making more than two hundred men now ashore there. The Black Flag general has demanded their withdrawal, but the British commander has refused the demand and is preparing to resist an attack. No information is at hand concerning the Japanese movements.

Cowboys and Indians Fight.

Wichita special: There was a fight between cowboys and Cheyenne Indian cattle thieves on the North Canadian River in the neighborhood of Hennessy, in which one of the braves was shot through the shoulder by Jack Burk, a cowboy. The Indians at the Cantonment reservation are greatly excited and swear vengeance. A raid upon the ranch to which the cowboys belong is hourly expected.

Cabinet Crisis in Great Britain.

London, special: A cabinet council has been summoned. Mr. Campbell-Bennerman, secretary of state for war, will offer to resign because of the reduction by the house of commons of the vote for supply of small arms and ammunition contained in the war estimates. A section of the liberals urge the ministers to call a general party conference to consider the matter of dissolving parliament.

South Bend Tragedy.

Lawyer F. P. Creed was shot by Daniel T. Maes, proprietor of a cider press at South Bend, Ind., and probably fatally injured. Maes fired three shots into Creed's body during an altercation over financial matters. The shooting occurred at the cider mill. Maes had become embarrassed lately and being pressed by his creditors and seeing ruination staring him in the face, became desperate.

Four Tramps Killed.

A disastrous freight wreck occurred on the main line of the Baltimore and Ohio Southwestern Railway, about five miles from Bedford, Ind. A through freight train jumped the track and caused a broken wheel. Fourteen cars were ditched, and it is reported that four tramps were killed. Three carloads of cattle were crushed to death.

Found in a Convent.

Miss May Belle Critchfield of St. Louis Mo., the young heiress who so mysteriously disappeared a few days ago, was found in the Convent of the Good Shepherd, whither she had gone voluntarily in pursuance of a frequently expressed determination to join that community. She refuses to return home.

Street Car Barns Burned.

At Seattle, Wash., fire destroyed about $200,000 worth of property belonging to the Seattle Consolidated Street Railway Company. The company's power house, a brick structure, was totally destroyed, together with twenty-five cars. The electric plant, the most complete in the Northwest, is in ruins.

Request to Ministers.

The National Christian Citizenship League, with headquarters at 153 La Salle street, Chicago, has asked the clergymen of the country to preach on "Christian Citizenship" on Sunday, June 30, and offers to furnish aggressive literature to those applying for it.

Frightened to Death.

As Will Downing and wife, of near Sunbury, Pa., were driving, their horse became unmanageable. Mrs. Downing, who was subject to heart trouble, was frightened so that she became unconscious, and died soon after.

Flagman Killed.

At Steubenville, Ohio, Harry E. Biles, a flagman on the Steubenville construction train of the Pan-handle Road, was struck by a railroad tie across the breast, crushing him so badly that he died of internal injuries.

A Bible's Travels.

Thirty-one years ago Charles Breisford of St. Paris, Ohio, lost a Bible in the Lynchburg raid. The other day he received it from the War Department. It had been in a family at Savannah, Ga.

An Edict.

Archbishop Corrigan has issued an edict calling upon all female members of the Roman Catholic Church to refrain from bicycle riding, on the grounds that he regards it as degrading to women.

Walls Fall.

While a number of workmen were engaged in demolishing the old City Hall at San Francisco, the wall fell killing James Williamson and injuring N. Nelson and John Sieber.

Will Benefit 1,800 Men.

The Illinois Steel Company has advanced the wages of its employes at the Bay View mills in Milwaukee 10 per cent. About 1,800 men are benefitted.

Lightning's Pranks.

Lightning struck a dynamite magazine near Kingwood, W. Va. Several men were killed and a great deal of property destroyed.

Death of Mr. Houston.

Henry H. Houston, a director of the Pennsylvania railroad, died at his home in Philadelphia.

UNION OF TWO SEAS.

FORMAL OPENING OF GERMANY'S NEW CANAL.

Grand Celebration of a Triumph of Modern Engineering—International Naval Flotilla One of the Features—Importance of the Waterway.

Boon to Commerce.

The most important event in the history of the German Empire since the crowning of William I. in the palace of Versailles was the opening of the North Sea and Baltic canal. This recently completed waterway was formally opened to commerce Thursday, with international ceremonies attended with splendid fetes, at which the governments of the civilized world were represented.

Four of our crack cruisers, the New York, Columbia, San Francisco and Marblehead, and vessels of other nations took part in the splendid naval review.

Kiel during the festivities presented a strikingly effective appearance. The flags of all nations were hoisted along the Alster, and the sentries at the doors of the principal hotels denoted the presence there of the imperial guests. Naturally the chief center of attraction was the seaport, where the display of warships attracted many thousands of spectators. Those of the United States, Great Britain, Italy and Austria were especially admired. The war vessels of fourteen nations hoisted their flags to the strains of the anthems of their respective countries. The Emperor of Germany opened the ceremony by passing in through the canal in the imperial yacht, thus breaking the frail thread stretched across the entrance.

EMPEROR WILLIAM OF GERMANY.

The most brilliant feature of the series of festivities was the laying of the last stone in the building of the canal and in the international banquet which followed, this marking virtually the close of the official program of festivities. This ceremony took place Friday in the open air at Hottenau. The spot where the Emperor performed this ceremony was embellished by handsome designs in landscape gardening, and the lighthouse, in close proximity, showed already the three bronze reliefs of Emperors William I., Frederick III. and William II. His Majesty Emperor William I. laid the corner stone of the Baltic canal on June 3, 1887, and accompanied his blows with the hammer by the words, "In honor of united Germany, to her permanent welfare, in token of her might and power." The lighthouse and the block of masonry into which the Emperor placed the finishing stone were surrounded by enormous scaffoldings rising amphitheatrically in a semi-circle and affording seating room for about 15,000. From these seats the whole space where the banquet took place and the bay where the international naval demonstration came off could be overlooked with ease. The grand banquet, at which 1,000 guests participated, including the diplomatic representatives of the various nations, was given in a structure of original design, the latter being based on an idea of the Emperor himself. The structure was a fac simile of a huge vessel of ancient construction as in vogue in the seventeenth century.

MAP OF THE NORTH SEA CANAL.

Canal Cost $38,500,000.

After the labors of eight years and an expenditure of about $38,500,000, with labor obtained at 75 cents a day, the great canal which joins the Baltic sea to the German ocean is open for use. It intersects the peninsula of Schleswig-Holstein from Brunsbuttel, near the mouth of the Elbe river, to Hottenau, on the Kiel bay, and opposite that city, a distance of about fifty-nine miles. For centuries vague projects connecting the North sea and Baltic ocean had been discussed, no less than sixteen different schemes having been advocated since the sixteenth century. It was not, however, until 1887 that the foundation stone of the present waterway was laid by Emperor William I., and since then the work has been rapidly pushed, being finished within the stipulated time. The canal is 217 feet wide at the surface, 86 feet at the bottom and 30 feet deep, thereby accommodating the largest vessels afloat. The rate of speed through the canal will be five miles an hour except in cases of war, when battleships can go at their swiftest rate. Four railways and ten highways crossing the canal have been bridged at such a height or provided with draws that they will admit the highest masts afloat. In the construction of the waterway 67,000,000 cubic yards of earth were excavated and from 5,000 to 10,000 men were constantly employed.

The effect of the Kiel canal will be to shorten the distance to the Baltic cities and save 35,000 merchantmen of all nations from rounding Denmark and braving the dangers of the Skager Rack and Kategat. This will be a blow to Copenhagen, but will save the loss of 200 vessels annually on the jagged reefs and islands off the Swedish and Danish coasts. In a military sense the canal more than doubles the effectiveness of the German fleets. In time of war they can be shifted from the Elbe to the Baltic in a few hours, while an enemy will be compelled to navigate the dangerous channels embracing the whole peninsula, losing two or three days in the circuit. The new canal, which Germany owes to the reign of William I., must be regarded as one of the most important enterprises of the last decade.

REPORTS ON FOREIGN CROPS.

Prospect of a Good Yield in Great Britain—Reduced Acreage in France.

The condition of crops in foreign countries is attracting much attention at the present time, and the reports thereon issued by the Agricultural Department are quite full. The main reports are as follows:

Great Britain—The varying conditions of weather have already affected the prospective hay crop, which cannot now be an average, owing to the absence of rain. The imports of hay are returning to the averages which existed before the great drought of 1893, the figures for April being 8,121 tons (of which 5,256 came from the United States), against 35,560 tons in April of last year. Cereals throughout the country look promising and the prospect is for a very good crop.

France—The greater part of May has been unusually cold, but considerable rain has fallen and winter growths are in fine condition. Spring sowings are also reported as doing well. Authorities anticipate a wheat crop of 280,000,000 to 290,000,000 bushels, a falling off from last year, due to reduced acreage.

Germany—An average wheat crop is now expected, but all reports concur in estimating the rye crop as under the average.

Austria-Hungary—Notwithstanding sufficient moisture, the prospects for cereal crops is characterized as a bare average, owing to the damage done by the extremely cold antecedent weather.

Roumania—The spring crops have been planted under favorable conditions. Wheat and rape seed are reported as doing well.

Russia—The general tenor of reports is unsatisfactory. Spring seeding accomplished very late in northern and central governments. From the Caucasus the reports are favorable. Extensive floods are reported from Poland and the southwest districts. Drought and black frost have effected some injury, it is reported, in the Black Sea district.

Sweden and Norway—The reports from these countries are more gloomy than from any other part of Europe, owing to the extreme dryness of the spring. It is generally admitted that both wheat and rye crops will be disappointing. The season is very late and heavy frosts have continued well through the month.

Italy—The weather has been favorable and a good average crop is expected.

Belgium and the Netherlands—Season backward, but every indication of good average crop.

Spain—Extremely cold weather for the season has checked growths, but cereals are generally reported as in favorable condition.

PROSPECTS FOR GOOD CROPS.

Reports Indicate a Heavy Yield in the West and Northwest.

Recent crop reports are to the effect that the outlook was never better than it is now. Along nearly all the Western railway systems the winter wheat crop is being harvested, and will be about half of what is considered normal. Rains have recently fallen over the entire West, particularly in Illinois, where complaints were being made of damage to hay, and near the southern boundaries, to oats. The actual damage to oats, however, will not affect general results. Spring wheat looks well, both in the West and Northwest. Prospects for a good corn crop are all that could be desired, all reports received merely adding to the favorable outlook. In Illinois hay is short, as it is also in southern Missouri, but in Iowa, Nebraska, Colorado, and especially Wyoming, large yields may be depended upon. Potatoes and fruit promise well, and the recent rains have led the farmers to put in late crops of potatoes, corn, and flax wherever there was an acre available. In some sections of Illinois grain has had more rain than was good for it, though in the same districts corn has held its own. Oats cover a large acreage everywhere, and with the possible chance of lodging through storms or local damage from "rust," which may come later, with extreme heat and moisture together, the crop seems assured. An unusually large amount of sugar beets has been planted in eastern Nebraska, showing that farmers have confidence in that crop, notwithstanding past failures. Railroads are preparing to move an immense harvest.

CARL BROWNE MARRIED.

He Takes for His Wife the Erstwhile "Goddess of Peace."

At Massillon, O., Carl Browne and Miss Mamie Coxey, erstwhile "Goddess of Peace" of the commonweal army, were secretly married by Justice Folger. The bride and groom separated after the ceremony, with the expectation of keeping the fact to themselves until the Fourth of July, when they expect to have another and a spectacular marriage in Washington. The groom is 45 years of age and the bride 19.

CARL BROWNE.

Matthew E. Shirley, a leading citizen of Lebanon, Ind., pleaded guilty to forging the name of his wealthy brother, the Rev. James Shirley, to a note, and was sentenced to two years in the penitentiary. After being sentenced he refused to shake hands with his preacher brother.

The shooting of Red Lodge, the Indian who was arrested for criminal assault at Arapahoe, may end in an outbreak of the Indians. Capt. Woodson, the Indian agent, says the shooting of Lodge was evidently prearranged by the sheriff of "G" County.

Charles S. Graham, an artist, formerly of Chicago, has mysteriously disappeared from the Hotel Mateo, San Francisco.

CLUBS AT CLEVELAND

REPUBLICAN LEAGUERS IN ANNUAL CONVENTION.

Currency Question Referred to the National Convention—Committee on Resolutions Compromises on an Address General in Character.

Let Silver Alone.

Cleveland correspondence:

The eighth national convention of Republican clubs convened Wednesday in Central Music Hall, Cleveland, with 2,000 delegates in the auditorium and the galleries filled with visitors.

After prayer by Rev. S. L. Darsie, Secretary Humphrey read the call, and addresses of welcome were made by Messrs. McKisson and President D. D. Woodmansee, of the Ohio League of Republican Clubs. President Tracy, of Chicago, then delivered the annual address, which was a review of events political since the last convention, an arraignment of the Democratic administration and policy and a cautious reference to silver, an enlarged use of which, the speaker said, everybody advocated, but how to bring this about was the question—one of economics, not politics. He impressed upon the convention, however, that it was not its business to select candidates or promulgate platforms, but to elect the former and promote the latter.

President Tracy was applauded all through his speech and at its close. Then the preliminary business of the convention was rapidly done. The secretary announced that there were represented at the convention forty-six States and territories, the largest number ever represented at any convention of the league. Among the delegates were a number of ladies, four from Colorado, one from New York, two from Washington and three from Illinois, the latter representing Woman's League clubs in that State. The ladies from Colorado lost no opportunity to do missionary work in favor of the free coinage of silver.

GEN. MC ALPIN, THE NEW PRESIDENT.

After the appointment of the usual committees the convention adjourned for the day in order to give the committees, especially that on resolutions, time to do their work.

Thursday's Session.

There was a lack of interest in the convention when it opened at 11 a. m. Thursday, on account of the overshadowing importance of the meeting of the committee on resolutions in session at the Hollenden Hotel. The committee on rules reported that the rules formulated by Thomas B. Reed were good enough for it.

Resolutions being next in order, Mr. Blackwell, of Massachusetts, called for an indorsement of woman suffrage, which called forth loud cries of "No! No!" He then offered another resolution arraigning the Democratic party for not taking action in regard to the Armenian atrocities. Then resolutions began to pour in like rain, as fast as the clerk could read them. They provided for sympathy with Cuba, for pensions for the workingman, for free silver, and for almost everything else which conventions discuss.

After indulging in bitter speeches for four hours in the consideration of the "address to the people," a new departure was taken by Senator Patton, of Michigan, offering the following as a substitute for the report of the sub-committee:

Whereas, Section 13 of the constitution of the Republican League of the United States says: "This league shall not in any manner endeavor to influence the action of any national, State, county or municipal convention," the delegates of the Republican League of the United States, in convention assembled, do hereby renew their allegiance to the principles of the Republican party, and pledge their best efforts for the success of the candidates of that party. Believing that this convention has no instructions from the Republicans of the United States or jurisdiction under our constitution to frame party platforms, we hereby refer all resolutions in relation to public questions to the Republican convention of 1896 with entire confidence that its action will redound to the prosperity of our people and the continued glory and advancement of the country.

Chairman Nagle of the committee on time and place reported that the members had agreed to unanimously recommend Milwaukee as the next place of meeting, the time to be fixed by the executive committee some time after that of the national convention. John T. Kelly thanked the convention for the honor and assured them the delegates would be made welcome next year.

Telegrams of regret were read from W. B. Allison, Chauncey Depew, John Grant, James S. Clarkson, H. C. Lodge, J. S. Fassett, E. O. Wolcott, T. B. Reed. A message was also read from Gov. McKinley.

McAlpin Elected President.

George E. Green, of New York, nominated Adjutant General E. A. McAlpin for the presidency. The mention of McAlpin's name was the signal for a tremendous ovation. Cheer followed cheer. The nomination was seconded by Delegate Carr of Illinois, C. L. Notch of Indiana and half a dozen others. The rules were suspended and the election made unanimous. President McAlpin at this juncture addressed the convention. The delegates were given a banquet by the local league members at night.

Sparks from the Wires.

The British ship Falls of Dee, bound to San Francisco from Newcastle-on-the-Tyne, is out 186 days, and considerable apprehension exists among local underwriters for her safety.

The Robert Wayne Dramatic Company got into trouble at Crawfordsville, Ind. Wayne threw his piano player out of the hotel window, while Ben Blanchard and Randolph Schafer fought a duel in the street with clubs. Schafer was nearly killed, but both he and Blanchard were lodged in jail.

Judge Baker of the Federal Court at Indianapolis, rendered a decision in the case of Dickson vs. the Western Union Telegraph Company, in which he knocks out that portion of the Indiana co-liability law which was so clumsily construed as to make a corporation liable even though the injured person himself was negligent.

The long-standing controversy between E. H. Fowle, of Chicago, United States court receiver of the Great Western Manufacturing Company of Duluth, and H. B. Moore, the local district court receiver, was settled by Judge Nelson of the United States court making an order ousting Mr. Fowle and declaring Mr. Moore the sole custodian.

NIAGARA FALLS EXCURSION!

Thursday, August 8, 1895.

CHAPTER XVII.

No one enjoyed the ball at Bayneham more than the stately countess, who rejoiced in seeing all those of brilliancy and note in the county assembled under her son's roof. She listened with exquisite delight to the praises the Duke of Laleham lavished upon his young hostess. As Barbara could never be mistress of that grand old castle, it was well to have some one whose beauty and grace were so universally admired.

When Lord Bayneham joined his mother, asking her to take a walk through the rooms with him, he was surprised and delighted to find that for the first time she spoke with warm affection and admiration of his wife; still more when they came to a quiet little boudoir, where Hilda had sought refuge for a few minutes' repose.

"Tired," she said, in answer to her husband's question—"just a little, Claude. I am tired with pleasure and happiness; it is all so bright and beautiful."

Lord Bayneham smiled. To Hilda's great surprise, the countess, who had never embraced her since her wedding day, went up to her, and kissed the fair face that flushed with joy as she did so.

"You have charmed me this evening, Hilda," said Lady Bayneham, kindly. "I shall begin to believe that you win all hearts."

She passed on, leaving the husband and wife together.

"Claude," said Hilda, "I am too happy. I had but one shadow of trouble—that was, I feared your mother would never love me. But she does; she will care for me almost as much as she does for Barbara Earle."

"A great deal more," replied Lord Bayneham, looking at the fair, loving face.

"Then I have nothing left to wish for," said Hilda, with a sigh of unutterable content.

"I cannot stay with you, Hilda," said the young earl. "Rest for a few minutes, then I will fetch you."

She smiled as he looked at her; and many long years passed before Claude Bayneham saw the same expression of happiness on her beautiful face.

In the far distance Hilda heard the sound of music, broken every now and then by the wailing of the wind, that bent the trees, and mourned with the cry of a lost soul round the Castle walls. She was a very fair picture, seated in the dim, mellow light of the little boudoir, the firelight gleaming in her costly jewels, and throwing a half halo round her golden head. The remembrance of Lady Bayneham's words was sweet to her. Young, beautiful, and loved, she had not one sorrow or care.

She might have laughed at the dismal wail of the winter wind. It was chanting some sorrowful dirge of grief and want, woe and death. What had such to do with the beautiful, brilliant lady, who listened, with a smile on her lips, thinking how perfectly happy she was. Then, remembering she had promised Bertie Carlyon the last dance before supper, Lady Hilda rose to return to the ball room.

"I was just coming for you," said Lord Bayneham, drawing his wife's arm in his; "Greyson has been here in search of you. He wants to speak to you; it is something about the arrangements, I suppose. I will send him to you."

Greyson was the butler, who had served Lord Bayneham's father, and was consequently looked upon as a valuable and confidential servant. He approached Lady Hilda, looking carefully around to see if anyone could hear what he had to say. His young mistress stood near a large recess; it was half divided from the ball room by a thick crimson curtain.

"My lady," he said, producing a folded paper, "I have been asked to give you this, without letting any one see or hear of it."

Lady Hilda hastily opened the note. It was almost ineligible, as though the hand that wrote it had trembled and shook.

"Lady Hilda Bayneham," it began, "the doctor tells me I am dying. I have been dying for two days past, but I cannot leave this world until I have seen you. I shall have no answers to the questions I must be asked unless I see and speak to you. It is from the threshold of eternity I summon you. Do not delay; and as you value the love and happiness around you, do not say one word of this. I am dying at the little cottage near the Firs."

"How strange!" said Lady Hilda, as she read the little note over again. "Who brought this, Greyson?"

"Old Mrs. Paine, from the Firs, my lady."

"Was any message left with it?" she inquired.

"None," replied the man, "except that she asked me to give it to you soon, and when you were quite alone."

The butler imagined, as old Mrs. Paine had done, that it was a request for alms. Every one in sorrow or want sought Lady Hilda, and no one ever sought her in vain.

As there was no more to be said, Greyson hastened to resume his duties, leaving the lady bewildered and surprised with the note in her hand.

"It must be an appeal for money," she said. "I will not be anxious over it. I wish, whoever wrote the letter, had asked plainly for what is wanted."

She tried to believe it was but a somewhat uncommon way of soliciting money. Yet they were solemn words; she heard them above the soft, sweet, dream-like music that filled the ball room—above the courtesies and homage offered to her; above the voice of flattery and love they rang out clear, cold and solemn. "From the threshold of eternity I summon you."

Bertie Carlyon wondered what spell lay on those rosy lips—they were mute and still; the bright, beautiful face had a troubled, wondering look.

"I fear you are very tired, Hilda," said Lord Bayneham to his young wife.

"I am not tired," she replied, hastily, "but I am——"

Then she stopped abruptly, remembering those other words, "As you value the love and happiness around you, do not say one word of this."

"You are what?" said Lord Bayneham, smiling, yet wondering why his wife's face flushed and the words died upon her lips.

She made some evasive reply and turned away. It would have been a great relief to have shown him the note and asked him what he thought. He would have understood it, but a strange fear and dread had seized the brilliant lady; she dared not disobey that command.

At the head of that sumptuous banquet she was obliged to talk and listen, obliged to give her whole attention to her duties. Yet there were many who thought their young hostess looked strangely tired and distraite. She was grateful when the Duke of Laleham took his departure. The other guests were not long in following his example.

"We have had a delightful night," said Barbara Earle, as the little family group assembled in the boudoir; "but even pleasure fatigues one. I propose—and you must second my resolution, aunt—that no one speaks another word. Let us retire; Hilda looks tired and worn out."

"Though it would be delightful to talk over the ball," said Bertie, "I for one obey Miss Earle; "and off he went to the smoking room.

Yet even when they were all gone, when she stood in her own room alone, Hilda still heard these mysterious words.

"Who is it," she thought, "that from the threshold of eternity would summon me?"

Almost for the first time in her life Lady Hilda Bayneham found herself unable to sleep. The golden head tossed wearily to and fro. For the first time she listened to the wailing of the wind, as to a strange wild music that told of sorrow and despair.

"I will end this suspense," she thought. "No one will be down much before twelve. I will rise at eight, and go to the Firs. If Claude discovers that I am out, he will think I am taking a morning walk."

Yet even that, the first concealment she had ever practiced in her simple, guileless life, troubled her.

It was a gray, cold morning—there was not even the glimpse of a sunbeam—when Lady Hilda dressed herself for her walk.

"You will be cold, my lady," said her maid, who wrapped a thick cloak around her.

"Yes," replied Lady Hilda; "but a long walk this morning will do me good. If Lord Bayneham asks for me, tell him I am gone out, but shall be back soon after eleven."

If Pauline thought there was anything extraordinary in her lady's proceeding, she made no comment.

The air was cold and bleak, the sky dull and leaden; there was a gray mist that hid the trees as Lady Hilda went on her way through the park. Once a new idea came to her and made her pause.

"Suppose it should be a plan to rob me?" she thought. "But robbers and thieves could fear no question that should be asked in another world?"

She reached the little cottage at last. Mrs. Paine was up, and busily engaged in preparing breakfast. She looked dazzled and confused when Lady Hilda, her face glowing with exercise, stood suddenly before her.

"You have some one here very ill," said Lady Hilda, "who wishes to see me."

The old lady made a profound reverence to the golden-haired lady.

"It will be my lodger, I suppose, my lady," she replied. "She begged me to take a note to you last evening; she is very ill—like to die, the doctor says, any minute."

Lady Hilda was relieved to find it was a woman who wished to see her.

"She lies upstairs, my lady," continued Mrs. Paine. "Shall I go up with you, my lady?"

"No," she replied. "I need not trouble you. The poor creature wants some little assistance, I have no doubt; I will go alone."

Even as Lady Hilda went up the narrow staircase she heard those solemn words: "From the threshold of eternity I summon you." The mystery was soon to be solved. She knocked gently at the door of the room, and a faint, sweet voice bade her enter.

When, in after years, did Lady Hilda forget the scene? The room was small, but clean, and even pretty. There was a little white bed with white hangings, a neat toilet table with a few ornaments. A little table stood near the bed; a small fire burned cheerily in the grate.

Lady Hilda entered the room quietly, moving gently, lest any sound should annoy the one who lay there. She went up to the bedside, and then uttered a low cry of surprise. White and worn, with a deep shade upon it, lay the same beautiful face she had seen in the summer. The woman before her was the one who had asked her so long ago for a flower at the lodge gates. The sad, large eyes seemed to burn as they looked at her; the lips trembled and quivered, but could not utter a word.

"You wished to see me," said Lady Hilda, bending over her. "I came as soon as I could. I have disturbed you. Wait a few minutes, and then you will be better able to speak to me."

The burning eyes closed as she spoke, and Lady Hilda stood silently gazing at the beautiful, sad face, wondering what was the story it told. Deep lines of sorrow were on the broad, white brow and round the lips. As she gazed upon the face it seemed in some strange way to become familiar to her, as though years ago she had seen and loved it in her dreams; then the faint, sweet voice was heard again.

"Are you Lady Hilda Bayneham?"

"Yes," she replied, "I am Lord Bayneham's wife."

"You were Lady Hutton's ward?" continued the sick woman.

"Yes," said Hilda quietly, "she was my adopted mother; I knew no other."

She stopped abruptly, for the dying lips uttered a wild cry, and the white face was turned to her with a look of deadly anguish that was almost despair.

"Hush," said Lady Hilda gently; "what is it? You will make yourself worse. What can I do for you?"

The woman held out a thin white hand and clasped the soft fingers of the young girl; she held them up to the light, looking at the costly rings that glittered there.

"Let me see your other hand," she said.

Lady Hilda gave it to her, and she glanced eagerly at it. On the third finger shone a plain gold ring. When the sick woman saw it she pressed it eagerly to her lips.

"Who gave you that ring?" she asked.

"Lady Hutton," was the reply. "She placed it on my finger on my sixteenth birthday. Why do you ask me these questions? What do you know of me?"

For all answer the sad, sweet eyes looked into her face, as though trying to read every thought of her heart.

"I could not die until I had seen you," she said. "I have hungered and thirsted for one look at your face, for one word from your lips. My heart craved for you, so that I could not die. I am breaking my oath, but it was a cruel one; besides, I must know what answer to give when I stand before the great white throne. God gave me a precious jewel, and I left it with another. He will ask what I did with it. What shall I say?"

Lady Hilda thought the poor woman was raving, and she laid her cool hand upon the hot brow. Still those sad eyes seemed to drink in every change on her face.

"When I gave my jewel away," she continued, "I swore that I would never reclaim it; but I cannot die until it is mine again. She will know, perhaps, in the other world that I have broken my oath—it must be so. Hilda, look at be. Have you no memory of me? Have you never seen me before?"

"Your face is familiar to me," replied Hilda, wondering at the strange address. "I have seen something like it in my dreams."

"Nothing more?" cried the woman, a wild sob bursting from the pale lips. "Is there no memory of the long sweet nights, when that golden head was pillowed on my breast; of the long days when I nursed you in my arms; of the hot tears I have shed over you—is there nothing that tells you of my love, my sorrow and despair? Ah, how many years is it since I clasped my little child in my arms, and took what I believed to be my last look at her! Hilda, I should rise, I should kneel there at your feet and ask you to pardon me, but I did all for the best."

Lady Hilda's face had grown very pale her lips quivered, and her eyes grew dim.

"I do not quite understand you yet," she whispered; "tell me more plainly who you are."

The white face turned to her, the lips trembled, the large sad eyes filled with tears.

"I have hungered and thirsted for you," she continued; "my heart burned within me, parched and withered for one glance at that face. Oh, darling, bend over me, lower still; look at me, pardon me. I am your unhappy mother—you are my only child."

"My mother!" said Lady Hilda, gently; "is it possible? Can it be true?"

"It is true, said the dying woman; "eighteen years ago my heart broke when I gave you, my child, my love, my comfort, to another. I could not die until I heard you call me mother once again. Oh, darling—my own, my only child—do not turn from me. Say you forgive me, then I can die in peace."

Lady Hilda bent over the drooping face, so full of wild sorrow.

"Tell me all about it," she said, gently; "I do not understand."

Then, by the gray light of the winter morning, Magdalen Hurst told her story—told of her simple beautiful girlhood spent in the bonny woods of Brynmar; of the fate that came to her there when she met handsome, reckless, unprincipled Stephen Hurst. She told the sad story of her married life, with its wretched ending, when the gay, handsome lover of her youth stood in the dock, and the fatal sentence was pronounced against him—how he wanted her to join him in that far-off land; and in order to do so she had parted with her only child.

"It was not that I did not love you, darling," pleaded the sweet, faint voice. "I died in that hour; life has only been a burden to me since. I had nothing to give you but shame, misery and reproach, the burden of a tainted name, poverty, and toil. She gave you wealth, honor and all that the world esteems. I knew you would be happy with her, for she loved you. Still, I could not face my Maker until I knew from my child's own lips that she was happy and well cared for. I am dying fast; call me mother once again."

A Victim to Etiquette.

The rigid etiquette which prevails in Korea as to ceremonious banquets is inconvenient for strangers, whose untrained appetites are scarcely up to the Korean standard. An artist, making a stay in Seoul, was bidden to a royal feast at the king's palace, to his mingled joy and despair. Ignorant of native customs, the appealed to Mr. G., the English Consul, to guide him through the ordeal. The one thing impressed upon him was this: "It is a great insult to refuse what is offered you at table, and a greater insult not to eat all that is on your plate."

We all sat down gally, and the feast began. All the products of the country seemed to have been cooked and put before me, including meats, fish, honey, sweets, vegetables and sauces, of which, mind you, we had to eat "mountains," piled on our plates. Young pigs, in the puppy state, were also there, and were much appreciated by my princely entertainers.

When I was but half-way through, however, not being provided with an ever-expanding digestive apparatus, like my friends of Cho-sen, I really felt as if I were suffocating.

I raised my head pleadingly to Mr. G., but he shook his head sternly. The servants, seeing me hesitate, plied me busily with potatoes, barley, millet and at least half a bushel of beans.

After vainly praying for courage and dexterity to slide the food under the table, I made desperate inroads upon the heaped-up vegetables. Once again I rolled my eyes in dumb entreaty toward the consul, who once again shook his head, this time with a sardonic grin which made me determine to get through the feast somehow, but in silence.

After this I was treated to lily-bulbs and radishes dipped in the vilest of sauces, besides a large portion of a puppy-pig roasted, and fruit in profusion, with foreign and native wines. At length, when I felt that with the next mouthful I should groan aloud, the end was reached. That unhappy meal began at noon, and was brought to a close at 7 p. m.!

To those who appreciate the pleasure of eating, let me recommend a royal Korean dinner. No pen can describe the agonies I endured as I was carried home in my green sedan-chair. For days I scarcely ate a mouthful, and to this day the sight of a puppy-pig is unbearable.

How Eagles Catch Sage Hens.

These hens fly with great swiftness, and in a stern chase an eagle is not in it at all with them. In order that the eagle may dine on sage hen some hard work is necessary, and the eagle has solved the problem. As a gentleman was driving along the side of a mountain he started a covey of sage hens, which flew down toward the valley. Suddenly an eagle, which had been sitting on the low ground, rose up under the birds, which flew high in the air, the eagle flopping after them. When they had risen high enough, another eagle swooped down from above. The terrified birds scattered in all directions, but the eagle singled out one, and as the eagle on the swoop goes like a shot out of a gun, he soon seized his bird, and the pair flew to a neighboring cliff to dine.

Samuel Adams was dubbed the American Cato, because of his vigor of speech in debate. He was also called the Cromwell of New England, the Father of America, the Last of the Puritans and the Man of the Revolution.

CITY OF FLORENCE.

RECENTLY DESOLATED BY AN EARTHQUAKE.

An Interesting and Artistic Italian Community of Two Hundred Thousand Souls—Its Art Galleries, Cathedrals, and the Vecchio Bridge.

A Well-Built Town.

Florence, noted for its art schools, palaces, voice culture, magnificent art galleries, and for a time the seat of kingly power in Italy, was visited by an earthquake not long since, which damaged 3,000 buildings and killed and injured many persons. As the seat of the Tuscan power for ages it has a most interesting history running back twenty centuries. It is located on a plain divided by the river Arno, and the Romans discerned in it a desirable point and established a colony there. It was a flourishing city at the time of Christ. It was burned down and rebuilt under Charlemagne. It shared the vicissitudes that marked the career of Italian cities and had its full share of reverses as well as triumphs. During the civil contests between the Guelphs and Ghibellines it suffered severely, yet it increased in power. Then the Medici struggles were fought out in her midst, much to the detriment of the Florentines. During the period of the republic Florence was in the zenith of her greatness. Her indomitable enterprise made her wares salable in every part of the world and brought riches to her lap that made her the envy of rivals. Her wool, silk and gold brocade monopolized the markets and made the makers wealthy. This stream of gold became so great that Florence was transformed into a banking center and every movement in Europe looked to her for funds. Then a decline followed the invasion of the French, and upon the seat of empire being transferred from Turin to Florence in 1865 a new impulse was given in the six years that Victor Emanuel directed Italian affairs.

CATHEDRAL AND CAMPANILE WHICH WERE SHAKEN BY THE EARTHQUAKE.

During that epoch the Tuscan metropolis was endued with the belief that it was to be the permanent capital of united Italy. The population increased 50,000, and the prospects of the kingly town were all that could be desired. But the withdrawal of the French troops from Rome was followed by its occupation by the national forces, and in 1871 the capital was changed to the city of Caesars. This was an ugly blow. The change carried with it 50,000 people, and reduced the population of Florence to 150,000. To beautify the city a magnificent stone roadway was erected to the heights of Fiesole, which, with approaches, cost some $10,000,000. Other improvements carried out swelled the total to $20,000,000. The city was threatened with bankruptcy by shearing it of imperial honors and to avert such a catastrophe the Italian Parliament assumed half of the debt created by the municipality. This implanted hope in the despairing breast of the Florentine and he again took hold to rebuild his decaying town. That his efforts have counted in the intervening twenty-four years is proven by the fact that Florence to-day has made good her loss to Rome, has 200,000 inhabitants and is one of the cleanest and best built of the old world cities.

Dwarfing everything around it rises the far-famed cathedral, immense in size, lofty in elevation and appropriately set off with a square bell tower 290 feet high which appears like a sentinel guarding the grand temple which has made Florence renowned. The church and bell tower are faced with squares of white, pink and black marble and afford a pleasing relief from the conventional church exterior and the rather somber buildings which surround it. The cathedral is 550 feet long, 340 broad, 150 feet from the eaves to the ground. The dome is the largest in the world and is 300 feet high. The interior of the cathedral is disappointing after one gazes upon its handsome and imposing proportions on the outside and is devoid of ornamentation and the adjuncts that make European churches so attractive. It was commenced in 1298 and required 138 years to build. Across from it is the Baptistry of San Giovanni, octagonal in form, which is treated in the delicate colors reflected by the church and campanile. The second church in size and importance is Santa Croce, which has eleven chapels and wherein is buried Michael Angelo. A third is that of San Lorenzo, which was consecrated by St. Ambrose in 393 and rebuilt in 1425. It contains the tombs of the Medici rulers. In 1358 a plague set in which carried off 100,000 of her people and which threatened to end forever the career of the city.

Florence plumes herself upon the extent, variety and richness of her art galleries known respectively as Pitti and Uffizi, housed in palaces from which they take their name. The former is credited with having the finest colection of pictures in the world, and after one has journeyed through its numerous passageways and attempted to do justice to the treasures which hang on the walls the contention is undisputed that the Louvre in Paris is outmatched. Connected with it by bridge is the Uffizi, a gallery only second in extent to the Pitti and which has, besides its valuable paintings, sculpture, bronzes, engravings, coins and mosaics in bewildering variety. One can spend months in feasting on these rare and beautiful works of art and then fail to exhaust the collection. The Loggia del Lanzi, near by, is an open vaulted hall filled with the classical figures of the artist's chisel which are eagerly studied by the visitor.

There are many palaces in Florence, some of the more noted being those of Vecchio, Pitti, Riccardi, and Strozzi. In the first the Italian Parliament held its sessions, while not far away Victor Emmanuel made his abode in the Pitti. The Riccardi has an extensive library, and the Strozzi is where King Joseph Napoleon held court during his sway over Italy. Perhaps there are a hundred of these once luxurious establishments in Florence, most of which are found in the most unprepossessing portions of the town. They were built as fortresses with embattled front and sides, occasionally with towers, and the material used was oblong blocks of freestone. The middle was used for a courtyard. To-day most of them are occupied by poor people who find shelter in the gloomy walls and who care nothing for the grandeur that once made them the rallying point of the nobility and the distinguished of the dead centuries.

There are six bridges spanning the Arno at Florence, the principal and oldest being that of Vecchio. It unites the town at its busiest point and has been standing for five centuries. On the sides of the roadway are jewelry shops and places where knick-knacks can be purchased. The quaint and ancient articles offered for sale as well as the historic interest attaching to the structure make it a resort for tourists. The Arno is navigable only for light craft and for weeks at a time its bed is dry. The prolonged hot weather dries it up and for miles its bottom of pebbles can be followed without discovering a trace of water.

Florence has an air of solidity that marks a northern city with all the beauty that distinguishes a southern one. Her streets are level, wide, clean and run at right angles. The business blocks are chiefly of stone and are put up to stay with the centuries. Everywhere there is a substantial air and the impress of a thriving and energetic city. More than twenty squares break the monotony of the street line and are adorned with statuary and other ornaments that please the eye and instruct the mind. The evidences of her triumphs in the past are reflected in the incomparable treasure houses of art which the centuries were taxed to supply and which have wrought incalculable good in elevating the artistic tastes of all susceptible to its refining influences.

YANKEES FULL OF CURIOSITY.

Visitors to War Ships Show the Great National Characteristic.

Whenever a ship of the United States is anchored in an American harbor, says the Washington Star, the officers are sure that they will have to serve the purpose of the curiosity seekers. "The great American public," said one of Uncle Sam's noble seamen the other day, "is fully aware that it owns its share of a battleship or gunboat, and it intends to have the worth of its money when an opportunity offers." It is claimed by the officers that they do not object to allowing persons who desire to see a man-of-war to wander over the ship and see what it is like, but they do object to the curiosity of some persons who insist on coming into the wardroom and going through their cabins and all their private effects, as if they owned those articles as well as the ship. San Diego, Cal., is said to be the place most abhorred by officers on account of curiosity seekers. One of them said that a man could not lie down in his cabin and get the sleep necessary to stand watch without being roused out with the exclamation: 'Why, here's one of 'em, and he's asleep. Come and look, girls." At other times the crowd would gather around the skylight over the wardroom and watch the officers at meals, making such comments as they chose on the appearance of the men and what they were eating, as if they had been a part of a menagerie that had just been fed. "Save us from riding at anchor at San Diego," say the officers who have been there.

NEW CANON OF WESTMINSTER.

Robert Eyton the Fortunate and Distinguished Individual.

It is officially announced, says the London Queen, that the Westminster canonry, to which Rev. Robert Eyton, rector of Holy Trinity, Chelsea, and prebendary of St. Paul's, has been appointed in succession to Archdeacon Farrar, carries with it the rectory of St. Margaret's, Westminster. Mr. Eyton graduated at Christ Church, Oxford, in 1869, and was appointed subalmoner to the Queen in 1883 and rector of Upper Chelsea in the following year. He is a popular preacher in the west end and an ardent supporter of the Christian Social Union. For some years he sat as one of the members for Chelsea on the London School Board. At the election in November last he stood as "an independent church candidate," but was defeated.

CANON EYTON.

Rubel, the French Actor.

Not a few great men have risen to eminence in spite of overwhelming physical defects; but far more rare are the cases in which ugliness has in itself proved a stepping stone to success. Rubel, the actor, who has just died in Paris, at the age of 78, owed his first start in the legitimate drama to his strikingly plain features and diminutive stature. Forty years ago he was the humblest of music hall comics at the Funambules, when Offenbach dropped in one evening, noticed his grotesque physiognomy, and offered him an engagement at the Bouffes. When "Barbe-Bleue" was produced, and a peculiarly hideous face was required for the part of the Queen's lover, Schneider cried out: "There is only one man in the world who can play it, and that is Rubel." But instead of being flattered the poor little fellow was mortified, and positively declined to be cast for the character. He migrated to other stages and worked to the last, filling only a month ago the prompter's box at the Theater de la Republique.—St. James' Gazette.

Fruit Trees by the Roadside.

The pleasure of riding or walking through country places would be greatly increased if fruit trees lined the road sides. Of course some of the fruit there grown would be taken and eaten by the passers by, but except near cities and large villages this demand would be quickly satisfied. With the roadside fruit held as common property, it would be less difficult to protect the fruit in near-by or adjoining orchards. The fruit trees would have a further advantage that they do not grow so large nor do their roots extend so far as to injure the fields beside them. We know some fine rows of large trees by road sides which effectually destroy the soil for one or two rods inside the field, and make it not worth cultivating. The elm, whose roots always run near the surface, is one of the worst trees in this respect.—Ex.

HARLEM Canal just above New York City is completed. Steamers can now pass from the Hudson river, across to the East river.

TRAMPS tried to seize a train of the Lake Erie & Western about forty miles from Indianapolis, Monday. They were driven off by the trainmen after a fight in which revolvers were used.

TAYLOR, of the defaulting state of South Dakota, is in the hands of the authorities. He has agreed to go to jail two years, providing the governor will agree to pardon him out of a part of it. He will also return $45,000 of the money he stole and his bondsmen will make up the rest, about $235,000 more. Why should a big thief be let off so easily?

There is a possibility that China will buy up or lease our silver mines or at least the most productive ones. She has agreed to pay Japan a war indemnity of 200 millions of taels in silver. The tael is a coin of the value of a Mexican dollar and is worth about 53 cents. It will be seen that it will take several ship loads to pay this bill. China will first see if she can borrow this silver of American silver owners and if she cannot, will then try to get control of the mines.

If the voters of this great country could use as much time and energy and brains in a business pursuit of any sort as they are putting into the question as to whether gold is the best money we could have or whether silver is the best, they could produce enough value to pay off the national debt in about two years. It is astonishing how an intelligent people can get so deeply interested in so small a question. We met a well-to-do man the other day, who insisted on stopping—keeping both from work—and talking this money question in a way that showed he was in dead earnest and not the least inclined to concede that anyone with different views was right. We tried in vain to assure him that the time so spent was largely a waste. That the question had but little in it and that even if it should prove to be a vital matter, it could not be settled by us two, neither of whom would ever be lawmakers. And furthermore, tried to make it plain that no extreme views would ever be enacted into laws. The political outlook is such, that anyone can see there can be no success in the future for either extreme of silver or of gold. We shall always have money of gold, of silver and of paper, and no amount of tearing our hair will change these facts. They grow out of the needs of a great people, occupying a great country. This generation is as capable of taking care of itself as was the last one. The next generation will be as capable of taking care of itself as is the present one. Let us possess our souls in peace, for whether we have gold money, or silver, or paper, it will, under careful provisions be good money be sound money, be "redemption money" and all we will need to fret about is how to get hold of what we need of either kind.

Columbia City Post:—If things keep a moving, Grover Cleveland will leave the white house in 1897 with a full treasury and a prosperous country behind him just as he did in 1889. Let us keep a stiff upper lip and stand up for common sense and reason.

The National meeting of the Republican clubs at Cleveland this week straddled the silver question. This is the course usually taken in great national meetings. They try to keep solid with both sides. There was a large attendance from all over the Union and considerable jangling The only man who will remember any decisive action taken at the convention will be the newly chosen president, Gen McAlpin who had his pocket picked losing a fine gold watch and $1000 cash One remarkable speech was that by Hon. Warren Miller of New York, claimed by many to be a free silver man. This he denied, but he too, straddled the question All important questions were left over to be settled by the national convention of next year.

SILVER.

Silver bullion is now quoted at $.67¼ an ounce, which is four cents higher than it was one year ago, and Treasury officials believe that it will go higher, on account of the Chinese demand for silver to pay Japan the war indemnity, which at the present price of silver will require in the neighborhood of $148,000,000 of bullion, The demand for silver to meet the general expenses of China and Japan in the later war is estimated to have already reduced the available stock of private silver bullion in the United States to considerably less than 1,000,000 ounces. The Government has, of course, a much greater amount than that, but the bullion owned by the government isn't in the market and is not likely to be, certainly not for some time to come, as Congressional legislation would have to be secured to sell it, if such was the desire of the government.

A SOLEMN AND IMPRESSIVE CEREMONY UNITES LOVING HANDS AND HEARTS.

In the presence of a vast audience of the friends and neighbors, John Pepple and Jennie Stutz were united an marriage last evening, at the Presbyterian church. A public ceremony, not being common in Auburn, together with the popularity of the young couple, called out a brilliant and intensely interested assemblage, that filled the church, and overflowed on the grass plat and walks outside. At the hour appointed, the carriages containing the bridal party reached the church. As they entered the building, Mrs. Sadie Yesbera arose, and while they came down the aisle, sang the sweet marriage hymn "O, Promise Me," accompanied on the Mandolin and Zither by Waltemath Brothers, of Fort Wayne, closing soon after the parties reached the altar. They were led by Rev. F. C. Colvin of the Presbyterian church, coming up the south aisle and followed by Milo Husselman and Laura Ober, while following these came the bride, leaning on Miss Maggie Snyder, of New Era. At the same up time the north aisle came the groom supported by Frank Eckhart. After they were ranged in front of the altar, the first part of the ceremony was said, and then, to the strains of sweet music they took their places at the north end of the platform under a lovely arch of jasmine, roses and ferns. At the back were similar floral decorations At the north and the south stood a large palm, brought from Alabama, to which were added other similar plants, making an admirable effect. The ceremony, was an abridged form of the Episcopal service, including the ring presentation. At the arch, the group made a lovely picture, and the minister, perfectly at ease, as were all the rest, spoke in a graceful and impressive manner, the solemn words that made them man and wife. A brief and feeling prayer followed, and then an eloquent address to the young couple, and the ceremony was closed. The bride and groom then took their places in front of the altar and received the congratulations of the hundreds of friends, who filed in a long procession before them, As each came past them, two beautiful little girls, attired in white, Nellie Ober and Ruth Baker, under the direction of Miss Lila Baker, handed each person a bouquet of Texas jamine tied by a ribbon on which were printed the words, "Auburn, June 25, 1895."

MRS JOHN PEPPLE.

The bride was attired in a beautiful white corded silk with a long tulle veil which extended the entire length of the dress, and both were gifts from friends and were sent from Hamburg, Germany. The entire effect was elegant in its simplicity. The bride is one of the many lovely girls of Auburn and on this supreme occasion looked more charming even than usual. She carried a bouquet composed entirely of white roses.

Miss Maggie Snyder, first brides maid was attired in pink silk trimmed with ruffion and pearl passamenterie and carried a bouquet of roses and jasmine buds. Miss Laura Ober, second brides maid wore cream silk, trimmed with lace and satin ribbon and her bouquet was composed of pink rose buds. The groom and grooms men as well as the minister wore full evening dress.

After the ceremony there was a reception in the parlors of the Swineford House, and at 11:30 a party of twenty, including the bridal party and a few intimate friends sat down to an elegant luncheon. Then followed the goods bys and good wishes, when the bridal party took carriages for the Junction, to meet the 2 a. m. train on the B. & O. on which the newly wedded pair started on their bridal tour. They stay a few days in Chicago, then go to Manitou Springs, Colo, and, to other points of interest in the great west. On returning to Auburn, they will visit relatives in Ohio, and later, start for their future home at Smithville, Texas.

In the ceremony and decorations the southern tastes and styles prevailed as a residence of fourteen years in the south had won his admiration for so much of their ways. The bride is an orphan and has made her home with her uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs Gus Stutz. She has, by her lady-like qualities made herself friends among all classes. The groom is a son of John Pepple, north of town and was reared in this county. It was noticeable among the guests invited to the wedding were those who had been his immediate neighbors and schoolmates. About 1880 he went to Hannibal, Mo., and became a fireman on the Hannibal & St. Joe railroad, but about two years later he went to Kansas, and then to Texas, and soon became an engineer on the M. K. & T. railroad in whose employ he still is, one of their most trusted engineers. An aunt from Texas came home with him and was present last evening. A number of elegant and valuable gifts were received by Mr. and Mrs. Pepple, from their many friends and testified to the high appreciation in which they were held. If good wishes count, they will have a happy future. We should not forget the fine singing of Mrs. Yesbera, or the music of the gentlemen from Fort Wayne. Too much praise cannot be given to Mr. Aber to whose good taste and skill were due the lovely floral decorations.

COURT.

Mrs Saxby McIntosh has secured her divorce. She keeps the child and is allowed $200 alimony, costs to be paid by defendant. Judge Adair came over on Monday to work the cases in which Judge Penfield cannot act. Mrs. R D. Teff has received her divorce and is to have $500 alimony and he is to pay all costs.

During the last few days, work was done on cases, as follows:

State vs Fred Moses, Henry Froelick, Fred Zevisbricker, Guy Cannon, and Wm. Pretoskie, on charge of petit larceny the boys plead guilty and got a nominal sentence, which the judge suspended during good behavior. It was the first offense of lads under 12. Moses and Cannon did not appear.

Mary C. Moody vs Nelson Swander & B. & O. road, a garnishee case. The B. & O. owed Swander $18.40 and is ordered to pay it to the clerk for Mary C Moody.

Thomas Wark, administrator of Isaac Grate vs George Grate, replevin. Tried before Judge Adair and a jury. Plaintiff got judgment $571.35. Appealed to appellate court and bond of $1000 required.

Nathan W. Dyer vs R M. Lockhart, and others, mortgage, dismissed, each party paying his own costs.

Jane Kunderd vs Henry Kunderd for divorce dismissed by consent of both parties.

The case of Wheeler vs Orndorff, note, is arranged to be tried by Judge Adair at his convenience, as soon as he can in term of court that begins Oct. 7.

Franklin Zerwis vs Beach & Crane, on contract, after being up several times, was dismissed on payment of costs so far made.

Randall vs Pape, $833.30 against Pape. Appealed to appellate court.

Sarah Weygand vs George, ordered off docket.

S Norris, damages vs B. & O. road, goes to next term.

Auburn F. & M. Works vs Jonas Aldrich, account, dismissed at cost of defendent.

The case between Mrs. Emily Dills and A. J. and G C. Ralston, came up and she asks to have a change of venue. So it goes to Allen county. It was to be tried before Judge Adair here, and we suppose he will continue in charge in Allen county.

The gravel road case from St. Joe is an important one, involving the interests of about 300 taxpayers, besides the general interest attached to a case of that sort. It came up originally before the county commissioners, who after appointing viewers and considering some of the questions decided they had no jurisdiction over the case and it was taken into the circuit court. Judge Penfield could not try it, as he had been attorney in the case, and so Frank Powers of Angola was chosen. When the case came up, the questions that had arisen in the commissioners' court were reviewed and Mr. Powers, decided that it could and should have been tried before that board. But after he had so passed on the questions, a change of venue from the judge was taken, and it was given over to Judge Adair. So it all had to be fought over again. Judge McClellan was for the petitioners and Roby & Emanuel for the remonstrants. Adair sustained Powers on the points raised deciding that the commissioners did have jurisdiction over the matter. So, the only question now to be settled is as to the public utility of the gravel road, a point the commissioners had not reached. The fact that viewers make a favorable report, may be taken as prima facie evidence of the utility of a thing. The question may come up in court, whether remonstrance may yet be filed, In case a remonstrance is filed, and afterwards, the signers may have to pay costs which in this case are large. So, the case is in much doubt. It comes up in October.

The Knight ditch case involves the interests of about 500 people, and is another big case.

The case of Lindsey vs the Home Insurance Co, of New York, was a hard fought case, McClellan for the plaintiff and Hartman for defense. The point raised was as to the correctness of the answers made by Lindsey to insurance agent who took the risk. In taking the application for the insurance, the company claimed that Lindsey falsely stated that he held the land in fee simple. The building burned, and the company refused to pay any greater sum than the costs of a suit would amount to. The facts came out that Lindsey had answered truthfully as to his title. The agent, it appears, had, of his own motion, written the company that Lindsey had no fee simple title to the property, but the jury decided Lindsey had the title in fee simple, and so brought in the verdict for the full amount of the loss.

The Baltz matter came up again and Baltz obtained possession of the land in dispute between him and Martin, yesterday.

Mary E. Crane was divorced from Wm. Crane, taking her maiden name of Jacobs.

Ida McFarren was divorced, from C. F. he received custody of their child.

Mabel Green for divorce from Joseph Green, goes to next term.

BUTLER.

Base ball has overtaken our town. Several spirited contests have taken place in the past ten days.

Jay Oberlin had a head end collision with Clyde Pattee's horse and buggy a few nights ago. The result was a narrow escape with his life, a black eye, several severe contrisions, a mashed wheel and a slightly damaged buggy. He was scorching a 2:20 pace under the electric lights and did not see the horse and buggy.

Abe Richard, a well known and rather an odd dispositioned man about town, was buried last week.

The Basket Factory has put in two new forms and is turning out more goods than ever.

Wheels are all the rage, each week sees some new devotee trying his or her flying machine on our smooth, clean streets. Ladies nearly equaling the men in number.

Mrs. J. A. Campbell spent last week with her sister and brothers near Angola.

Peter Smith, an old and highly respected citizen of Troy township was buried about ten days ago. He had passed his 75th year.

Our churches united and had a single union service last Sabbath evening at the U. B. church, Rev. Dustman of the Lutheran church filling the pulpit.

The Gesinger Saw Mill that burned a few days ago, entailed a quite a loss on his son, and Mr. Bubb, They are plucky enough to attempt to immediately rebuild.

Emlin V. Campbell is home for vacation from Ann Arbor University.

Professor Coe continues to ride his wheel, though he has had several rough tumbles. His Normal is in full blast and is well attended.

Our Band boys continue to give us musical treats of no mean order several times a week. Their portable stand drawn to different parts of town is a very convenient and attractive feature.

Hamilton Lake is drawing a large number of the people of our town to that place, these warm dry summer days.

John Lowe, of Franklin is off for a vacation down the lakes, and into the Dominion of Canada.

J. A. Campbell and C. A. Newman made a little trip over to Ashley and Hudson on wheels last Tuesday.

Concord Cor. St. Joe. News:—Master Harry the adopted son of Mr. and Mrs. Stutz of Auburn, is the guest of his brother Willie Keeler this week.

The funeral of the late A. J. Carmer took place to-day. It was the largest procession we have seen for some time. About 45 carriages were in line and the solemn procession moved slowly by the public square on their way to the cemetery, thus passing by the old settlers meeting in progress there at the time, It was a sad reminder to the pioneers who had known him so long.

Dr. and Mrs. Matheny started for the west and northwest Wednesday morning over the B. & O. They will spend some time visiting relatives at different points in Dakota and adjacent states.

I Gunsenhouser, one of the old settlers of Butler come over this morning to attend the meeting to-day.

"I never use window screens," said a wise housekeeper the other day, "because I have a fancy that they shut out the air in hot weather; and, besides, they serve to keep the flies in the house equally as well as out." "But I never see a fly in your house," said her friend, "How do manage it? For my part, without screens summer means to me one long battle with the little pests." "My remedy is a simple one," said the good housekeeper, "and I learned it years ago from my grandmother, when I used to sit and watch her putting bunches of lavender flowers around to keep the flies away. My method is simple. I buy five cents worth of oil of lavender at the drug store and mix it with the same quantity of water. Then I put it in a common glass atomizer and spray it around the rooms wherever flies are apt to congregate, especially in the dining room, where I sprinkle it plentifully over the table linen. The odor is especially disagreeable to flies, and they will never venture in its neighborhood, though to most people it has a peculiarly fresh and grateful smell."

DeKalb county seems to be favored as to rain, and especially the vicinity of Auburn. Mr. Spitler reports that the people over in Allen county have missed several of the rains we had here. D. D. Metcalf says that near where he lives, east of town a few miles, they have not had as much rain as in Auburn and near here.

While driving over the G. R. & I road at the bridge north of Lagrange Tuesday Mrs. W. A. Hoagland and mother, Mrs. Margaret Rockwell, met with a distressing and a fatal accident. An engine passing under them frightened their horse, which ran away, overturned the buggy, and threw the ladies down an embankment. They were found under the buggy unconscious and severely injured. Mrs. Hoagland with three ribs fractured and a lung penetrated with one of them, only lived two hours. Mrs. Rockwell is seventy-six years old, and while not so badly hurt is not likely to withstand the shock. The bridge has been the scene of several similar and fatal accidents.—Journal

Friday's Daily:

J. J. W. Billingsly, editor of the Drainage Journal, of Indianapolis has been the guest since Tuesday of Cal Husselman. The two gentlemen traveled together attending institutes and are both deeply interested in drainage. Mr. Billingsly took a diagram of Mr. Husselman's farm and will have a cut made and run it in the Drainage Journal. They drove through Steuben county and paid particular attention to drainage of farms and condition of crops in general. They report crops in DeKalb county as being much better than in any adjoining counties.

H. E. Richey's horse ran away this morning. It was at the Body Factory when it got frightened and ran starting off toward home. It ran east clear across the town and to Cedar street where it stopped and was going to the barn, but finally decided to put up at Billy Little's feed barn and there they caught it. The horse had run furiously all the way, yet not a thing was hurt.

The state encampment will be held at Fairview Park Indianapolis, commence July 22 and continuing to the 28th. The Rifles will probably leave Auburn four weeks from to morrow. A new campaign hat for the use of the guard while in active service has been adopted and approved by the Governor. It is a soft felt hat of the sombrero style, drab in color and very light. Oliver Rosenberg of Corunna, on Saturday filed a complaint of "provoked" against Wm. Lewis. It came before 'Squire Walborn, and Mr. Lewis plead guilty. Then Lewis entered complaint against Mrs. Rosenberg for the same offense. This latter case came up today, but was continued over till July 5.

Wm. Bishop near Moorsville who has so long suffered from a stroke of paralysis is reported as being very low, with little hopes of recovery. His daughter, Mrs. John Baird of this place, goes today to his home.

A drunken and very obscene tramp was on the streets a while this afternoon and refusing to stop his filthy and impudent talk. Marshal West asked him to "come along" which he did as gracefully as a man with but one foot could. There was a woman tramp here in the forenoon, a regular tramp who got a good deal of good at different places. Another crippled man was begging on the streets in the forenoon. The marshal will send the one he took in, out of town.

A couple of young fellows struck town the night of the show and passed considerable counterfeit money. The same gang was in Garrett during the day and the marshal sent word over here to watch out for them. Marshal West went around and notified all of our business men but still some were caught. John Weaver was given a counterfeit dollar for ice cream on the court house lawn but was not discovered until a few minutes later when of course the men were gone. Another dollar was also passed at Henry West's saloon and this morning Cory Shugars found a dime that some one had passed at his place last evening.

As noted yesterday the marriage of Henry Dills and Minnie Gordon occurred at the brides home at 4 o'clock. The ceremony was performed by Rev. J. K. Waltz of the M. E. church in the presence of a number of invited friends.

Mr. Dills is an employe of the B. & O. at Garrett and is a worthy young man, Miss Gordon is the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. W. Gordon and is a highly respected young lady. She is a member of the M. E. church. The young couple were the receiptants of a number of valuable presents. The COURIER wishes them success. They left on the evening train for New York and other eastern cities.

Charles Falka and Ona Metcalf were quietely married at their own home in Gas addition last evening, Rev. J. D. Brosy officiating. Mr. Falka had his home nicely furnished and as above noted the wedding took place there. They are both respected and energetic young people. The COURIER joins in congratulations.

A queer case of loss has happened to Mrs. McCrory, who lives in the west side of town. She has been in the habit of keeping what little ready cash she had on hand in the organ, where one would think it would be safe. A few days ago her daughter, Viola, who is a seamstress, went up to Montpelier to work for Mr. Yesbera, and the mother went to the organ to get some money which the daughter might need in a strange place. The daughter went away, and later on the mother went to get some money to use, and none could be found. Nor has it been found yet. It is a strange case. If the house has been entered by burglars, the question is, how did they think to look into the organ? The sum missing is supposed to be about $135.

Carle Brown and his bride, the daughter of Coxey, start this morning from Canton, Ohio to march to Washington. They expect to have a "public" marriage on the steps of the capitol building in hepresence of a lot of the commonwealers who have lived there on charity since a year ago. The police should serve Carle Brown and his foolish wife as they served the foolish Coxey and Carle Brown last year. Such people need a guardian.

The Idea still wins.

L. J. Miller, the veteran grain buyer made a business trip up to Angola today.

Dr. Phillips goes today to Corunna to practice of medicine. He has bought out the business of Dr. O. F. Rudolph who has a well established practice but who goes to California for the benefit of Mrs. Rudolph's health. Dr. Phillips has made many friends while here and impressed those who have employed him in sickness, with the belief that he is a thorough and well trained physician. He is also a man of excellent morals, a church member and worthy man. We can commend him to the good people of Richland, and Fairfield.

Geo. Henderson started on his trip to the east today noon. He goes direct to Boston and Cambridge near by. He will spend the summer at the famous Harvard Law School at Harvard University, Cambridge. It is the summer course. It will be a valuable school for him, whether he becomes an attorney or not. His extensive practice in reporting the more important cases in court, would make a knowledge of the law itself a very convenient thing to have. We wish him a pleasant summer. The DAILY COURIER goes with him of course.

A Soldier's Answer.

From Harper's Round Table.

Emperor Napoleon, after one of his great battles, gathered the remnant of his forces around him, and proceeded to compliment them in his characteristic manner so endearing to the hearts of his soldiers. Finally Company D, of the Guards, who had been in the thick of the fight, were ordered to present themselves, and to the astonishment of the Emperor a single soldier appeared. He was bound up in bandages, and could barely walk.

"Where is the rest of your company?" Asked the Emperor.

A tear welled in the old soldier's eye as he answered, "Your Majesty, they lie on the field dead," and then sorrowfully added, "they fought better than I."

Good For a Cough.

While at Peekskill, N. Y., Mr. J. A. Scriven, a prominent manufacturer of New York City, purchased a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. Such good results were obtained from its use that he sent back to the druggist from whom he had obtained it for two more bottles of the same remedy. When you have a cough or cold give this preparation a trial and like Mr. Scriven you will want it when again in need of such a medicine. It is a remedy of great worth and merit. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord. 23-6

Costs But a Trifle.

While in Topeka last March, E. T. Barber, a prominent newspaper man of La Cygne, Kan., was taken with cholera morbus very severely. The night clerk at the hotel where he was stopping happened to have a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy and gave him three doses which relieved him and he thinks saved his life. Every family should keep this remedy in their home at all times. No one can tell how soon it may be needed. It costs but a trifle and may be the means of saving much suffering and perhaps the life of some member of the family. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord. 23 6

Sometime ago I was troubled with an attack of rheumatism. I used Chamberlain's Pain Balm and was completely cured. I have since advised many of my friends and customers to try the remedy and all speak highly of it. Simon Goldbaum, Sant Louis Rey, Cal. For sale by Robbins & McCord. 23-26

This will be of service o patrons of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern railroad in their trip to that city on the low rate excursions via this railroad in July. 25-25

Mrs. Elizabeth Ober mother-in-law of Levi Treesh died at her home in Richland township Friday morning. She has been a sufferer for some time caused by paralysis, being almost helpless. The funeral will be held Sunday at Union church at 10 a. m. and the interment will be at the cemetery at the church.

L Spitler and family went this afternoon to Cedarville to visit Mrs. Clara Shoaff, a cousin of Mrs. Spitler.

ENUMERATION.

Trustee Reed is now taking the enumeration of voters as required by law. They are taken so the number can be used as basis for apportioning the state into districts for members of both houses of the state legislature, as well as for congressmen. When this is completed the next legislature after that can apportion the state or divide it into districts. This census of voters is taken every six years, so that it will be seen that the legislature can only change the districts once in six years. The legislature last winter changed the districts, but it was plainly illegal to do so. It will be the duty of the next legislature, the one that meets in January 1897, to make this apportionment, and they will have as a guide, the number of voters now being counted. The legislature of last winter had to use the enumeration taken six years ago, in 1889. They were in too big a hurry for political advantage.

William Bitner.

Will Bitner is dead. He died at the National Printers' Home at Colorado Springs Colorado, yesterday, we suppose. Last evening, Charlie Hoff, his brother-in-law, received a dispacth from Jerry Bitner, in Chicago, saying "Will is dead." It was dated at 5-10, and we suppose that Jerry had recieved a dispatch from Colorado Springs. It will be remembered that Will, was home here, this spring having been forced to quit work, by ill health. It was evidently consumption. Finding no permanent relief here, he went to Colorado Springs, hoping for a change. Those who remember the active, strong young man of a few years ago, can hardly realize that he is dead of consumption.

Hunting a soft snap is the surest way to find a tough time.

England is already moving to skim the milk of Oriental trade.

Those who do not work for good government do not deserve it.

To many Americans home is only an eating house and a sleeping place.

In the development of any community one leader is worth a dozen critics.

The foolish man thinks he cannot spend a holiday without spending money.

Progress has taken to the road to such an extent that every county demands a railway and every city a boulevard.

Henry Watterson says that for thirty years he has been holding "forlorn hopes and filling impossible breaches." Henry seems to regard himself as a sort of political new woman.

It must astonish European statesmen to learn that the Secretary of State of the United States must be a lawyer. Can any great secretary of state of any other modern country be named who was bred to the law?

Women have during the last three months been employed as letter carriers in Hungary, and the system has succeded so well that it will be extended to all Hungarian towns. What vocation will not women fill successfully in the near futre?

A New York court had a case brought to it which easily appealed to its sympathies. It was that of William Franz August Humor Proschewitzky, praying that he might have permission to change it, as, besides being otherwise troublesome, it was too suggestive of Scotch whisky.

The man who filed a copy of the Bible in a telegraph office in order to hold the wire for his dispatch to the New York Tribune has just died in New York. But he has a far stronger hold on lasting fame. He was Horace Greeley's proofreader for several years and yet lived to be over 70.

For shooting his wife so that amputation of the leg was necessary, Samuel Phipps will spend three whole months in jail at San Francisco. The case is cited as showing that justice occasionally snatches the bandage from her bulging brow and gets in a swipe of a particularly ferocious character.

The precautions that are now taken against infectious diseases have already saved many thousands of lives. According to Dr. Cornet, of Berlin, in the years 1883 to 1893 there were 70,000 fewer deaths from consumption in Prussia than the average of previous years would have led him to expect.

The curious fact is recalled that just twenty years after President Grant signed the patent of the pueblo lands of San Diego confirming 47,000 acres of land to the city, his widow and two sons bought building sites out of the then waste, paying in the neighborhood of $200 a front foot for them. A more remarkable change can hardly be found even in this land of changes.

A habit of scolding indicates a want of self-discipline. The machinery was got from under our hands, and has fallen to grating and destroying itself under the friction and perplexities of life. "Possess thyself" is a more important rule than "Know thyself." Without this primary virtue, we are not in a conditon to receive much good ourselves or to afford aid to others.

The senior class book of Yale affords the information that one-fifth of the young men who will graduate this month have worked their way through college, in whole or in part. There are youngsters in the class who have spent $5,000 a year, but there are others who have pulled through on $100. The young men of the larger colleges are, after all, of the same stuff as their forbears. While there is plenty of folly and frolic still (as there always was) the element of heroism is by no means absent.

The sudden spasm of cleanliness which struck Chicago a few weeks ago, and the visible and outward signs of which are various blue barrels and red boxes on the corners which are supposed to hold ancient newspapers, old shoes and orange peels, has caused some woe to the hustling gray-coated gentlemen who collect mail in the down-town district. Absent-minded folks who were wont to drop old papers, empty bags and apple cores on the pavement have been brought to such a sudden realization of their duty as citizens toward the refuse boxes that many of them insist on putting banana peelings and cast-off hats into the big mail boxes intended for packages. When the collector puts in his hand nowadays he is likely to draw out an utterly depressed collar or a few peanut shells as a mail package, and there is a movement on foot to station a small boy at each mail box that the thrifty citizen may be flagged in his mad attempt to mail an overripe orange.

The apparent rise in the price of kisses in the San Francisco market is not, on investigation, so alarming as it appeared at first glance. When an Oakland lady sued an Oakland gentleman for $5,000 as the value of two kisses alleged to have been stolen there was trepidation among the members of the sex that was already demoralized by the stalwart blows of the Woman's Congress. Two thousand five hundred dollars a kiss is pretty high even for the best quality, and it looked as though a hard season was ahead. The highest price known in California for kisses was $1,200 apiece, paid by an amorous San Diego gentleman under direction of the court. In the famous "Baby Bunting" case in New York the aged coffee manufacturer was charged only $25,000 for a gross of kisses that was estimated to have run up into the millions, with hugs thrown in. Five thousand dollars for two was therefore to be regarded as a big jump. The lady has explained, however, that the actual number delivered was "probably a thousand," which would reduce the price to a paltry $5 apiece. The flurry in the market may thus be considered over.

The Columbian half dollars were a disappointment in a financial way. Five million of them were turned out at the Philadelphia mint, and it was confidently expected that they would be readily taken—even eagerly snapped up—by the public at a dollar each. Had that expectation been realized the Columbian exposition corporation would have made a handsome thing out of it, even after paying liberal commissions for making sales. It seemed as though one out of thirteen of the American people would be willing to pay a dollar for such a souvenir of the great fair, but it did not prove to be so. Only about 1,400,000 of the coins were disposed of during the fair, and about 3,600,000 were turned over to the government after the exposition closed. For these there did not seem to be any great demand even at par for some time. Since the Secretary of the Treasury offered them in exchange for gold coins about 1,570,000 of them have been disposed of. The demand is said to be increasing, and the probability is that all yet remaining in the possession of the government will be taken at no distant day. Popular appreciation of this handsome souvenir does not come soon enough to do the exposition company much good. Even now it is not so keen as the appreciation of dollar gold pieces, which have gone to a premium of 50 cents each since their coinage ceased, and are firmly held even at that figure, though more than 20,000,000 of them have been coined since they were authorized in 1849.

Afteh many months, the vast mass of "syndicate wheat" said to belong to the estate of James G. Fair has been sold. The amount was about 180,000 tons, and the purchasers were George W. McNear, Balfour, Guthrie & Co., Eppinger & Co., and Girvin, Baldwin & Eyre. These merchants sent twenty-six ships to San Francisco to transport a portion of this wheat, and had also under charter nearly all the grain-ships due to arrive there for sixty days. They are said to have paid from 80 to 82½ cents per cental, while Fair paid for the wheat all the way from $1 to $1.25 cents. It is extraordinary that a man of Fair's shrewdness should have thus burned his fingers in wheat after he had seen how nearly it had dragged to ruin his former partners, Flood and Mackay. But there seems to be a fascination about attempting to "corner" wheat. One of the Rothschilds tried it once, but unsuspected streams of wheat trickled in upon him from every quarter of the globe. At last his fortune was swallowed up, and still his maturing obligations were not met. The magnates of the family assembled from various parts of Europe, and held a conference. It is the custom of the Rothschilds to stand by each other, and to keep the family's financial honor untarnished. But it was unanimously decided that the wheat pit into which their relative was throwing his money was a bottomless pit, and that there was no use in throwing more good money after bad. So they let the wheat plunger fail, and after he had secured a clean bill of health from the courts, they made up a purse for him to pay for his board and clothes—a trifle of ten million francs. This is more than Fair's losses, for men on 'Change estimate that the total loss to the estate is about $1,500,000. But that is a very tidy sum, and the Fair estate, unlike the Rothschild plunger, has no rich uncles.

In the Worship of Buddha.

Suddenly all face round to the doorway, their backs to the altar. The fat old abbut kneels and prostrates himself thrice, striking his head on the stone floor. Then they form in procession and march round the shrine, chanting the keynote of their religion as it has reached them from the mouths of the Indian missionaries to China more than 2,000 years ago: "Nan-Vu O-Ni-To Fut!" Holy Buddha Infinite!

More prayers, more kowtows; and so the day's work ends, except there are two, for whom it is a duty (whether of fatigue or supererogation I know not), to beat the big drum for some hours and to strike the carved bell with a suspended battering-ram six times eighteen times. Then all is over for the night until, an hour before daylight, you wake to hear the new day ushered in by renewed throb and clang of drum and bell.—Blackwood's Magazine.

The Scholars of France.

From a Paris letter: As a sample of the payment of distinguished scholars in this country it may be mentioned that M. Gaston Boissier, who was lately elected life Secretary of the academy, only received $600 annually as rector of the College de France. In his new position he is entitled to $1,200, or double the sum paid him as head of the great educational establishment over which Ernest Renan ruled. The Immortals, according to the foundation rules, are supposed to be paid $300 yearly, in addition to their fees for attending meetings. As a matter of fact, however, they only receive $200 annually. The remainder of the sum forms a sinking fund, out of which eight aged academicians get allowances, if their private annual income falls short of $1,200.

The Jury Too Previous.

A coroner's jury was summoned in Connellsville, Pa., to investigate the circumstances attending the death of Mrs. Josephine Halliday. While the coroner was swearing in the jurors up rose the supposed corpse and ordered them all out of the house.

WELCOME TO WOMEN.

LADY HENRY SOMERSET OPENS W. C. T. U. CONVENTION.

Hundreds of Visitors from America in Attendance and Their Presence Used to Illustrate the Remarkable Advance of Woman.

World's Temperance Congress.

A world's council of women! A convention whose delegates came from every English-speaking community upon the face of the globe and from every land where civilization and Christianity have raised the people from the low levels of savagery. A congress of women who have attained distinction as orators, authors, journalists, church workers, missionaries, temperance advocates, suffrage leaders, moralists, reformers and philanthropists. This is what has just been held in the modern Babylon, the capital of the great British Empire. It is an event which marks an epoch in the history of humanity; an event which shows that human society is beginning to flow in new and nobler channels.

It was in 1873 that a number of farmers' wives rose up in revolt in Ohio against the village saloon system. Times were hard, crops were poor, and the few dollars which the husband spent across the bar represented a pair of shoes for the wife and a new dress for the ragged daughter. It was no mere moral spasm; it was no sudden burst of prohibition principles; it was the dire necessity of daily bread. The women took counsel together, and then acted. Their action within ninety-six hours developed into and became known all over the United States as "The Crusaders." There was no unanimity at first in either plan or performance. In some communities they merely prayed and sang; in others they resorted to moral suasion; in some they held indignation meetings, and in others fell back on brute force. As the war progressed it was soon noticed that prayer and praise, persuasion and politeness, kindness and gentleness had gathered a rich harvest, where the ax and the club, the mob and the petard, the missile and the dynamite cartridge of speech had resulted in naught but harm. It was a victory for Christianity and true temperance. And the victors organized upon this basis, Christianity and temperance, and thus took their name. This is how the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the now famous W. C. T. U., came into being.

The order spread more rapidly in the East at first than in the West. Headquarters were established in New York and a giant machinery was gradually created and set in operation. The work prospered and grew from day to day. The national campaign was instituted, in which Miss Willard and her lieutenants visited every State and territory. At the national convention in Detroit in October, 1883, the members had a hearty celebration over the report that the W. C. T. U. was thoroughly organized in every State and territory of the Union. In the meantime the work has gone bravely on. The British Woman's Temperance Association was formed in 1876. The many temperance societies of Great Britain, and there is quite a host of them in that land, were organized and conducted upon old-fashioned methods.

The recent session of the World's Temperance Union marks the culmination of the greatest demonstration of teetotalers that has ever taken place. The two hundred temperance mass meetings which were addressed by the members of the woman's temperance associations of the United States, England and other countries were even more of a success than had been anticipated, and it is probable that the demonstration will have no little influence in the political world. The session of the British association was presided over by Lady Henry Somerset, who in an address extolled the work for the cause of morality in the large cities of the United States. Hundreds of visitors from America were present.

Bishop Spaulding of Peoria delivered the commencement address. At least 3,000 visitors were present. Gov. Claude Matthews and staff were given a grand reception. Salutes were fired by the military and the bands and military companies escorted them to the university main building, where they were welcomed by President Morrissey.

After eulogizing the work and progress of the university and referring to the labors, of Father Sorin, the founder, the archbishop spoke at considerable length on Christian education, of what it consisted, the need of it and the means best calculated to obtain it. Referring to the question of education and religion, he said that education should be made up of both secular and religious knowledge, which should be inseparably connected. After pointing out the means best calculated to

SWEPT BY CYCLONES.

Three Distinct Storms Do Much Damage in the West.

Monday evening a cyclone struck Hartford, Kan., coming from the southwest, and sweeping everything from its path, which was clean cut and about 100 feet in width. Several persons were injured so badly that they are not expected to live. No one, as far as known, was killed outright. The storm after passing through the town to the east seemed to jump the Neosho river and then rise and disappear in the air.

A very heavy rainstorm prevailed throughout Nebraska the same day. In the southern portion it was accompanied by high winds, and in Richardson County a cyclone did great damage to property and crops. No loss of life has been reported yet. There were miraculous escapes and considerable loss of live stock. The storm was first seen when three funnel shaped clouds came together and merged into one.

Monday morning a heavy windstorm passed over Crawford County, Ia., and at places assumed the proportions of a cyclone. The storm was worse in Paradise township, near Kenwood. The house of John Rose was demolished and Mrs. Rose died from injuries received. Mr. Rose had his shoulder dislocated. Their baby was carried some distance from the house, but was found wrapped in a quilt unharmed. The large barn of Joseph Duncan was wrecked. August Eggers also lost his barn and all outbuildings. The McWilliams school house, three miles east of Denison, was completely wrecked.

ROSEBERY GOES OUT.

ENGLISH PREMIER TENDERS HIS RESIGNATION.

Lord Salisbury, the Former Tory Leader, Called In—Irish Leaders Are Profoundly Disgusted with the Present Turn of Affairs at London.

Crisis in Great Britain.

Lord Rosebery tendered his resignation to the queen during his recent visit to Windsor. He advised the queen to send for Lord Salisbury. The former tory premier went down to Windsor and accepted the task of forming a government in the present parliament. Lord Rosebery and Sir William Harcourt announced the resignation of the liberal ministry in their respective houses Monday afternoon.

By a technical ruse, almost impossible to explain to American readers because of the totally different procedure in parliament as compared with the American Congress, the ministry will avoid declaring itself before the present parliament and force a dissolution and general election within the next three weeks. If this is successful the real purposes of the resignation of the liberal ministry will be defeated. This was to compel the tories to submit a policy to parliament before going to the country. Whether or not the liberals can checkmate this programme remains to be seen. If they still have a majority they can possibly do so. Certainly the next few weeks will make an epoch in the parliamentary history of Great Britain, since Lord Rosebery cannot now withdraw his resignation. The Irish leaders are urging their liberal allies to stand firm in demanding a declaration in parliament of the tory program. The truth is, however, that they are profoundly disgusted with the situation.

Rosebery's Brief Term as Premier.

Earl Rosebery was offered the office of prime minister by the queen on March 3, 1894, Mr. Gladstone having offered his resignation on account of his failing eyesight. Lord Rosebery had occupied the position of foreign secretary in Mr. Gladstone's cabinet and had been prominently considered for ten years past as the probable successor of Mr. Gladstone in the leadership of the liberal party when the time for the retirement of that gentleman should come. About the only objection urged against the appointment as premier was that the leader of the party should be a member of the house of commons and that the party cannot be managed from the house of lords. Lord Rosebery, upon assuming the premiership, took the place of first lord of the treasury in the cabinet and called the Earl of Kimberley to succeed himself as foreign secretary. The leadership in the house of commons was intrusted to Sir William Vernon Harcourt, who retained his place in the cabinet as chancellor of the exchequer. The retirement of Mr. Gladstone was considered a severe strain upon the government, and many persons looked for the defeat of the liberals and the resignation of the cabinet at that time.

RESULTS IN TWO DEATHS.

Accident on the Whaleback Christopher Columbus.

The result of the accident on the whaleback steamer Christopher Columbus on a voyage from Milwaukee to Chicago Saturday night was the death of two men, fatal injury to another, three seriously scalded and seven slightly burned. The accident was caused by the bursting of a steam pipe. It was the homeward run of the whaleback in its opening summer excursion to Milwaukee. About 350 souls were aboard. Flying flags, with music and dancing, was the order of the evening.

The accident on the Christopher Columbus, according to the engineering authorities, is one of the unaccountable things that occasionally occur in steam plants. A cast-iron pipe eight inches in diameter and three-quarters of an inch thick suddenly cracked around its entire circumference under a steam pressure of less than 165 pounds, after having previously stood a test pressure of 255 pounds to the inch. The stories of the accident being caused by straining in a race with the Virginia are denied by every officer of the Columbus.

The circumstances, as related by the boat's officers, were as follows: The cylinders of the engine were entirely new, and it would be destructive and dangerous to run them at high speed until the parts wore down. Two representatives of the engine builders were on board and constantly reminded the engineers not to use speed. Chief Engineer Webster says the speed was ninety revolutions, whereas the boat has made 130 a minute, and steam pressure was 160 pounds to the square inch, while the government allows 170. Captain Robert Smith says that he had reckoned the speed just before the explosion and it was about sixteen miles an hour. The whaleback has made twenty-one miles an hour. As further evidence of the fact that there was no race the statement is made that the Virginia had passed the whaleback and was two miles ahead.

THE Lane Bridge Company, of Chicago, will at once romove from that city to Wabash, having made a deal with the Wabash Board of Trade. Wabash business men offered to take stock if the works were removed to Wabash. The offer was accepted and a new company organized.

AT Martinsville, Harvey Satterwhite climbed on the rain-soaked roof of one of his houses in attempting to repair a leak. He fell several feet to the ground and suffered concussion of the spine and is seriously hurt. He is ex-president of the First National Bank, and was a shareholder and director of the defunct Inianapolis National Bank.

ONE of the worst accidents that ever happened in Attica was a boiler explosion at the home of Charles Peterson. Two men were killed, and four badly injured, one fatally. The engine was an old traction affair, belonging to contractor Pernius of Goodland, who was drilling a well for Charles Peterson. The boiler exploded without warning, and was hurled 300 feet into a pasture.

REPORTS from 758 Township Assessors of the States as to the condition of the wheat crop have been received by State Statestician Thompson. The reports cover 89 of the 92 counties of the State. They bear out the predictions made by the department a week ago. The exact yield, predicated on the basis of the reports at hand, is 7.77 bushels to the acre. The figures indicate a total yield of about 20,000,000 bushels, or about two-fifths of a crop.

Artificial Voice.

The operation of removing the entire larynx from a living man has been successfully performed in a number of cases, and in several of these an artificial larynx, with reeds vibrating somewhat like the reed of a clarionet, has been constructed. In one case it was made of hard rubber, and the man could speak in a loud, clear and distinct manner. He could not relax or increase the tension of the vibrating reed, and hence his voice was monotonous in tone, but, being an ingenious mechanic, he made several different sets of vibrating reeds of different pitch, and as he could slide these in and out of box at pleasure, he could thus suddenly change his voice from the deepest bass to the highest soprano to the great astonishment of his hearers.

Beecham's pills are for biliousness, sick headache, dizziness, dyspepsia, bad taste in the mouth, heartburn, torpid liver, foul breath, sallow skin, coated tongue, pimples loss of appetite, etc., when caused by constipation; and constipation is the most frequent cause of all of them.

One of the most important things for everybody to learn is that constipation causes more than half the sickness in the world, especially of women; and it can all be prevented. Go by the book, free at your druggist's, or write B. F. Allen Co., 365 Canal St., New York. Pills, 10¢ and 25¢ a box.

WE MUST RETRENCH.

HOW TO DECREASE PUBLIC EXPENDITURES.

Along with a Demand for Lower Duties Tariff Reformers Have Always Urged Retrenchment in National Expenses.

Governmental Extravagance.

Along with a demand for lower duties tariff reformers have always urged the necessity for sweeping retrenchement in our national expenditures. It is greatly to be regretted that the late Congress was unable to escape from the bad precedent set by Czar Reed's "billion dollar" Congress, and cut down a great many unnecessary appropriations. But the fact may as well be admitted that economy is not popular in Congress, simply because it is not popular with the country at large. The people talk economy, and the politicians of all parties promise to be economical, but neither people nor politicians really want smaller appropriations. As an abstract theory everybody says: "Certainly, I want to see our national burden of taxation reduced." But when it comes to a question of log-rolling for each community or selfish interest, economy is whistled down the wind and everybody goes in to grab all they can for themselves or neighbors. This country is so great that by the time each has received an appropriation, the total annual expenditure has grown to an enormous sum.

The alarming growth of governmental extravagance in recent years is largely due to the idea that indirect taxes are not paid by anyone in particular, and that anyway, spending a great deal of money is good for the country. The vigorous protest against the income tax showed clearly that while men will pay a tariff tax amounting to 20 or 30 per cent. of their income, a proposition to directly tax incomes 2 per cent. will raise a lively row. The lesson is that if all taxes were direct it would not be so easy to get money to be uselessly squandered. As for the notion that the government's spending money taken from the people is a good thing, it is only necessary to point out that if the money were left in the pockets of the people, they could spend it for some useful purpose, instead of having it practically thrown away. Under present conditions it is useless to argue for lower tariff duties unless we convince the people that direct taxation would lead to a general protest against all sorts of government corruption and extravagance.

About Deficit and Such.

An esteemed Ohio contemporary, the Portsmouth Blade, which worships at the shrine of McKinley, observes:

"The Wilson bill has caused a deficit of fifty millions of dollars, and labor will have it to pay. Oh, yes, the poor man's blanket comes cheaper; but what does cheapness amount to without the money in the laborer's pocket to take advantage of it?"

What is a deficit? And what causes it? The people who pay into the Federal Treasury the money to keep the government running, it would appear, have not paid enough by fifty million dollars to meet the expenses for the current fiscal year. The fifty million dollars which the people have not paid therefore, remains in their own pockets. If the government be obliged to borrow, it pays no more for the use of the money than its use is worth to the taxpayer. The taxpayer, therefore, loses nothing from the interest charge. No harm comes from a temporary deficit, to a government in good credit. If the money, however, have been used for extravagant or needless purposes, that is another consideration. In the case of the United States nearly half the revenue of the Treasury is paid out for pensions.

There is still another view of the matter. Mr. Jay Cooke, a Republican financier of authority in the good old greenback days, declared that "a national debt was a national blessing." There are thousands of good people who are still possessed of the notion that a fiat debt, payable nowhen and nowhere, is a thing altogether lovely. This doctrine is unsound; it cannot be denied but that there is one element of advantage in a lean Treasury. Deficits are breeders of economies, precisely as fat surpluses are incentives to wild expenditures. Economies don't hurt. The Portsmouth Blade should deal a little more fairly with its readers, and not try to pull the wool over the eyes of laboring men by making them think they have been cheated because the taxgatherer has failed to call upon them for all his due.—Philadelphia Record.

Frank R. Stockton once wrote a funny story of an artist who painted a peculiar picture. When hung right side up it was a morning scene, with the rising sun reflected in a woodland lake. Turned upside down it was changed into a twilight view, with the sun going out of sight. A similar picture has for a long time been painted by high tariff orators and editors. Holding up a daub entitled "McKinleyism," they point out the beautiful high prices in the foreground. "These," they say, "are the effects of protection. By shutting out foreign goods with a high tariff wall, we enable the home manufacturer to get higher prices. Because of his higher prices he can pay higher wages, people can then afford to pay more for goods, and thus everybody is benefitted."

Then, suddenly—flop! goes the picture, and the high tariffite resumes. "This gorgeous work of art by the illustrious Mr. Chromo, is intended to represent an era of low prices, caused entirely by high protective duties. By shutting out all foreign low-priced goods we greatly stimulate our home industries. The result of this home competition is to put prices lower than they are already. In this way everything is made cheap, and everybody is helped." Summed up, the argument for protection amounts to two principles: First, it makes wages higher by raising prices; second, it makes goods cheaper by increasing competition. You pay your taxes and you don't get your choice.

"Crushing Industry."

The Crane Company of this city, one of the largest in its line the world over, has voluntarily advanced wages to its employes by 10 per cent. The company was never doing a larger business. There was no demand on the part of its employes for more pay, but the company concluded that it was fair, considering the present condition of its affairs, to give its wage-earners a larger share of its profits. That step toward commercial freedom which was taken by the Wilson bill does not appear to be crushing anybody. We were told that it would prostrate industries and reduce labor to a woeful condition. Such does not appear to be the effect. On the contrary, greater activities are manifest everywhere, and with the increase in earnings come larger employment and added wage. The Wilson bill is a winner; a mascot, not a hoodoo.—Chicago Chronicle.

Protection and Immigration.

The Rev. Madison C. Peters, of New York City, is a curious preacher of the doctrine of "Peace on earth; good will among men." In a recent sermon he declared himself in favor of protecting the American capitalist with a tariff, and of suspending all immigration until all the men now in this country have found work. This idea of shutting out the people who want to come here and add to the wealth of the country by helping produce things is frequently heard among high-tariffites these days. They realize that protection does not help the workingmen and so are taking up the anti-immigration fad as a new scheme to hoodwink the people. But it is rare to find a preacher of the gospel who professes the restrictionist theories so boldly as does the Rev. Mr. Peters.

It is hardly necessary to explain that immigration is not the cause of hard times. This country is far more prosperous and wages are higher now than forty years ago, yet since that time we have received over 8,000,000 immigrants. Each man who comes here able and willing to work is a direct benefit to the country so long as all the opportunities for employment have not been filled. And who is there will pretend that all the work of this country has been done? Are there not lands to clear and cultivate? Forests to convert into lumber? Coal and iron in vast deposits to furnish iron and steel? Surely there is no lack of opportunity for men willing to work.

The real trouble has been that under a foolish tariff system, which restricted foreign commerce, our industries have lacked a market for all the goods they could produce. The industrious foreigner who came here expecting to settle on our vacant land and raise crops found himself so taxed by the tariff, and foreign trade so hampered by protection, that he could not compete in the markets of the world. The skilled workingman found factories running with all the men they might employ, because the home market for goods was glutted and tariff taxes on raw materials made it impossible to send goods abroad. The result has been that instead of going out on farms, where they would become consumers of our goods, or going to work in factories, of late years immigrants have swelled the number of the memployed.

The remedy for this state of affairs is the adoption of a tariff policy which will make farming profitable, and give wider markets for our industries. Then we shall be able to welcome every honest willing workmen who comes here to share the privileges of American citizenship. And we shall not find clergymen preaching a gospel of selfishness, ill-will and restriction, but of the brotherhood of all mankind.

Old in Crime.

The American Protective Tariff League recently celebrated its tenth anniversary. Though young in years, this organization is old in crime, having for just ten years been an agency for all that is mean, narrow, selfish and injurious in matters of public policy. It has sought to stir up international hatreds and strife; it helped foster McKinleyism in this country, and fought against the proposals for less restricted trade in the Wilson bill. It has steadily pursued a policy of sending out false and misleading documents, appealing to the ignorance and prejudices of the people. Its whole record has been one to be ashamed of, and in future generations no descendant of its members will have any reason to be proud of the circumstance. It is unlovely in life, and may its death be not far distant.

Can't Write It Down.

The Home Market Bulletin, a protectionist publication, has issued what may be termed a symposium of high tariff comparisons between the conditions of textile industries in April, 1893, and April, 1895. It is a very depressing statement, in sharp contrast with the hopeful and promising statements that have recently filled the columns of the newspaper press. But even the Bulletin concedes that the volume of production and the wages paid are only 5 per cent. below the average condition when McKinleyism had full swing and had wrought its perfect work. Business in the United States is getting better. Protectionist journals will soon give up the attempt to write it down.—Philadelphia Record.

An Accurate Answer.

An always anti-Democratic newspaper which sometimes masquerades with the Democrats says of the Ohio Republican platform:

"When the Republicans say that the present administration has inaugurated a policy looking towards free trade, which has deranged business, crippled our industries, distressed our homes and dealt labor a serious blow, what can Democrats reply?"

If they don't care for circumlocutions they can say that it is a lie. This is the shortest and the most accurate answer. And it applies with equal pertinency to the most of the Foraker platform.—New York World.

France Turning Toward Free Trade.

Evidence that the protection idea is dying out in France is shown by the election of M. Lockroy President of the Budget Committee of the Chamber of Deputies, a position similar to that of the Chairmanship of the Ways and Means Committee in our House of Representatives. M. Edward Lockroy is a pronounced free-trader, and the fact of his selection for such an important office is a sign that the influence of M. Meline, who is called the "French McKinley," is waning. With a free-trader for President of the republic, and of her Budget Committee, it will not be long before France will be found on the side of free commerce with the world.

IN PREFERENCE TO WEALTH.

Few People Actually So Constituted as to Be Satisfied with It Alone.

As a matter of fact the chief impression produced by great wealth, even in America, is simply curiosity, not admiration, hardly even envy. There are many things that people really value more than wealth at any time—perhaps, thinks Harper's Bazar, valuing wealth only as a means for these things. In youth people prize amusement, pleasure, love; and wealth is thrown away recklessly for the sake of such ends. After the maturer tastes are developed, people have no objection to wealth for the sake of other aims which it may promote, but it is not a substitute for those aims. The artist loves art, the man of science loves science, the student loves study, the inventor loves invention, the domestic man loves home. Even the man of action loves action mainly as a thing attractive in itself. He would readily accept wealth as a means of achieving his other purposes, but he would not sell those purposes for wealth. The proof of this is that he does not, indeed he often impoverishes himself for his own pursuits. "Beyond a very moderate account," wrote Coleridge, "I regard money as a real evil." The man of other pursuits knows that one cannot possibly be very rich and carry on those other pursuits also, so engrossing is the mere care of property, and so difficult and absorbing is the wise use of it. Many a prominent artist or author has been simply ruined for the purposes for which he was created by becoming heir to a large estate; not that it demoralized him otherwise, but it left him no time for his natural work. Volumes have been written on the suppression of genius through poverty, but very little has yet been said on the wrecking of genius through wealth.

A Stoker's Saviour.

The Austrian engineer Werner has patented an invention which bids fair to turn the labor of a stoker, or steamboat fireman, from the hardest, ugliest, and most unhealthy sort of toil into mere child's play occupation. His plan consists in pulverizing bituminous coal and feeding it to the furnaces by means of a pear-shaped "distributor," self-acting under ordinary circumstance, but withal amenable to the control of the operator. Experiments have provided that coal dust, poured into a strong blaze, will burn almost without a residuum. There will be no raking of ashes and clinkers, next to no smoke, and the apparatus can be worked without approaching the hades of the furnace door.

From the Romans.

"Put your right foot foremost," is a piece of advice that has been offered to most folk, young and old, in the course of their lives. It is generally equivalent to saying, "Now's your chance; do your very best and shown what you are capable of." Like a great many common phrases this expression has an old origin. In the days of ancient Rome, when people were usually the slaves of some superstition or other, it was thought to be unlucky to cross the threshold of a house with the left foot first. Consequently a boy was placed at the door of the mansion to remind visitors that they were to to put their right foot foremost. The use of the phrase in the wider sense soon became obvious.

THE GUNMAKER OF ILION.

JEFFERSON M. CLOUGH REFUSES A TEMPTING OFFER FROM THE CHINESE GOVERNMENT.

His Health Was Too Poor to Permit Attention to Business—A Great Sufferer for Many Years, but Has Now Recovered.

(From the Springfield, Mass., Union.)

There isn't a gun manufacturer in the United States who does not know Jefferson M. Clough, and why? Because he has been intimately associated all his life with the development of the two best American rifles, the Remington and Winchester. For years he was superintendent of the E. Remington & Sons' great factory at Ilion, N. Y. After leaving there he refused a tempting offer of the Chinese Government to go to China to superintend their Government factories—and accepted instead the superintendency of the Winchester Arms Co., at New Haven, at a salary of $7,500 a year.

It was after this long term of active labor as a business man that he found himself incapacitated for further service by the embargo which rheumatism had laid upon him and resigned his position more than two years ago, and returned to Belchertown, Mass., where he now lives and own the Phelps farm, a retired spot where he has 500 acres of land.

Being a man of means he did not spare the cost and was treated by leading physicians and by baths at celebrated springs without receiving any benefit worth notice. During the summer of 1893 and the winter of 1894 Mr. Clough was confined to his house in Belchertown, being unable to rise from his bed without assistance, and suffering continually with acute pains and with no taste or desire for food, nor was he able to obtain sufficient sleep.

Early in the year 1894 Mr. Clough heard of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. He began taking these pills about the first of March, 1894, and continued to do so until the first part of September following. The first effect noticed was a better appetite, and he began to note more ability to help himself off the bed and to be better generally. Last August (1894) he was able to go alone to his summer residence and farm of 163 acres on Grenadier Island, among the Thousand Islands, in the River St. Lawrence, where from the highest land of his farm he commands a view for thirteen miles down the river, and sixty of the Thousand Islands can be seen.

Instead of being confined to his bed Mr. Clough is now and has been for some time able to be about the farm to direct the men employed there, and he is thankful for what Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have done for him.

These pills are manufactured by the Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y., and are sold only in boxes bearing the firm's trade mark and wrapper, at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and are never sold in bulk. They may be had of all druggists or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Co.

Eloquence.

The proprietor of a large building in one of the Eastern cities, which contains several "flats" or living apartments on the upper floors, says that he never succeeded in renting these apartments readily until he employed a very eloquent Irish woman as janitress or agent for the care and letting of them.

Several times the graceful "blarney" of this excellent woman has secured a customer where a less gifted agent would have failed.

"Kinvayniences, is it?" says she to applicants for the rooms. "Sure it's hot an' could wather at all hours of the day and noight agrayable to yer tashte, an' set toobs that wud make a washerwoman o' the Quane of England by prifference!"

"Are the rooms comfortably warmed?" asks an inquirer.

"Are they wohrmed!" with a surprised air. "Sure, wid a sloight turn o' yer wrisht ye have anny degray o' timperature known to the therimether!"

"But the staircase; is that easy to go up?"

"Now, thin," says the eloquent agent, as if she were reaching the climax of all the wonderful advantages of the building, "the staircase is that aisy that whin ye're goin' opp, ye would well belave that ye're comin' down!"

The intending tenant usually capitulates at this point.

A VALUABLE FIND.

After years of study and labor there has at last been discovered a sure and never-failing remedy. It has been tested on patients who have despaired of ever being cured, and the results have been in every case, wonderful. Groff's Rheumatic Cure is unequaled as a positive remedy in all cases of Chronic and Acute Inflammatory Rheumatism, Gout, Lumbago, Sciatica, Neuralgia, especially Ovarian Neuralgia, Dysmenorrhœa and all kindred affections. It is also a valuable Blood Purifier, being especially useful in Eczema, Psoriasis, Scrofula, all Glandular Enlargements and diseases of the Liver and Kidneys. It is absolutely free from all narcotics. Severe attacks are relieved in from one to three days, and a positive cure effected in from five to eighteen days. For sale by Druggists. Manufactured and sold by THE GROFF MEDICINE CO., Chicago. 17tf

A Friend's Advice.

Some four or five years ago J. A. Goodyear, a young man full of life and vigor, left the old farm in Calhoun county, for the more active life in the city. Drifting into the telegraph business, he secured a position on the C. & N. W. railroad, at Republic, Mich. In addition to his duties as operator, he was required to sell tickets, baggage and make himself generally useful. Between the exacting officials on the one side and the consistent public on the other, he was worked and worried to such an extent that his health gave out and one day he was carried to his home, after having a severe nervous spasm; he grew from bad to worse until he had to relinquish his position, a physical wreck.

The doctor could not cure him and told him so, but advised him to go to Ann Arbor and place himself in charge of that world wide institution of learning, which he did. He continued with their treatment constantly and faithfully for four long years, receiving little, if any, benefit. While in this condition, a friend gave him a bottle of Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer, with an urgent request to use it. Not wishing to offend his friend, he promised to do so, but did not, because, as he argued with himself, "What is the use of taking that 'stuff' if the most learned nerve specialists in the world can not cure me?" But as time passed he would occasionally think of the neglected bottle of medicine given him and his promise to use it. One day he picked it up and mechanically pulled the cork, measured out a dose and took it; a change seemed to come over him, his nervousness abated, his mind became clear and he thought he felt something of his old time vigor. He continued taking the Vitalizer until he was able to sit up, then to walk a few steps; the sluggish blood in his veins became active color returned to his flesh and he felt the need of more food. He soon improved so that he sought and became engaged in light labor and earned the first dollar in nearly two years; hope attained its long vacated position in his brain and his friends rejoiced at the wonderful change. Mr. Goodyear is now leading a thoroughly active and successful life which he says he is proud to attribute to Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer, the greatest nerve builder ever produced for nervous prostration, spasms, fits, sleeplessness, mental depression, exhausted vitality, despondency, sexual and general debility. John W. Shaffer.

One of our best known and highly respected citizens passed away yesterday. John W. Shaffer died at his home here, yesterday evening after a painful illness of several weeks: He was born in Ashland county, Ohio, August 26, 1830, making his age 64 years, 9 months and 23 days. He was married to Mary Ann McBride Aug. 7, 1853. To them six children were born, five of whom survive, namely Ora, at Port Townsend, Wash., Will, at American Fork, Utah, Mrs. Rose Blum at Garrett, Mrs. Carrie Cullers at Champaign, Ill., and Miss Bertha, who is at home. He moved to DeKalb county, Ind., in 1852. Ten years later, he moved to Pierceton, Kosciusko county and about ten years after, in 1872 returned to Auburn where he has since carried on his business of wagon making. He has always been a member of the M. E. church and a consistent, faithful, christian, since the age of 17.

The funeral will be at the M. E. church to-morrow afternoon, at 1 p. m. the sermon, being by Rev. J. K. Waltz, his pastor. The casket will not be opened at the church, but will be opened at the residence during the forenoon. The interment will be in Woodlawn.

There had been a good deal of uncertainty as to the disease that terminated J. W. Shaffer's life and this forenoon a post mortem examination was made. Dr. D. J. Swarts and Dr. Willard Swarts did the work as we understand it. But there were present Dr. Shoemaker and Mr. Campbell of Butler, Dr. Vesta M. Swarts, Drs. Sebring F. M. and A. L. Hines of Auburn and a few other friends It resulted in the physicians being satisfied that death resulted from nervous prostration following a severe attack of sickness.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly For July.

The current July number of Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly presents an art-display that, this unprecedented even in the history of this great periodical of the people. LIFT YOUR HATS!

Company K. takes the Biggest Plum in the Third Regiment.

Capt. A. L. Kuhlman received the report of the recent inspection yesterday, from Col. James K. Gore, of Elkhart. Below we give the result of the inspection:

Co. K. Auburn	86.9
Co. F South Bend	86.1
Co. C Goshen	85.4
Co. E Elkhart	79.2
Co. B Fort Wayne	77.8
Co. H Angola	77.7
Co. D Plymouth	75.5
Co. G Fort Wayne	74
Co. I Waterloo	68.3
Co. L La Porte	65.1
Co. M Indianapolis	Not inspected

From the above it will be seen that the Auburn Rifles, Co. K have received the best grade of any company in the Third regiment. The Rifles were second best in the regiment last year, and taking everything into consideration they have made a remarkably good showing. The present company was only mustered into service last January and the majority of them are new members. We quote the latter part of Col. Gore's letter to Capt. Kuhlman, it reads: "A little more attention to minor details will make your company second to none in the great state of Indiana."

THE CONVENTION.

As noted in yesterday's DAILY a number of our people took the special train for Angola to attend the Epworth League convention. The meeting was held in the M. E. church and was a grand success in every particular. There were over two hundred and fifty delegates present besides the league at Angola which made a total of over three hundred Epworth Leagues in attendance besides the friends of the church. At 9:30 o'clock last evening the delegates and visiting friends were invited to the Armory, where an elegant reception and banquet was tendered. The Angola orchestra furnished music while the large audience seated at the tables partook of refreshments. The writer has attended the conventions for the last five years and this one was the best ever held, The Epworth League's and citizens of Angola are to be congratulated for the generous hospitality shown.

Among those in attendance from Auburn were: Rev. J. K. Waltz and daughter Libbie, Rev. W. L. Meese, A. B. Olds and wife, J. C. Lechner and wife, Mrs. Etta Potter and son, Lodie, Mrs. John Weaver, Mrs. Wm. Daily, Misses Lena Zimmerman, Daisy Bumpus, Mattie Moody, Nellie Boyer, Ruthie Baker, Lunet Daily, Agnes Daily, and Jari Sprott and Ora Snyder. The following droye up from Leo, and took the train here: Rev. W. J. Waltz, Florence McCormick, Mattie Zargler, Hattie Douglass, Mary Hilkey, Mary Comesky, Wm. Stapleton, Hulbert Rummel and Willie Rummel.

OBITUARY.

Mrs. Lucetta A. Bone, daughter of John and Elizabeth Draggoo, was born in Ashland County, Ohio, Feb. 7, 1827, and died in Auburn, Ind., June 16th, 1895. She was married in 1847 to Isaac Latson. As a result of this union one child was born, who has not only been a son but a companion and largely a provider for his mother for many, many years. Her one regret at thought of death was the leaving of this son to live in loneliness.

In 1857 she moved to Missouri remaining there till 1875 when she returned to Auburn, where she has since resided. She was married to John Bone in 1862, Sept. 18, at Hannibal, Mo. and to them was born one son, Ira S. Bone who survives her. She joined the M. E. church in girlhood and remained a faithful member until death translated her from the church militant to the church triumphant. Those long associated with her speak freely of her loyalty and devotion to her church. One thing deserves special mention. "She never found fault with her pastor." She loved the missionary society and from her small means she managed to save something to put into this treasury.

I have hope for the answer to her prayers in the behalf of some in whom she was interested for "their works do follow them." "She was a good, faithful mother," are the words of a long acquaintance of hers. This is high tribute because it means so much to be a true mother, and such she was.

Four Big Successes.

Having the needed merit to more than make good all the advertising claimed for them, the following four remedies have reached a phenomenal sale. ABSOLUTELY PURE

A RUSH TO MARRY.

Washington, June 14.—A tidal wave of wedlock is sweeping over a portion of the African race in the district. The Edmunds law made it a misdemeanor for a man and woman to live together and not be married. It was intended to capture the mormons, but it has had a contrary effect. It has caught the colored race in the district within its coils. A large portion of them have never thought of getting a marriage license or parading before a preacher at all. The whole population of the district is declared by the police census to be about 270,000, of which 80,000 are of African blood. The books also declare that, while colored persons take out only 6 per cent. of the marriage licenses they furnish 40 per cent. of the births.

The constabulary a month ago began to arrest all who were living together without marriage. Colored circles became profoundly agitated. Not more than two score had been sent to the work house, when former Representative Conn, of Indiana, a millionaire, heard of the crusade.

"Why not cure these evils with a dose of marriage license? asked Mr. Conn.

He negotiated for a few reams of blank marriage licenses and started in. He fitted up a big room in his building and made a contract with Rev. J. W. Norris of one of the local colored churches, by the terms of which the Rev. Norris was to report for duty at 8 o'clock in the afternoon during the six working days of the week, and marry all comers.

The bureau has been running a week and the craze to "come down town and be married" is preying upon the colored population. There have been 78 couples married during the past four days. Some of the applicants for a free wedding were aged "uncles" and "aunties" who had lived together ever "since the war"

"It am cuttingly a grete privilege watch," remarked Rev. Norris, "de morals sagacitushes of Mistah Conn unfolds to de pore darkened colored sinner of Wash'ngton an' vicin'ty."

The Rev. Mr. Norris might have said more but 3 o'clock rang out; game was called and he had to go to bat. His $5 and his duty called. After Rev. Mr. Norris had asked the questions he addressed the multitude briefly. It was a model serving oration. He said:

"Now if you all folks will stan' about me in a semmy-suckle I can marry seben couple at a clatter, an' shorten de time."

Seven couples arranged themselves in an arc in front of Rev. Mr. Norris. On the left wing of this line of battle stood William Mallard. William's bride was clothed in neat black. Most of the brides were clad in the common raiment of every day, but several had on resplendent costumes. When the seven couples were arranged Rev. Mr. Norris cleared his throat, opened his book and remarked:

"Stan' facin' each other an' jine yo' right hands."

They did it as if the movement had been rehearsed. There they stood, these 14 black candidates for a better life and a higher plane of morals, looking for all the world as if they expected the next order would be "Grand right and left."

But it wasn't. Rev. Mr. Norris married the whole outfit in less than a minute.

Of those who were wedded that day, all had been in need of the ceremony from four to 30 years. At least 70 children were rendered legitimate by that day's charity of Mr. Conn.

A colored belle approached timidly and said she and a young man named Hill wanted to be made man and wife.

"Whar is he?" remarked Rev. Mr. Norris. "P'int de trifler out, an' I'll marry yon."

"Mistah Hill ain't heah," she murmured, hanging her head. "But if it rains we will be down tomorrow at 3 o'clock."

"What's the rain got to do wid it?" demanded the Rev. Mr. Norris, suspiciously.

Why, Henry's a bricklayer," replied the bride-to-be. "If it's sunshiny he'll be at work, an' we'll have to put it off. But if it rains we'll come tomorrow at three."

"Delays is dangerous, honey," said Rev. Mr. Norris. "Yo bettah come tomorrow."

Mr. Conn is doing a great and serious work. He stood looking on while Mr Norris tied the knot, and his face wore a smile of pleasure.

"It's a good thing," remarked Mr. Conn. "Its better than the workhouse and the jail. These people ar'n't bad; they are unfortunate It's the first time I believe, that any preacher was ever hired by the week to marry persons, but I'm going to keep it up while one remains unmarried.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J Gunderman, of Dimondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist church at Rives Junction she was brought down with pneumonia succeeding lagrippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interuption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results." Trial bottles free at Robbins & McCord's drugstore. Regular size 50c. and $1.00. 1

Who holds your mortgage? How much interest are you paying? Do you owe a building loan association anything? If you do, how much interest are you paying them? Unless you are better posted than the majority of people who have such loans, you cannot tell. You think you are paying 6 per cent. Do you know (of course not) that you are paying at least 12 per cent. If you think not, just figure it out yourself. Now then, are you not paying 6 per cent interest and 6 per cent premium? Certainly. Well now don't you know that premium and interest are the same thing—its all interest. Can you afford to pay 12 per cent interest to a loan association when even your banks only charge 8 per cent and you think they are charging too much, and when do you expect to have your loan canceled or paid off in full? You have been told 72 or 78 months. Now then, we undertake to say that it will take you 100 months, if you will oall on us we will show you so you will be satisfied that we are right. Now then, we are prepared to loan you money on monthly installment plan for 8 per cent, we charge you no membership fee and you do not have to make three or more payments in advance so that if on account of insufficient security or bad title your loan is rejected you will not lose one cent. You pay nothing unless your loan is granted. We are making farm loans at from 3 to 5 per cent with privilege of partial payments.

ANOTHER THING!

There is scarcely a day but what there is some traveling agent for some building loan association in Auburn soliciting business, selling stock upon which they charge yon a membership fee of from 50 cents to $1.00 per share, which amount goes to the agent and you never get back this money thrown away. If you will call on us we will take your application for all the stock you want in the BEST (we can prove it) building loan association in the state the INDIANA MUTUAL OF INDIANAPOLIS, and charge you No MEMBERSHIP FEE AT ALL. This is certainly fair. If you have any investment stock in any association just write them a letter and ask them the withdrawal value of same, their reply will probably open your eyes. What would you say if you would deposit $8.00 per month in your bank for one year and wanted to withdraw the same and they would offer to pay you only about $80? The bank would only have to do this in one case to be compelled to retire from business. Now you pay ten dollars membership fee and 8 dollars for 12 months making 108 dollars, you lose the 10 dollars membership fee and 10 cents per share each month for expenses, making 12 dollars, or a total of 22 dollars loss upon which you would receive 6 per cent interest for average time on 96 dollars, making 2 dollars and 88 cts. from 22 dollars would leave you a loser of 19 dollars and 12 cents. In our association your stock is worth all you have paid in, with its interest added, so that upon withdrawal you do not get less than you paid. We want the people of Auburn to become familiar with this matter, and would like to have any that are interested to call and talk with us, we can give you some pointers.

We are still in the Real Estate, Insurance and R. R. Ticket business.

One of Women's Weapons.

Dress is a legitimate womanly weapon, but men have as great a claim upon it, and it has played a part in human history of far deeper singificance than either vanity or love of supremacy. writes Mrs. Amelia E. Barr in an attractive reply to the often-asked question, "Have Women Found New Weapons?" in the June Ladies' Home Journal. Some Daniel will yet come to judge the centuries by the way in which they have dressed themselves, and in the meantime women will use it in all its changes and splendors as the insignia of their royalty.

In Two Days.

A horse kicked H. F. Shafer, of the Freemyer House, Middleburg, N. Y. on the knee, which laid him up in bed and caused the knee joint to become stiff. A friend, recommended him to use Chamberlain's Pain Balm, which he did, and in two days was able to be around. Mr Shafer has recommend it to many others and says it is excellent for any kind of a bruise or sprain. This same remedy is also famous for its cures of rheumatism For sale by Robbins & McCord. 27 30

FIRST OIL WELLS

In March 1889 the first oil wells were sunk in Indiana. Near Bluffton the on Penn farm W. O. Patch, of Pittsburg, with mammoth drills, speared the earth of Indiana and the great flow of oil began. In the fall of 1889 Mr. Patch located his office in Bluffton. His first wells were light and he met with many discouragements but having great confidence that Jay county had a rich oil field he was perserving and finally in September, 1892, drilled in a well on the Lewis Grissell farm, in Penn township, that started off at five hundred barrels a day.

From the Bluffton Banner the following is clipped: While the Grissell farm is the richest in oil, there are now in Jay county over two hundred farms on which are rich pools of oil, producing from fifty to five hundred barrels of oil a day. The Aaron Letts farm stands next to the Grissell in production. Five years ago, Letts was a prosperous farmer with a hundred and sixty acres of land and no ambition to be wealthy. He is now loaning money and taking life easy. Another luckly individual is ex-County Treasurer John Hays, who in order to save a debt due him two years ago, bought the Harris farm.

All Satisfied.

W. H Nelson, who is in the drug business at Kingville, Mo, has so much confidence in Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy that he warrants every bottle and offers to refund the money to any customer who is not satisfied after using it. Mr. Nelson takes no risk in doing this because the remedy is a certain cure for the disease for which it is intended and he knows it. It is for sale by Robbins & McCord. 27 30

CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE, Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

OUR VOTERS.

Union Township Has a Big Lot of 'Em.

As noted last week, Trustee Reed has been taking the enumeration of voters as required by law, and we have obtained from him a number of interesting items, as well as the total of the list itself. The following shows the number between the different ages named:

Between	80	and	90	9
"	70	"	80	23
"	50	"	70	93
"	50	"	60	131
"	40	"	50	161
"	30	"	40	275
"	20	"	30	334
Total				1026

Of these 1026 voters, they are divided between the country and the town, as follows:

Town of Auburn,	824
Country outside of Auburn,	202
Total	1026

So it will be seen that Union township outside of Auburn has about one fourth as many voters as the town has, or about one fifth of the whole. Our people would do well to save this item, as it will be handy at the next township caucus to give one an idea as to how the delegation should be apportioned.

OLDEST VOTERS.

Leonard Hoodlemier, country,	82
J. R. Cosper, country	82
Henry Bricker, town,	84
Helmuth Shutt "	84
Frederick Smith, "	83
Sidney Reed, "	82
Wm. E Rush, "	80
Chas. Raut, sr, "	80
G. W. Weeks, "	80

From this it will be seen that people live to a ripe old age in the glorious climate of Northern Indiana.

GREAT STATE PAPERS

From Harper's Round Table.

"The original McKinley tariff law is written on parchment similar to that of the Sherman law, and like it, it is bound into a big book that contains the original documents of many other laws. It fills sixty-three of these large parchment sheets, and the engrossing of it was done by three different clerks. The title of the bill is, 'An Act to Reduce the Revenues and to Equalize Duties.' It is attested in the same manner as the Sherman law, and signed by Speaker Reed, Vice President Morton, and President Harrison. The Wilson bill, which supplants the McKinley bill, fills about as many pages of the heavy unruled parchment, which, by-the-way we send to England to buy. The Wilson bill mentions almost every article of commerce that one can think of, grouping similar things into paragraphs, and naming the duties that shall be paid upon each. There is a long list of articles on which there is no duty.

"Proclamations by the President of the United States have maintained one form since the foundation of the government. The original Emancipation Proclamation issued by President Lincoln is written upon very heavy white unruled paper that is folded once. The fold is at the left, a sheet of four-paged letter paper and each page is ten by fourteen inches in size. It begins, as do all Presidential proclamations, 'By the President of the United States of America—A Proclamation.'

The first line is written with a pen in a bold hand, and the words, 'A Proclamation,' form a line of themselves—printing characters, although executed with a pen. It proclaims that on a certain date, and under certain conditions a race is free from bondage, but it nowhere calls itself an 'Emancipation Proclamation.' That is a popular name given to this, one of the most famous of state papers. The text is in the handwriting of Secretary Seward—a hand that was strikingly like that of Mr. Lincoln.

QUEER CASE.

ENTIRE BOARD OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS INDICTED BY A GRAND JURY.

The grand jury of Wabash county after a long session closing June 17, created quite a sensation by indicting the Commissioners. A special of the above date says: The board of commissioners of Wabash county were placed under arrest this afternoon and are now out on bond. The grand jury in its six weeks' session found bills against Judson Lukens of the north district for perjury in presenting a false claim of $1,000 for tile furnished the county, for extortion and for making illegal allowances—eight indictments in all.

Against James D, Starbuck of the middle district six indictments, for making illegal allowances and extortion, were returned, and against Elias P. Sailors of the south district a similar number were found. The bond of Mr. Lukens was fixed at $1,000, that of Mr. Starbuck and Mr. Sailors at $300. The indictments were found on Friday last and the tip was out to the commissioners, who lived in the country, that they might expect arrest. Owing to the fact that they were called in special session here to-day the warrants were held, and when they arrived in the city were invited to the Sheriff's office, where the papers were served. Each of the commissioners affected to treat the arrest as a joke and allege that the indictments were the result of personal prejudice on the part of grand jurors.

Latest Rattle Snake Story.

A few evenings since Supt. Merica and R. H. Weamer were riding out in the country to visit a township commencement. On the way Mr. Merica discovered what he thought was a huge rattle snake by the road side. He stopped and got out of the buggy to kill it. Mr. Weamer, however, having more experience with snakes, advised Mr. Merica not to go too near the snake, whereupon he returned to the buggy. About this time the snake uncoiled and struck the felloe of the buggy wheel. Mr. Merica nforms us that they had driven only about one mile from the place when the wheel swelled up so large that it burst the tire off. Mr. Merica says he has the proof of his victory over the snake, if it did smash his buggy wheel.

This dry season seems to be favorable to snakes, as well as to snake stories. The other day, we had a startling snake story reported by Co. Supt. Merica and R H. Weamer. We come up smiling today with another from the same vicinity. The first named snake case, happened out near the old Wm. Nelson farm on the Spencerville road. This one is at the Coy farm, a mile, nearer town. Dale Welch who resides on this farm, killed about a dozen of the rattlers last year, and thought he had exterminated them, but one day last week, had to open up the campaign again. He heard the dog barking in that part of the farm where the snakes are apt to be found, and going out there found his suspicions correct. The dog had a snake "treed" in the weeds, and this, and finally another one, were killed. The rattles of the biggest were taken as a trophy and its eight joints now adorn the business desk at Brown Culbertson & Boland's. And still there's more to follow.

DR. BUCHANAN

Dies in the Chair at Sing Sing Prison, New York.

Dr. Robert W. Buchanan, the wife poisoner, was electrocuted at Sing Sing prison, Monday. The current was turned on at 11:21 at 1,740 volts for four seconds, reduced to 400 volts, left on for thirty seconds, when it was turned on to 1,740 volts again and gradually reduced until it was turned off fifty-eight seconds after it was first applied. Buchanan entered the room with his eyes closed and did not open them at all. He walked along beside the attendant without assistance to the chair. His leg was slightly scorched and smoked during the last few seconds of the execution. The body was perfectly motionless after the electricity was turned on. Buchanan was examined by the physicians, who discovered a slight pulsation of the heart. The victim also gasped, and the doctors declared that life was not extinct, and the current was again turned on full force of 1,740 where it was held for twenty-three seconds, when it was agained turned off. Buchanan was dead at 11:23 a. m.

Heavy Loss.

Fire burned the elevator of Breckenridge & Gougar, at Otterbein, Ind., together with the depot of the Lake Erie and Western Railroad, 17 box cars, mostly empties, spread to the livery barn of Timmins & Smith, which was destroyed, and partially burned the lumber-yards of the Taylor Company, of Lafayette. The total loss is roughly estimated at $30,000. insurance on elevator and machinery in Liverpool, London and Globe, $1,000; Pennsyllania Fire and Traders', of Chicago, $500 each; Insurance Company of North America and Caledonian, $1,500 each. Both the last named companies have $500 on grain. Liverpool, London and Globe, $1,500 on lumber yard; Springfield, German-American and Connecticut, $500 each on lumber; Home and Hartford, each $1,000 on livery stable.

War Clouds Gather.

New York special: The Herald's special cable dispatch from Berlin says: A member of the diplomatic service and a close friend of Prince Bismarck has assured me that the reports of preparations being on foot for an outbreak of hostilities between Russia and Japan are quite correct. He is of the opinion that a secret treaty of alliance has been concluded between Great Britain and the Japanese Government. My informant anticipated serious complications in Europe, Asia, and Africa, owing to the inconsistent policy pursued by the German government.

Laws in Force.

Governor Matthews has issued his proclamation declaring the laws passed by the last Legislature of Indiana in force. One is excepted—the law taking the power to appoint the State House Custodian out of the hands of the Governor. In some places in the State a disposition to ignore the Nicholson temperance law is reported, but the Brewers' Association has advised saloonkeepers to observe the law until the Supreme Court has passed on it.

Fatal Mosquito Bite.

Albany (Ga.) special: Miss Daisy Green died from blood poisoning, resulting from the sting of a mosquito or some other insect. Miss Green was bitten upon the lip while she slept. The next morning two small pimples appeared on the lip. Inflammation soon set in, producing blood poisoning, from which she died in great agony. Miss Green was a student at Wesleyan Female College at Macon and was a belle in Albany society.

Caught a Wild Man.

A wild man was captured in the northern part of Sandusky County, Ohio. He had been terrorizing the people several days, going about barefooted, his clothing in shreds and brandishing a large butcher knife. He is a little shriveled-up creature, with short, stubby beard, and says he has no home. All that can be got out of him is that he came from Elmont. He will be kept in the County Jail until his domicile can be ascertained.

Found By His Boy.

Crawford Gertin, aged 33 years, became intoxicated and started to walk on the Big Four track to his home, two miles east of Greencastle, Ind. He sat down on the end of a cross-tie and was killed by an eastbound passenger train. His little son started out to find Gertin, and discovered his remains within sight of his home.

Chloroformed the Inmates.

Burglars visited the home of George Scheafer, at Goodland, Ind., reaching the second floor by means of a step-ladder and an open window, and chloroforming the the inmates. The marauders secured $74 cash and some jewelry and other valuables.

Dried Apples.

The German government not long ago laid an embargo on American dried apples because they were dried on zinc plates. Further investigation has shown that a large share of the German dried apples are prepared in the same way.

Money Coined.

The United States mints coined $1,750,000 in gold and $440,000 in silver in the month of June. It also coined $244,000 in twenty cent pieces for Ecuador.

Cut His Head Off.

Wheeling (W. Va.) special: James Loveridge, who comes from some point in Ohio, while walking along the Ohio River Railroad trestle in the Eighth Ward, fell through between the ties. He climbed up again, and just as he put his head through between the rails a passing engine cut his head from his shoulders.

Burned His Eye Out.

Elmer Shaf, an employe of the Favorite Stove Works at Piqua, Ohio, had his left eye completely burned out by red hot iron.

Spanish Disasters.

Havana special: The most serious news of Spanish disasters received here since the outbreak of the rebellion reached here recently. The garrisons of two towns have surrendered and the places burned by Maximo Gomez. Firing is heard constantly around Puerto Principe and extraordinary precautions are being taken to protect that city.

Time Limit Established.

The Supreme Court of Ohio, made an entry giving the Pennsylvania system 120 days to settle with the State, or be subject to removal in Cincinnati from valuable railroad depot grounds regained by the State through legal action.

THE FIRE DEMON.

San Francisco the Scene of a Conflagration.

The worst fire San Francisco has had in over thirty years started in the rear of the San Francisco box factory, located at Fifth and Harrison streets. Before the department reached the ground the flames were sweeping through a number of frame buildings on Fourth street which backed into the box factory and leaped across the street to the Southern Pacific hay barns. A second alarm was turned in only to be followed by the third and fourth in rapid succession. Chief Sullivan was one of the first to reach the scene and realized the danger at a glance. Before one-half of the department had connected their lines it was seen the fire was entirely beyond control. Word was telegraphed across the bay to Oakland and Alameda for assistance. The sister cities responded with two engines each. They were located along the water front and used as pumps to supply water from the bay. The Southern Pacific pump lines of hose were connected and did good service in bringing salt water to supply the fast weakening fresh water mains. A strong wind was blowing from the west and fanned the flames across the broad streets sweeping every thing in its path. Shortly after the second alarm was turned in a heavy explosion shook the city. Heavy embers were whirled through the air for blocks. They landed on the light frame buildings further east, and in a short time the firemen were practically hemmed in. For a time it looked as though the fire would be gotton under control. The wind gradually died down, but the suction of the now roaring acres of inflammable material continued to carry embers three and four feet long through the air, and the wind suddenly changing, drove the flames back over the burning district.

The fire was finally gotten under control. The high brick wall of the deserted Southern Pacific offices at Fourth and Townsend streets acted as a barrier over which the flames could not work. The water furnished from the bay by the Oakland engines and Southern Pacific pumps soon had the outer edge of the fire subdued.

A conservative estimate of the loss places it at one million and a half dollars, with about $800,000 insurance.

BY SCORES

Men Dropped Dead of Yellow Fever in the Streets of Santos.

The American barkentine Priscilla, Captain Klages, has arrived at Baltimore from Rio and Santos after a voyage of 44 days with a cargo of 14,254 bags of coffee. The Priscilla's officers report that when she left Santos May 12, yellow fever was raging on every side, and the scenes in the city and harbor were harrowing. Men were dropping dead in the streets, dying by scores in the city and on the vessels in port. Some of the vessels had their flags at half mast day after day for weeks as man after man in their crews succumbed to the scourge. The death boat was being rowed about the harbor day and night from vessel to vessel collecting the dead and taking them ashore for burial. Some of the vessels had only one or two men left in their entire crews and many of them were unable to get away from the port for lack of men. Mr. J. M. Gayle, the first officer of the Priscilla, was stricken with yellow fever while in the harbor of Santos, but recovered.

COCOPAH MOUNTAIN.

Of Lower California, Again in a State of Eruption.

Sandiego (Cal.) special: The Cocopah mountain, in Lower California, is again in a state of eruption. George Neal, a mining man, who has just returned from Juarez Placer district, reports seeing a volcano in eruption. It was the central butte of the three isolated Picachos, about twenty miles southeast of Signal mountain, and not far from the mouth of New River. He was on Cantila mountain at the time twenty or thirty miles distant. Heavy smoke was seen to ascend, at first thought to be from a Colorado river steamer. Accompanying it were heavy sounds like cannon firing, and columns shot high at intervals. Indians working at the placer told Neal that the Cocopah Mountains were again shaking, and that Cocopah and Santa Catarina Indians had left the mountains to await a cessation of disturbances.

Carl Browne and His Bride on a Tramp.

Pittsburg special: Carl Browne, the Chief Lieutenant of the Coxey Commonweal Army, who aroused public attention a few weeks ago by marrying the daughter of his late commander, is in the city, accompanied by his bride. They are on their honeymoon trip, which Browne declares is a royal one. When the couple were married they did not have a nickel between them. Coxey, who was entertaining Browne at his home near Canton, turned them out of doors. Browne borrowed 25 cents to take them to Canton. There H. W. Kirch, Chairman of the People's party, entertained them for three days. By easy stages they reached Pittsburg, stopping at all large towns along the route. Browne gives religious lectures, and at each town has managed to earn enough to take them to the next place. At Salem the Mayor attempted to freeze the couple out of the town, but Browne secured the use of some private property, to which he attracked a crowd, and delivered his lecture. He seemed to be proud of Mamie, who evidently reciprocates the affections of her honey boy. Browne will join other commanders in Washington, at least that is his intention.

G. A. R. Commander-in-chief's Aids.

Commander-in-chief Lawler of the G. A. R., in a general letter announced the appointment of the following aids on his staff:

Flying From Cuba.

New York special: The Ward Line steamer Santiago has arrived from Cuban ports. She brings fifty-eight passengers from St. Jago. Among these are several residents of St. Jago, who were compelled to flee for safety, owing to the disturbed condition of affairs in that vicinity. The news of the landing of re-enforcements for the insurgent cause was confirmed by one of the Santiago's passengers, who stated that the expedition from Florida succeeded in making a safe landing on June 21. Gen. Campos is also reported as being in a very bad position, and Cienfuegos was almost entirely surrounded by the insurgents, Spanish war vessels patrol the Cuban coast on the south side night and day.

Among the passengers who arrived by the Santiago from Nassau were Neville Chamberlain, son of the Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, and A. C. Greenwood, Secretary of Sir Ambrose Shea, Governor of the Bahamas.

A Lone Highwayman.

The third stage robbery in three months, was committed in the vicinity of Topsy Grade, Ore., where the other hold-ups occurred. This time both the north and south-bound stages, which pass each other near this place, were stopped by a lone highwayman, who held one stage two hours, pending the arrival of the other. He then rifled the mail pouches, taking only registered matter. H. V. Gates, the only passenger, was relieved of $2 in cash.

Bit His Hand Off.

Wellston (Ohio) special: Edward Littlejohn, a driver in the Tom Corwin mine, met with a terrible experience recently. Littlejohn was taking his mule from the mine when the animal became refractory and he began to beat it with a club. The mule became desperate and assaulted him in a vicious manner. Littlejohn turned and fled down the dark entry, his light becoming extinguished as he ran. The mule chased him through the entry and penned him up in a dark room, where a hard-fought battle took place, the mule climbing on Littlejohn's body and biting off his left hand near the wrist. Littlejohn's cries brought assistance, but he was nearly dead when rescued from the mule and rodents of the mine.

Dragged to Death.

West Birney, a farmer near Cadiz, Ohio, left his 5-year-old boy to attend to his horse while he picked cherries. The boy tied a hitching strap about his waist and the horse ran away, dragging the boy under his hoofs and through three fences. His body caught in the rails of one fence and pulled through, crushing it almost to a jelly. On reaching the barnyard, other horses gathered around the runway and the dead boy's body was secured with difficulty.

Fatal Fire.

A most distastrous fire resulted in distruction and death at Minneapolis. Within an hour after an alarm, six firemen were killed and several others were seriously injured. There may be still more dead who have not been extracted from under the ruins of the walls which fell and crushed them, one side of the wall falling in, the other falling out on the fireman. Total loss, $100,000; insurance, unknown.

Disappointed Scholar.

At Chicago, Minnie Lynch, the 19-year-old daughter of a wealthy saloonkeeper, committed suicide because she failed to pass the final examinations at the town of Lake high school. The girl declared that her schoolmates and teachers were prejudiced against her because her father was a saloonkeeper, and that she could not expect to receive fair treatment either at school or after she left it.

Torn by a Boat Hook.

Henry Vilian, with a party of friends, was boating on White River, near Boycetown, Ind., and met with fatal injuries. The boat capsized, and, as it turned over, Vilian fell into the water and came in contact with a boat hook, the point of which came in contact with his left groin and tore the flesh away so that the intestines protruded. Physicians say Vilian cannot live.

Run Down.

While Michael Dayton, aged 28, and Michael Cominskey, aged 26, were walking on the Reading railroad tracks at Reading, Pa., they were struck by the Williamsport express and instantly killed. The men had stepped aside to allow a freight train to pass and then attempted to cross to the up track when the express came along. They were hurled down a twenty-foot embankment.

Fatal Fire Damp.

John Marshall, jr., son of the owner of the Crowe & Marshall Coal company, was overcome by fire damp while at work in a new shaft near Boone, Iowa. John Thunell, a miner, tried to save him, but was also overcome. A third miner went down, but could not rescue the two men, and they were dead when the fire damp was forced out of the mine by the ventilators.

Suffered for Fifteen Years.

Charles Weymouth of Bellefontaine, Ohio, while threshing fifteen years ago, had a grain of wheat forced into his ear, and has suffered partial deafness and much pain ever since. The other day he had an operation performed and the grain was found in the internal ear and was removed. It is perfectly black and as hard as adamant.

Six Miners Killed.

A premature explosion occurred in a blast that was being made in a mine near Colutlan, Mexico, resulting in the killing of six miners and the injury of several others. The men were crowded about the spot when the explosion occurred.

Dynamite Outrage.

A house in Adams County, Ohio, occupied by Dyas Matheny and a Mrs. Pence, was blown to pieces by neighbors with dynamite and both were terribly injured. Cause, disapproval of the couple residing together.

Find a Deficiency.

A Chicago special says: A serious deficiency exists in the treasury of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen. It is claimed that the examination of the books and records shows a deficiency of $75,883.

Lord Lieutenant of Ireland.

The Pall Mall Gazette asserts that Earl Cadogan has been appointed lord lieutenant of Ireland, with a seat in the cabinet.

Yale Won.

The college boat race between Yale and Harvard crews, which took place at New London, Conn., was won by the former.

FIRE KILLS SIX MEN.

WALL COLLAPSES IN A MINNEAPOLIS BLAZE.

Worst in Many Years—Four Blocks in 'Frisco Destroyed—Valued at $2,000,000—Flames Rage for Four Hours, Fanned by a High Wind.

Loss Placed at $260,000.

Six men were killed and ten hurt Thursday night in the most disastrous fire which has visited Minneapolis since the old Tribune building conflagration, when the five-story brick building at 240 and 242 First avenue south, in which was the MacDonald crockery store, was destroyed. The fire broke out at 11 o'clock and burst forth with a sudden violence which defied restraint. The building was full of straw used in packing the china and the flames fed upon this and swelled to gigantic proportions. They leaped above the walls and rolled in waves of fire over the roof. The entire fire department of the city was called out and heroic measures were used by the firemen to stay the terrible tide. First avenue and Third street were filled with spectators, who watched the awful sight. Suddenly while they looked the south wall tottered out and fell with a sudden crash. A murmur of agony went up from the throng who had but a moment before seen a squad of firemen run into the alley with a quantity of hose and turn six streams of water on the walls and into the windows. Sixteen men were under that wall. When they were dragged out six were dead and others seriously injured.

The property loss consisted of the entire demolition of the building occupied by McDonald Brothers, dealers in crockery, chinaware, glassware, silverware and gas fixtures. The building was of five stories, brick walls and wooden interior framework, and was well stocked. The fire originated in the boxes and packing stored in the rear of the building and was beyond the power of the fire department to control. At a few minutes before midnight the walls fell, one side wall falling in and the other falling out into the alley, where the firemen were at work. The loss will aggregate over $260,000; insurance unknown.

The first evidence of the coming disaster was the discovery of smoke from the rear portion of the building at 10:40 o'clock. Several alarms were turned in, one from the engine house only a few hundred feet from the fire. For nearly half an hour fire burned within the walls and roof of the building. It broke out first on the alley nearest Third street, at the door near the rear.

The firemen could clearly see that the flames were under full headway in the back part of the building, near the elevator. All this while the front was still dark, only a slight escape of smoke from the doors and windows betraying the fierce conflict of the elements within. So the great store stood for fully twenty minutes, a vortex of flame within and a cold and dark exterior. The firemen themselves in their efforts to get their streams to play upon the flames opened the building to currents of air that changed the suppressed fierceness and sent its tongues through the roof and the windows, casting a lurid light on the surrounding scene.

MILLIONS GO UP IN SMOKE.

Fire in San Francisco Destroys Property Worth at Least $2,000,000

The manufacturing district of San Francisco was swept by a fire Thursday night that caused a total loss of at least $2,000,000. Shortly before 6 o'clock a fire broke out in the rear of the San Francisco box factory, located on the corner of Fifth and Bryant streets. The factory was a two-story frame building filled with inflammable material. The flames spread rapidly and it soon became evident that a serious conflagration was threatened. Within a few minutes the entire east end of the block, bounded by Brannan and Bryant streets, was a mass of flames. A strong southerly wind was blowing and it was deemed necessary to turn in another alarm. The flames soon spread all over the block, destroying in a few minutes the yards of the Spring Valley water works and the furniture factory of H. Eueler, the box factory of Korbell Bros. at 723 Bryant street, also the stable of H. Washburn at 657 Bryant street. The carriage factory of G. W. Helan and the soda factory of J. Horstmann were all destroyed in short order.

The high wind which fanned the flames and swept them on drove the firemen back by degrees, and the situation became critical. By 6:45 the whole of the block bounded by Fourth, Fifth, Brannan and Bryant streets was destroyed with the exception of the machine shops on the corner of Fourth and Bryant. At that hour the fire was spreading toward Bluxom street, sweeping on its way the lumber yard of Van Wart on the corner of Fourth and Brannan, the Meehan Lumber Company's yard on Brannan street and various small machine shops and tenements. The intense heat made it difficult to utilize to its full capacity the water supply, which was anything but sufficient, owing to the unusual number of hydrants called into play all over the district. The water tower rendered most efficient service, furnishing a jet of water which could be rendered serviceable where the other streams thrown upon the flames were turned into steam when they had barely left the nozzle. At 8:30 p. m. the entire block bounded by Fourth, Fifth, Bluxom and Brannan streets was a mass of ruins. The fire had reached the Overland Transfer Company's brick freight warehouse and the hardware store of Baker & Hamilton. These brick buildings temporarily checked the flames. The wind was blowing a gale and the sparks were carried for blocks, greatly increasing the spread of the fire.

One death is reported. A Miss Gilroy, while attempting to save some of her belongings, was covered with burning oil and burned to death. A number of people received injuries from the falling walls and the flying timbers. The people in the fire district were terror stricken. Most of them are of the poorer classes and were making great efforts to save their small belongings. Express wagons and drays were at a premium and people were moving a few blocks away from the fire. Probably 100,000 people were gathered at the fire, and the police were powerless to keep them away. The fire was so hot, however, that the unmanageable crowd did not get near enough to be in serious danger.

At a late hour the fire department got the fire under control. The wind shifted to the southwest, driving the flames back over the burned area. Over 100 families have lost their homes and all they possess. A large number of horses were burned in their stables. The change in the wind and the big brick wineries and the railroad offices are what saved the day for the firemen. Probably $2,000,000 will cover the loss. It is nearly total, however, as owing to the dangerous character of the district, insurance rates have been so high as to be almost prohibitory.

ORDER OF GOOD TEMPLARS.

International Supreme Lodge Holds Its Biennial Session in Boston.

The biennial sessions of the international supreme lodge of the Order of Good Templars was held in Boston last week with a large attendance, at least 5,000 delegates being present. The Good Templars organization is by far the largest temperance organization now in existence, having a total membership of 700,000, of whom 450,000 belong to the adult branch of the order. Originating in Oneida County, New York, in 1851, with a band of young men, among whom was ex-Postmaster General James, the movement had a marvelous growth. It has since extended to Africa, Asia and even Australia, where some of the best lodges of the order now exist. At the last international grand lodge, held in Des Moines, there was a spirited contest for the honor of the grand lodge this year between Sydney and Boston. There are now established no less than eighty-five grand lodges, with over 13,000 subordinate lodges and temples, and the international supreme lodge is composed of representatives from these bodies. The rituals have been translated into sixteen different languages, and its strength is shown by a membership of 246,346 adults and 52,747 juveniles in the United States alone, while England, by the last reports, has 297,196 adults and 108,744 members of the juvenile branch, and British North America, a membership of 36,039. Even in frigid Iceland it has secured a foothold, with over twenty lodges.

DR. D. H. MANN.

The pledge of the order is that a member will not take, buy, sell, furnish or cause to be furnished to others as a beverage, any spirituous or malt liquors, wine or cider, and in all honorable ways will discountenance the use thereof in society. The doors of the lodges are open to persons of all races and nationalities, and the members are in effect banded together for mutual protection and co-operation in total abstinence work. The ritual is largely made up from Scriptural texts and has been translated into eleven different languages. The Good Templars' organization was the first of all temperance bodies to recognize woman as fully the equal of man in the work of the order, and there is not the slightest doubt that it is largely due to this that its growth was so immediate and has been so constant.

DR. ORONHYATEKHA

One of the most interesting of all Good Templars is Dr. Oronhyatekha, the Canadian Indian, who for some years was the world's Good Templar, and was succeeded at the last grand lodge by Dr. Delos H. Mann, of Brooklyn, present incumbent of that high office.

BIG EPWORTH LEAGUE SERVICE ABOVE THE CLOUDS.

International Convention at Chattanooga—Sacrament Is Administered to 10,000 People—Greet the Rising Sun with Praise from Old Lookout.

Life of Methodism Discussed.

The second international convention of the Epworth League convened at Chattanooga in the big tent, capable of accommodating ten thousand. The huge tent was crowded at the opening service, and an inspiring song lead by a chorus of 1,000 voices started the great convention. The opening remarks were made by J. A. Patten, representing the Chattanooga committee. Eloquent addresses of welcome were delivered by Mayor George Ochs, representing the city of Chattanooga, and Rev. J. P. McFerrin, representing the Methodism of that city. Fraternal responses were given by Bishop Hendricks of Kansas City, representing the M. E. Church South of that city; Bishop Merrill of Chicago, for the M. E. Church, and Rev. Dr. John Potts of Canada, for the Canadian delegates. Following these speeches the conference was formally turned over to Dr. Steele, chairman of the general committee.

PRESIDENT PATTEN.

CENTENARY M. E. CHURCH, CHATTANOOGA, TENN.

Sacrament to 10,000 People.

At night Bishop I. W. Joyce presided and Bishop Galloway delivered the conference sermon. A feature never before seen in a meeting of this size occurred in the administration of the sacrament of the Lord's supper to fully 10,000 people. At 2 o'clock Friday morning 3,000 to 5,000 of the delegates made a pilgrimage to the top of Lookout Mountain for the purpose of holding a sunrise prayer meeting above the clouds, on the east brow of the mountain directly in front of Lookout Inn. When the sun appeared above the neighboring ranges its rays fell upon the faces of more than 2,500 delegates, who had congregated in front of Lookout Inn to begin the day with prayer. The services were led by Rev. George R. Stewart, who is associated with Sam Jones, the evangelist. Following the prayer service there was a wonderful experience meeting and several of the delegates were so enthused by the fervor of the occasion that they shouted vigorously.

BISHOP MERRILL.

The topic of the day was "Methodism, Its Life and Mode of Expression." The conference assembled at 9:30 o'clock, with Judge Estes, of Memphis, presiding. The great choir led a short service of song, after which the morning topics were taken up in ten minute speeches by the delegates. "Life in the Local Church—Intellectual Duties" was the first subject, by Rev. W. E. Ray, of Macon, Ga. Rev. W. E. McCleman, of Berwyn, Ill., delivered an address along this line, emphasizing the idea of what to read, under the head of "Educational Opportunities."

SEC'Y E. A. SCHELL.

Biggest in the South.

It is declared to have been the largest convention ever held in the South. It was certainly one of the most remarkable in its character as well as in the numbers in attendance. Nearly 12,000 delegates were present. And they came from every part of the country—North and South, East and West. It was an intersectional international convention of the Methodist young people's organizations known as the Epworth Leagues. Whatever be thought of its religious aspects, it was a convention which strikingly signalizes the wonderful change which has come over our country since that "battle in the clouds" on Lookout Mountain thirty-two years ago. As has been well said, sectional and sectarian lines are best obliterated by the feet of those who cross them.

BISHOP FITZGERALD

The Epworth League is an organization started only a few years ago, for the natural development of the religious, educational and social life of young people, and has already over a million members. The convention at Chattanooga was for Methodists North and South alike. From this warm-hearted and enthusiastic mingling of so many representatives from all parts of the country, North and South, as well as East and West, there is reason to expect a very considerable development of the finest sentiment of patriotic fellowship.

Lady Hilda laid her face upon her mother's; she touched the pale brow with her warm, loving lips.

"Mother," she whispered, "I begin to remember you. I love you, and have nothing to forgive."

There was a strange likeness between the two faces—one wearing the pallor of death, the other rich in youth's best beauty.

"Mother," whispered Lady Hilda, "let me send for my husband to see you."

"No, my dear child," said her mother, starting, "that cannot be. I have not come to drag you down to my level, Hilda—to bring shame and disgrace upon you—to humble the pride of those who claim you now. Keep my secret as I have kept it. I only came to see you once more—to hear you call me mother, to kiss your face, and touch with my hand the golden curls I remembered and loved so well. I shall be buried where you can come at times to see my grave, but the story of my life must not be told. Hilda, swear to me that you will never reveal what you now know."

Standing by her mother's deathbed, Lady Hilda Bayneham made a vow to keep her secret faithfully and truly, and never to reveal one word of what had passed.

"You are very beautiful," said Magdalen Hurst, fondly, as her hand lingered on the golden curls; "tell me, are you very happy, darling?—does Lord Bayneham love you very much?"

Hilda told the simple story of her love—told it with sweet, shy blushes that gladdened the weary woman who gazed upon them.

"Has he never asked who your parents were?" she said.

"His mother did," replied Hilda; "but all that seems to be forgotten now."

"Let it be so," said Magdalen Hurst; "no good could come of telling the story, only bitter shame and sorrow to you. I gave you that ring, Hilda, on the day I left you. I meant to keep my word, and never see you again, but I could not. My heart seemed to burn with the thought of you. When I reached England, after that long absence, I took no rest until I had discovered all about Lady Hutton's ward. I heard that Lady Hutton was dead, and that you were married to Lord Bayneham. I had but little money; I walked from London to your home here, and watched for three whole days at the lodge gate until I saw you. The wild rush of joy comes back to me now. I saw a lady with a lovely face and golden hair; my heart gave one bound, then a solemn silence fell over me. It was you, my little Hilda, no longer a child whom I could clasp in my arms, but grown a beautiful, stately lady. When you came near I saw your face was like what mine was when the world called me fair. I longed for one word. You gave me a flower; see, all these months I have kept it. Your sweet eyes smiled on me, your voice pierced my heart, and I wonder now that the joy did not kill me. I have seen you since. I could not leave the place where you lived. I took this room, and two months since I fell ill here. I have waited impatiently for death, knowing that when my last hour came I should ask for you, and you would come."

"How you have loved me, mother!" said Lady Hilda. "Why did you not send for me before?"

"It is better so, darling," said Magdalen. "You might have betrayed the secret if you had known it. Before the sun sets I shall have gone to rest, and no one but you will ever know who sleeps in the nameless grave provided for me. I should like to tell you now of your father. Let me rest my head upon you awhile."

For the last time Lady Hilda pillowed the drooping head upon her arm.

"I loved him," said Magdalen, "all my life; I love him now. All is clear at the hour of death; I understand him at last. I thought he was a hero, Hilda—a grand, noble, brave gentleman; he was simply a handsome, good-natured man. I worshiped him, and he knew it. If he had married some one with sense enough to have seen his faults, and have helped him to mend them, life might have been different to him. He married me for my beauty, Hilda, and I think he loved me. My poor father and mother were proud of my good match. Lady Hutton tried everything in her power to persuade me to break it off. She told me that I should be wretched, and I have been rightly punished, for my answer was that I would sooner be miserable with Stephen Hurst than happy with any one else.

"I need not tell you the story of my married life," she continued; "I need not dwell upon your father's sin. He broke the laws, and met with his punishment. The tragedy of my life began after he left England. His sentence was transportation for ten years. At first he seemed heart-broken, and wrote continually, begging me to join him. I had no money and no friends. Heaven keep you, my child, from ever feeling a grief like mine when Lady Hutton offered me money to go to my husband, if I would leave you with her. I left you. He knows what it cost me. You were three years old then, and lovely as a fairy. I went that long, lonely journey with an aching heart. True, I was going to my husband; but I had left my child. Hilda, at times I used to go crazy with grief; night brought you back to me in my dreams.

"At last I reached the place where my husband was. Many suns have risen and set since then, but the old pain comes back to me as strong and sharp as ever. I had left you for him, but he was not pleased to see me. He had written, pressing me to come, but the very sight of my pale face seemed to vex him. His first question was not of my child or my journey, but what I had done to lose all my beauty. Did I think he should care to show such a wretched, pining, miserable creature as his wife?

"I answered him not a word, Hilda; the life-blood seemed leaving my heart. It was for this I had left you. Yet even then, ungrateful, unkind, and unloving as he was, he was still my hero and my king. It took many years of neglect to lessen my love.

"I need not trouble you, my darling, with the history of those ten years. To me they were one long martyrdom. Surely heaven has kept count of all I suffered.

"The time came when Stephen Hurst was once more a free man; that is eight years since. He was even then handsome, and full of high spirits.

"'Maggie,' he said to me one day, 'Maggie, you must try and work your way back to England. I am going off to the diggings. You cannot accompany me.'

"I implored him to let me go. I promised to work and help him, but all in vain.

"'I cannot be hampered with a woman,' he said, roughly. 'Go back to England. My plans are made. I shall make my fortune at the diggings, and then go home to spend it. If I fail, then I must die there. In either case you would be equally in the way!'

"Then he bade me good-bye, Hilda, and left me alone in that strange land. He took leave of me carelessly and lightly, as though he should return in an hour.

"I remember his handsome face, with its careless smile.

"'Good-bye, Maggie,' he said, lightly; 'we have not had the best of luck. I think our marriage was a mistake, after all; no good has come of it. Get back to England as soon as you can, and make yourself comfortable.'

"Hilda, in my passionate sorrow I prayed to die. What had I done that such heavy woe should fall upon me? I had but a few shillings. I was alone in a strange land; you, my child, were lost to me, and my husband had deserted me. I did what other women do. I fell upon my face, and cried out for death to release me from all sorrow, and lay me to rest."

Magdalen Hurst paused, as though the sorrow so vividly remembered were fresh upon her, and for some few minutes was unable to continue her life's history.

CHAPTER XVIII.

When Magdalen Hurst had sufficiently recovered from the painful remembrances of her past life, she spoke again.

"I lived through it, Hilda," she said; "death had no mercy for me. It took the young, the loved, and happy, but passed me by.

"For nearly six years I worked and saved, so that I might once more return to England. Then came a letter from my husband—a cruel letter; but it had no power to hurt me, for I was long past all pain. He told me his fortune was made, that he had been wonderfully successful in the diggings, and now he was going home to spend his money, and resume the position he had forfeited in marrying me. He said if I applied to his solicitor in London, I should receive a yearly annuity that would keep me from all want or poverty. But I would not touch his money, Hilda—I never answered his letter.

"I paid for my journey home out of my little store of savings. I went direct to London, thinking I might gain some information as to Lady Hutton. There I heard of her death, and your marriage. I could not rest until I had seen you; so I resolved to find my way to Bayneham—to look once more upon your face, and then I was indifferent as to what might come.

"There was some more sorrow in store for me. I was walking down one of those grand side streets in London, where, they told me, the nobles of the land dwell. I saw my husband, looking young, handsome, and dressed as he used to be when I saw him first at Brynmar. He was talking and laughing with three or four gentlemen. Hilda, my whole heart went out to him. I forgot his cruelty, his desertion—he was my lover. I saw no longer the side streets of London—I was in Brynmar woods, and he, with love in his eyes and on his lips, was by my side. Hardly knowing what I did, I cried, 'Stephen! do you not know me?'

"I forgot that my face had lost its beauty—that I was poor, ill-dressed and faded.

"He turned when I uttered his name; a white, savage look came over his face when his eyes fell upon me. He bowed to his friends, and walked hastily away to one of the large, grand mansions near. I followed him, not for money, Hilda—not because he was rich and prosperous—but for love of the handsome face that had once smiled into mine; for love of him who had once loved me.

"I followed him up the broad flight of steps; the hall door opened, and I stood upon the threshold.

"'Stephen,' I said, 'speak to me only one word, and I will never trouble you again.'

"For an answer, he called with a loud voice, and a man servant came at his summons.

"'John,' said he to him, 'look at this woman, that you may remember her. She is an impostor who annoys me. If she comes here again shut the door in her face, or call a policeman to eject her.'

"His eyes glistened as he spoke; there was a hard, cold, cruel look upon his face, that hurt me even more than his words. He neither spoke nor looked at me, and I have never seen him since. I turned with trembling steps from my husband's magnificent home. I do not remember how time passed. I asked a servant who came from the house the name of its master.

"'Mr. Fulton,' he replied; and then I knew that Stephen Hurst had changed his name.

"My husband judged me rightly, Hilda. He knew I should never claim through law or justice what he did not give me from love. I could have taken revenge; I could have covered his name with infamy; I might have stricken the smiles from his handsome face, and have held him up to scorn and shame; I might have done these things had I not loved him! Even then I would have laid down my life to serve and save him."

The faint voice grew still weaker, and Lady Hilda, caressing the white, beautiful face, prayed her to rest.

"I have little more to say, my darling," replied Magdalen Hurst. "I must give you one warning. Your father would like to discover you now. He knows you were adopted by a wealthy lady. He knows Lady Hutton was my friend. If he should hear that you were her ward, and see your face, so like mine in its youth, he will claim you as his child. Avoid all chances of meeting him if you can. I have heard that a new and strange gift of foresight comes to the dying. It has come to me, and I see trouble for you, my darling, from his hand."

"I must bear it, mother, patiently, as you have done," said Lady Hilda. Then there fell upon them a deep and solemn silence. Death was drawing near; his awful shadow cast an ashen pallor on the face of Magdalen Hurst, and dimmed the light of her eyes.

"Hilda, darling," she whispered, "if there should come to you, as there has come to me, a wonder why I should have suffered—I, so young, so innocent, so unconscious of all wrong—promise me to remember that all those things which puzzle us here will be set right in another world. I shall soon know why my life has been so sad and sorrowful."

As the shadow fell more deeply and darkly, the golden head of the young girl lay near where her mother's hand could touch the loved face. Lady Hilda was not frightened; she had seen death once before, and knew its power. All fear, all thought, was lost in the one great knowledge that she was with her own mother at last.

Hour after hour passed, and the shadow deepened; there were no more words, for Magdalen Hurst's strength had failed her. Until sight and hearing were closed for this world, her eyes were fixed upon the face of her child, and she listened to every word that fell from those pure young lips. But when the grim presence stood by her, she made one great effort.

"If ever you should meet him, Hilda," she murmured, "tell him I forgave him, and loved him and blessed him as I died."

And then the aching, wearied heart was at rest. Death left strange beauty on the white face; the closed lips wore a smile as of one who had found peace. Warm tears fell from Lady Hilda's eyes as she crossed the white hands over the quiet breast, and smoothed the long veil of golden hair from the white brow.

"Good-bye, mother," she said, pressing her warm lips on the cold, dead face; "Good-bye. You were lost to me in life, and found in death. You will sleep well until I join you."

Mrs. Paine came up when she heard the sick woman had ceased to suffer.

"I am glad she sent for me," said Lady Hilda, in a cold, calm voice, that startled her as she spoke; "she nursed me years ago, and I am her only friend."

Mrs. Paine saw nothing peculiar in that, but she wondered why Lady Hilda shuddered when strange hands began to touch the lifeless form.

"Let some one come and stay with you," she said; "I will arrange all the payments. Let the funeral take place on Tuesday, and let her be buried in the church yard at Oulston. You can attend to it, I presume?"

Mrs. Paine was eloquent in her protestations.

"She has lodged with me for many months," she said, "but I do not know her name. What shall I say when I ask for the papers?"

A crimson flush covered Lady Hilda's face. Was she, her beautiful, deeply-wronged mother, to lie in a nameless grave? No, it could not be; a plain stone might mark her grave, but those papers should bear no false name, let come what might.

"Her name was Magdalen Hurst," she replied, with quivering lips.

Lady Hilda knew it would not be possible for her to return to the cottage, if her vow and her secret were to be kept. She bent once more over the quiet, dead face, and kissed the smiling, cold lips. She looked her last at the mother she had known only in her dreams and in death; then she went out, leaving the dead alone. In the same cold, tearless voice she gave her final orders to Mrs. Paine.

"Let the funeral take place at two o'clock on Tuesday afternoon," she said. "I will see you again when it is all over."

Like one in a dream, she left the cottage where her dead mother lay.

It was then nearly eleven; she had to walk home and prepare to meet her husband. There was no time to lose; she went through the park with rapid steps. All was silent in the castle; the servants were busy, but none of the guests seemed to have left their rooms. She reached her own apartment unnoticed. When she stood there, with the same dream-like feeling of unreality, there came to her mind strange, solemn words she had read, and had never understood before: "The sins of the father shall be visited upon the children, even to the third and fourth generation."

Good for the Rabbit.

A rabbit is so extremely sensitive and nervous an animal that it has been killed without being hit at all, as many hunters know. The concussion of the near discharge of a gun, the shock caused by the animal's skin being merely grazed by a shot, or some such circumstance, may frighten the susceptible creature to death. A story based on this peculiarity of the rabbit is related by a gentleman who does not pretend to be a mighty hunter.

This gentleman had been invited to go on a hunt with several city companions, and accepted, feeling confident that, since he remembered killing several squirrels and partridges when he was a boy, he could no doubt do as well in the ripeness of his age.

However, when he reached the woods, some faculty which he possessed when a boy must have deserted him, for he could see very little game, and could hit nothing that he did see.

But near the end of the day he came upon a superb rabbit in a wood path. He whistled, and the animal sat up a couple of rods distant and looked at him, all ears.

The hunter blazed away, and had the satisfaction of seeing the rabbit make a convulsive leap and fall to the ground.

The delighted sportsman immediately seized the rabbit and thrust him into his hunting-bag. Soon after all the members of the party reassembled at the railroad station on their way back to town.

One exhibited half a dozen partridges, another had eight. All seemed to have had excellent luck.

"Well, what have you got, John?" the man of the rabbit was asked.

"Not much," said he, "but what I have is a beauty. Just look here."

He opened his hunting-bag and was about to pull out the rabbit, when the animal itself leaped out, very much alive, landed on the station platform, bounded off with a great leap, crossed the track and ran like the wind across a field opposite and into the woods, while the hunter's companions roared with laughter.

For all the man knows, the rabbit is running still. The creature had probably been only stunned by the scratch of a shot from the gun, and had recovered its liveliness in the bag.

Mementos of a Terrible Crime.

Since the assassination of M. Carnot the cutler of Cette who sold the dagger to the murderer has, it is said, been inundated with orders for weapons of similar pattern and size to that used on the fatal night at Lyons. The orders come from France and from abroad, somebody in Brussels having asked for 300 daggers. During the month following the assassination the cutler dispatched over 1,000 of these articles to various places, and he is on the road to realize a small fortune out of the extraordinary craze manifested by his customers, French and foreign. Some of these people intend to exhibit the blades in their shops or taverns, while others are collectors of curiosities, who want to possess some memento of a terrible crime.

Cycling Watch.

A proposed novelty is a cycling watch with a good-sized dial fixed to the handle bar. The rider is thus enabled to regulate his pace without constantly dragging out his own timepiece from the depth of his breast pocket.

Benjamin Harrison was a close student, and had all the advantages of a liberal education.

BIGGEST OF ITS KIND.

PARIS EXPOSITION OF 1900 TO BE A MONSTER.

Definite Plans Have Been Decided Upon—Cost Will Be $20,000,000 and It Will Be the Greatest Thing in World's Fairs Ever Attempted.

Both Sides of the Seine.

The French Government has now decided on a definite plan for the great exposition of 1900. After spending more than a year in examining the multitude of designs submitted the directors have chosen the plan of M. Bouvard. This gentleman is one of the foremost architects in France and has had considerable experience in this line of work. He is the chief director of the Bureau of Architecture in Paris. The plan is on a far more heroic scale than originally intended and entail the demolishing of the Palais de l'Industrie and the entire transformation of present Machinery Hall. The Eiffel Tower as well as the Trocadero will remain intact with the exception of a few minor changes.

BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF THE PARIS EXPOSITION AS IT WILL APPEAR. [From the New York Herald.]

The grounds of the 1900 Exposition will embrace four grand sections or divisions which while most ingeniously united will nevertheless be distinctly individual. The palace and its accessory buildings of Champs Elysees, together with the esplanade des Invalides, will constitute the domain given to sculpture, painting and art in its higher branches generally. One of the banks of the River Seine has been reserved for the exhibit of the City of Paris and the other will be occupied by the various buildings of the foreign nations. The Trocadero with its subordinate buildings will take care of the exhibits of the French colonies and protectorates. The entire Champ de Mars has been reserved exclusively for the industrial exhibits which are expected to rival anything ever exhibited in this line.

The principal public entrance will be placed at Cours la Reine, near the Place de la Concorde, while the entrance of honor will be found at the upper end of the Avenue Marigny. This is the most central and superb avenue in the Champs Elysees, giving in perspective the grand dome of Mansart and crossing the Seine by a magnificent bridge 197 feet wide.

The Only Permanent Feature.

Entering the gate of honor the visitor will find on his right the Palace of the Beaux Arts and on the left the Exposition Palace containing the retrospective of French art. These two edifices, together with the monumental bridge, will be the only permanent feature of note which will remain after the Exposition. The buildings as well as the bridge will be masterpieces of architectural skill, built as monuments of the art of the nineteenth century. The bridge will be a single span of cast steel, 197 feet wide, with splendid porticos of lace work of wrought iron in the most intricate pattern.

OFFICIAL PLAN OF THE PARIS EXPOSITION OF 1900.

On the esplanade will be a series of palaces devoted to the decorative arts. The portion of the River Seine between the bridges d'Jena and des Invalides has received particular attention from M. Bouvard, who with his assistants expects to transform it into an exact counterpart of the grand canal of Venice. The entire length of the river banks will be made a fairy world of beauty, and will be principally given up to promenades with the of course indispensable places for rest and refreshment. On the right bank of the river, near the bridge d'Alma, will be found the palaces of the City of Paris, the palace of horticulture, with its vast conservatories, the palace of social economy, and the Congressional building. These buildings will be archaeological, historical reproductions, and above all artistic in their grouping, as well as in their exteriors. The palace and pavilions of the army of land and of sea, as well as the merchant marine, will be constructed on the left bank of the River Seine. Here will also be found the buildings of forestry, fishery, sports and their minor branches.

Electricity and Water Palaces.

One of the most conspicuous objects of the Exposition will be the building devoted to electricity. It will be a palace of glass, looking at night like a gigantic lighthouse. It will be in proximity to the Water Palace and these two buildings are probably to be the "clou" of the great show. The present Machinery Hall will be totally changed, both in its architectural aspect as well as in its use. The center of this vast place will contain a grand hall to be used for festal gatherings, while the wings will be reserved for agricultural exhibits.

The directors have under consideration a most elaborate system of transportation, which will prevent congestion of travel at any point. There will be elevated, surface and subterranean roads of every possible description and propelled by all known and many new means of locomotion.

The expenses are closely estimated and will probably be more than 100,000,000 francs ($20,000,000). Of this sum has been allotted 8,000,000 francs for payment of the officers, workmen and attendants of all kinds. Seventy-three million francs is to be spent on buildings. Twelve millions is to be spent for beautifying the grounds and seven millions is put aside as a reserve fund. Not less than 800 different projects and plans have been considered during the last year before the one shown in the accompanying cut was adopted. And an equal number have been presented, though not in any way considered, as they were all too fantastic or otherwise impracticable. The Parisians are determined to give to the world the greatest exposition that has yet been achieved by man.

Entered His Complaint.

"Am dis de place whar' dey complain?" asked a middle-aged colored man as he entered detective headquarters the other evening.

"Yes, if they don't complain too loudly," was the answer.

"Den, sah," continued the visitor, dropping his voice almost to a whisper, "I wish to complain dat my clothes-line was robbed last night. Yes, sah, while we slumbered somebody dun come along an' robbed dat clothes-line in de moas' discontented fashun."

"Have you a list of the stolen articles?"

"I has, sah. It was one white shirt, sah—de only white shirt dat I possessed in all dis world. While we was locked in de embrace of Morferous some villainous pusson dun climbed de fence an' bore dat shirt away."

"Just a shirt, eh?"

"Jess a shirt, sah."

"That wasn't such a great loss."

"No, sah, not sich a great loss, but look at de principle of de thing, sah. If a hilarious villain am permitted to dislocate a white shirt from a clothes-line with impecuniosity, what guarantee hev we got dat the same pusson won't return an' abominate de entire Monday washin' an' like 'nuff plunder de domicile to boot? I hain't lookin' at de shirt, sah, but at de immorality of 'lowin' an unhung scoundrel to take advantage of de auspishus occasion!"—Detroit Free Press.

The Contented Javans.

The people live a great deal in public, and the poorer classes, instead of eating their meals at home, as in the manner of the unsociable Hindu, seem usually to breakfast and dine at one of the itinerant cookshops to be found at every street corner. More exclusive people may be seen buying the small packets of curry and rice wrapped in fresh plantain leaves, and pinned with bamboo splinters, which are intended for home consumption.

To stroll down a village street and watch the culinary operations in progress at wayside eating shops was an unfailing source of amusement—and very clean and appetizing they looked, though the smell was occasionally somewhat trying to the European nose. The Javans, like all rice-eating people, are fond of pungent and evil-smelling sauces, and equivalents of the Burman guapee and Japanese bean soy are in constant requisition.

The natives, and especially the children, look fat and healthy, and appear to enjoy life under easy conditions, though they are, generally speaking, of grave demeanor and not endowed with the unfailing vivacity which distinguishes the Burmans and Japanese.

PHILOSOPHY OF A ROUGH MAN.

He Has Discovered that Any Calling Is Tiresome to Those Who Follow It.

He was a poorly dressed and rough in appearance man, but, nevertheless, he was something of a philosopher. He was plodding along Ashland avenue, near 60th street, when a young man overtook him and made some inquiries as to a street in that part of the city. The street was about half a mile away, so they continued to tramp along the rough wooden sidewalk together.

"'Tain't so long ago," said the rough man, finally, making a motion toward a brick pile near the street, "since I used to pile them things for a living."

"Hard work, I should think," suggested the young man for want of something better to say.

"That's what it is."

"And monotonous."

"What?"

"I say it must be monotonous—tiresome."

"Oh, sure." Then, after a pause: "So's everything else."

"Oh, there is variety in some things," protested the young man.

"If a feller doesn't have to do 'em, there is," returned the other, "but I guess any business is tiresome to the feller that has got to 'tend to it right along. I knowed a feller that worked in a store—reg'lar hours, reg'lar work and all that. But he got tired of it. He wanted variety, he said—wanted to travel and have a change all the time. He got the chance and grabbed it quick. He was sent here and there and was on marching orders most of the time—lots of excitement and change, but he got tired of it. Actually kicked to get back at a desk again, 'cause he said traveling was so blamed monotonous and tiresome and he wanted a change. Same way with everybody, I guess. Piling bricks is mighty hard and tiresome, and I'm doing better now, but sometimes I feel 's if I like to pile bricks again just for a change. There ain't anything that ain't tiresome to the feller that's got to do it every day. What's ambition but a hankering for a change, anyway. The only diff'rence between people is that some of 'em want a change so bad that they'll go backward to get it, while the others have sense enough to swear and kick, but hang on till they can get it goin' forward."—Chicago Times-Herald.

What to Teach Our Girls.

Let us teach the girl that her education is not thrown away if she should choose to settle quietly down after graduation to be the guide of a home circle. She may be a greater benefactor than one who becomes famous through scientific discovery. The study and practical care of the needs and comforts of a home and the education of children is the highest and grandest opportunity yet afforded to woman.

The world may take care of itself, but the home cannot. Let the girl grow naturally, as we do the boy, and give her the benefit of the broadening influence of public spirit and responsibility. Let her have a share in all these widening circles of duty in the home and then we shall see her reaching the highest type of womanhood, competent to meet any demands that may be made upon her.

Wise in Their Day.

The people of Florida, being unprepared for frost and snow, have suffered much inconvenience from the unusually cold weather. Where the inhabitants expect severe extremes of weather they know how to meet them, and how to adapt themselves to circumstances. We at the North have every convenience for heating our houses, we are provided with suitable clothing but those in Florida are prepared only for moderate weather. The Japanese have a good plan. They do not change from light to heavy clothing, or the reverse, but have several coats made, and wear one, two or three of them according to the temperature. They speak of the degrees of cold as "a one-coat day," "a two-coat day," and so on.

On the Wall of Pasteur's Laboratory

Pasteur is the most distinguished graduate of the Paris Ecole Normale, which has just celebrated its hundredth anniversary. In commemoration of the event a tablet of black marble has been placed on the wall of his laboratory in the old Rue d'Ulm, now Rue Pasteur, inscribed: "Here stood Pasteur's laboratory, 1857 (fermentations), 1860 (spontaneous generation), 1865, (disease of wines and beers), 1888 (silkworm distempers), 1881 (virus and vaccine), 1864-1888 (hydrophobia remedies)." Above is a medallion with the letters L. P. interlaced.

THE AUBURN COURIER.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, post-office as second-class matter.

THURSDAY,.....JUNE 27, 1895.

MRS. CORBETT, wife of the prize fighter, is seeking a divorce. Sensible woman.

CHICAGO is going to put in two more tunnels into the lake and cribs, in order to have a still bigger supply of water.

J. B. CHEADLE, a former member of congress from this state, has a new idea about silver. He says it cannot be demonetized because the constitution provides that both gold and silver shall be legal tender. He is even rash enough to quote the part of the constitution that refers to this. But he should notice, that the constitution merely "prohibits the states from making anything legal except gold and silver", and reserves to congress the right to coin money of gold and silver, but does not say that gold and silver must be so coined and made legal tender. Congress is given the power to do so if it wants to.

NEW LAWS.

Gov. Mathews issued his proclamation yesterday and all the new laws are now in force. The Governor says the certificates from all the counties, stating that each had received the new laws, were all in as that is the only way he can know that all have been received. As a matter of fact the new laws must go into effect on the day the last county clerk receives his laws and files in his office a statement to that effect. In this case, the last officer was the clerk of the court of Noble county, at Albion. He filed Friday, June 28, and so that is the day all the new laws went into effect. In his proclamation, however, the Governor excepts the bill which was not filed with the Secretary of state on account of the fight at the close of the of the legislature. This bill is the one that related to a change in the custodian who takes care or the State House. The governor ignored the secretary of state, as he had reason to believe the latter would not sign the proclamation because it went back on the "Custodian" law. It is not certain that the signature of the secretary is necessary, but as it has heretofore been the custom, an effort should, in our judgment, have been made to get him to sign it. Among the new laws is the Nicholson bill to regulate the sale of liquors, and the law to prevent the sale of obscene newspapers like the Kansas City Sun. The act was intended to reach the publishers of several weekly publications, some printed in the state, others out of it. In several places in the state the authorities have been making a fight against objectionable publications. This will be a good law, if it is enforced. We are glad to be able to say that the late Assembly made any good laws, as they are the exception.

OBITUARY.

James Dreggoo was born near Hayesville Ohio, Aug. 5, 1817, and died at Auburn Ind., June 30, 1895, at the age of 77 years 10 month and 25 days.

He first came to Indiana in 1837, taking land in Jackson and Concord townships. Returning to Ohio, he was married August 1838 to Zeruiah Johnson. Coming with his wife to Indiana, they settled on a farm in Concord township, and with the exception of a short residence in Auburn, they continued to reside on the farm until after she died in 1873. In 1874 he was again married to Mrs Hannah Cadwallader, nee Ferrall and they removed to Auburn in 1874, where they have since continuously resided.

Of this marriage there were born four children, all of whom died in infancy, except one son Harry who still survives. From early manhood throughout entire life his business career was marked with success. With habits of industry, thrift and economy in the conduct of business with sagacity and integrity, he acquired the confidence of the people, in his engagements and was eminently successful in the accumulation of property.

He was a man of strong character and, has left an impression on the community in which he resided for upwards of 50 years. A man of quick and tender sympathies and of strong attachments, he did not cherish deep or lasting resentments. A kind and friendly word was sufficient to evoke a kind, cordial, and generous response. To any who might be suffering from misfortune and bereavement, he was one of the foremost in extending the consolations of sympathy and friendship. In all of the domestic relations of son, brother, husband and father he was indulgent, and cherished strong attachments not merely to those who were akin to him but also to those who stood to him in the relation of adopted children. For he had reared as his own children one son and four daughters, by whom his loss is sincerely mourned, as well as by his own surviving son, and by the partner of his bosom who walked hand in hand by his side so many years, who ministered to him in sickness and whose devotion and the devotion of his children in the last solemn hours relieved death of many of its terrors. Though not an active professor he was a believer in the principles and teachings of Christianity and made renewed expressions of his belief during the last months of his life. The funeral was held at the M. E. church, Tuesday July 2nd at 2 p. m. conducted by Rev. J. K. Waits, Interment in Evergreen cemetery.

BOARD OF EQUALIZATION

The board of Equalization and Review is in session every day, and people who are not satisfied with their assessment should call on them. After the session is over it will be too late to bring in complaints. It will close its labor July 6.

JUMPED THEIR BOARD.

Last evening, as the novelists say "five solitary footmen might have been seen," grip in hand, sneaking out of the Hollister House, whose hospitable walls had sheltered them for about a week. They would have succeeded in getting away unseen, had not Mrs. Hollister discovered them by accident, as Mr. Hollister is absent on a visit to the old home in Ohio. Mrs. H. at once dispatched the clerk, M. D. Triplett, to procure the assistance of Marshal West, for the time was short, there being only 35 minutes before they would get their train, and a $26 board bill is no trifling matter. Had the marshal been like policemen in general, he would have been found next week. But he was found at once. He ran down to Judge McClellan's office, and found there, the Judge in consultation with a man from Garrett who was in the sheriff's hands, to be sent to jail because he could not pay a debt. Only 30 minutes now remained to get to the elopers nearly two miles away. Mrs. Hollister, Mr. Benedict and Justice Walborn were hurried to the scene. Conveyances to the Junction had to be secured, a complaint, affidavit, bond and writ of attachment had to be prepared, and all this time the Wabash train was approaching at the rate of 40 miles an hour and the goods would be carried away. The papers were ready just as George Dunn stepped into the office. His buggy was close by and he volunteered to take the officer down to the Junction. The marshal climbed in, and at a fire engine gait, away they went after the fugitive ballooners. Mr. Benedict bestrode his faithful bicycle and followed to see fair play. As the cavalcade went sailing down the Avenue, a carriage accompanied by two dogs was in Mr. Benedict's way, but he had to pass. He started around them, the dog got in the way and Benedict's wheel struck them, and they went floundering into the ditch at the roadside. The whistle of the approaching train was heard, on they all went and arrived at the train just in time to see it starting off. The ballooners had skipped out, but the goat and some sachels were "attached" and brought back to town. As the train started out Mr. Dunn's horse was scared and it broke loose and started for town at a breakneck speed. Up the Avenue it flew, to VanBuren street, then up that to Eleventh, then to Main, then up Main to Ninth street and here it at once started in to clean out the row of teams hitched at the south of the public square. The first one he met, he knocked out on the first round. Then he grappled the second, they clinched, the buggies became attached together and they waltzed around on the street to the music of the minstrel that was helping out the medicine fakir at the north side. Becoming dizzy with their gyrating waltz, they started toward McClellan's office to report progress. They met with resistance and turned east, headed for "Boiler Avenue." In the meantime the first horse attacked had recovered and started toward the COURIER office to report the fracas, but was stopped by a COURIER reporter on his way to the scene. By this time all the excited horses were secured. But little damage was done, and no one was hurt. About this time the Marshal appeared, with the goat and the sachels, and the boarders at the Hollister House may now, like Robinson Crusoe, be served with goat milk and tenderloin. This morning "Thompson with a p" disappeared, the last of the balloonists has gone and white-winged peace hovers over "Sweet Auburn."

FIRST WHEAT.

A letter from Geo. Picker at Coffeyville Kansas, to his brother, Charles, alluding to the first wheat sold there will be of interest. He says:

"Well, I shipped one car new wheat to St. Louis this year, the earliest car of wheat ever received there. It was bid off by a Toledo firm at 90 cents a bushel. Then they took 200 envelopes filled with that wheat, marked them, "Threshed by Geo. H. Picker, Coffeyville, Kansas, June 6, 1895. Sold to Davis & Co., H. Scott, Kansas," and they sent these envelopes to commission men all over the country. I cut the wheat May 27 to 30. So that wheat was advertised all over the country. I got 90 cents per bushel for 426 bushel, $383,40. I left home in the morning and the wheat was then in the shock. When I came back in the evening I had a bank account and a straw stack. The hands and machine were gone at 2 p. m. Our wheat is threshed and gone, and our neighbors' all in the field. Now it rains so much they cannot stack." We add a clipping from the Coffeyville Journal:

FIRST CAR OF NEW WHEAT

The first load of Kansas new wheat appeared on our streets to-day and seemed to be quite an attraction to the crowd who gathered around the wagon. The wheat was raised by Geo. H. Picker our veteran brick layer who is also a substantial farmer living four miles northeast of the city. This wheat is dry and in good condition. It is the "Gold Drop" an early variety of soft wheat, and was raised on an upland farm. The wheat while not a large berry is very fair color and upon being weighed in a new Fairbanks tester, it was found to test strong 61 lbs per measured bushel. A most excellent job of threshing was done on this wheat, by the progressive threshing firm on Mahan & Crum who operate several good threshing machines. The wheat looks as clean as it might be made running over a dozen cleaners. This wheat was bought by H. L. Strong, manager for the enterprising and progressive grain firm of Davis & Co., and is being loaded to-day on the M. K. & T. and will be shipped this evening by special fast freight to St. Louis. This will be quite an advertisement for Coffeyville as well as the state of Kansas, also for Davis & Co, as being successful in securing the first car of new wheat.

BUTLER.

The Fourth promises to be a tame affair as far as Butler is concerned.

Jerry Barbers new residence on East North street perceptably approaches completion.

Our water works prove a blessing of great value during the dry weather.

M. F. Campbell, who has been confined at Hope Hospital, Ft. Wayne, for seven weeks with an affection of the neck, has so far recoved to be able to come home.

J. A. Campbell, wife and Florence, are spending the Fourth in Chicago.

The band had a concert by themselves in the woods east of town, Sabbath. Their silvery notes awakened the echoes, not in the woods only, but in the surrounding farmsides. They were soon surrounded by a crowd of men, women and children, who hastened to the scene, thinking some mistake had been made in the almanac, and the Fourth of July had come ahead of time.

Died, at his late residence in Butler, June 27, Joseph Beck in the 69 h year of his age. The deceased was born in Lancaster county, Pa., Jan. 18, 1826, where he grew to early manhood and received a common school education. He removed with his parents to Wayne Co., O., in the early 40's. At Marshallsville, in this county, on Oct. 25, 1848, he was united in marriage with Susannah Smith, and in 1854, with his wife and one child moved to Defiance county, O. The place proving very sickly, they moved to this county, buying a small piece of land at Kepler's corners, on the Butler and Hamilton road, where Mr. Beck conducted a small grocery. His trade having been that of a blacksmith, but his health failing, had compelled him to seek other employment soon after this he moved to Butler and continued in the grocery trade, until about sixteen years ago, he traded his property to Fred Oberlin, and moved to a farm about two miles northwest of his former home in Franklin township, where he lived two years, and again moved to Butler and remained until his death. Their family consisted of eight children, three boys and five girls. One son, three daughters and the aged wife remain. His funeral took place from the Lutheran church, June 30, Rev. Dustan officiating. His remains were interred in the Hamilton cemetery. Mr. Beck, though not connected with any church, was an excellent citizen, honest in all his dealing, a good neighbor, kind husband and father and was always ready to show hospitality to all worthy of it. In his death our city loses one of its good inhabitants, his vicinity a good neighbor, his family their mainstay in life.

COBURNA ITEMS.

Peter Graham has made quite an improvement on his property by putting kown a substantial sidewalk.

Mrs. Malvina Cremean of Elida, Ohio, is visiting with her son Allan Cremean and family.

Mrs. Blanche Cox of Garrett was the guest of her mother, Mrs. Libbie Reed last week.

Al Reincehl made his last trip with Uncle Sam's Mail Bag last Saturday. Although a very lucrative job, he gladly turned it over to his successor.

Charley Tompkins and Miss Lotta Zwilling of Waterloo were married last Thursday evening, and are spending their honeymoon in Alpena, Mich. On their return we understand that they will settle down to housekeeping in the property lately vacated by Milo Thomas.

Prof. G. A. Dawson and son of Ft. Wayne visited with the family of A. H. Trumbull last week.

Rev. and Mrs. Sumwalt, of Orland, visited Mrs. S's mother Thursday and Friday.

Whenever Charley Thompkins makes up his mind to sell a buggy, you can depend on it that he is going to do it or bust a hamestring trying. He stuck to a fellow like a tick until 11 o'clock one night last week and sold him a buggy "jist the same."

Minnie Thomas is home again after a visit with relatives and friends in South Bend.

We would perhaps have celebrated the Fourth in grand style in Corunna if we would have had some one to orate for us and pull the tail feathers of the proud bird of freedom, just enough to make him scream a little. But we lacked those necessary prersequsites and consequently we didn't celebrate.

If some of Bliss' DeKalb county populist admirers could have seen him at the Maxenkuckee editorial meeting posing as the best democrat there, they would have wondered if he was the same man who pulled the wool over their eyes "for revenue" all over this county, abusing in speeches and in his paper the corrupt and plutocratic old parties. We gave the populists some friendly talk at the time they were paying out their hard earned dollars, but they gave it little heed.

Monday's Daily

The Idea still wins.

J D. Lahnum is here on a visit together with his wife and child. Mrs. L came down on Thursday and he joined her Sunday morning. He will remain about a week, but she will stay longer. Both have many warm friends here. They bring word that Sam Buse is working at his trade this year. Ollie is still clerking in a big drug store and Truman is employed at Revell's where Mr. Lahnum has been so long. All are doing well.

M. Shoudel and sisters Annie and Mary Shoudel and Lena and Gertrude Schiffley all of Jackson township were guests Sunday of Mr. and Mrs. Noirot, north of Mooresville. They had a very pleasant time, being served with ice cream, cake, etc. There was also plenty of good music.

Mrs. H. P. Stroh and Frank Pommert returned today from a six weeks visit with friends in Kansas. They report a pleasant time.

Several town lads were playing on the grass in the south part of town this forenoon, and with them was Hank Little's bull dog. Lou Gauley, a lame boy, was lying on the grass with them, and when he went to get up, being nearly helpless, in his struggle to get up, he scared the dog or possibly stepped on the dog's tail, which jumped at him, and finally bit him severely on the left arm and on his foot. He was picked up by the other boys and brought up to Dr. Nusbaum who dressed his hurts, but he will suffer considerable before he is well again. Just why anyone wants to keep a savage dog, here in town, where there is little or no use for any dog, is a mystery. And half of these worthless curs never appear on the assessor's books.

Sunday Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Romine of Allen county drove up to Auburn to visit Mr. Romine's parents who live in Stamets' addition. As they were getting ready to go home in the evening, the buggy was driven in front of the house and Mr. and Mrs. Romine with their little baby got in the buggy. The top however was laid down and they raised it, but in doing so it made some noise and frightened one of the horses. The horse began to rear up and Mrs. Romine thoughtfully passed the baby from the rear of the carriage to its grandmother who was standing on the ground, and Mrs. Romine also made her escape at the rear. They were scarcely out of the carriage when the horses fell down upon the tongue breaking it and doing considerable other damage. Mr. Romine remained in the buggy but was not hurt. The accident was a very frightful one and will be long remembered by Mr. and Mrs. Romine. After securing a new tongue for the carriage they left for their home.

Mrs. Henry Lockwood, while preparing dinner to-day, at her home on South Jackson street, happened to strike her knee against the cook stove with such force as to throw her to the floor. Either the stove or the floor, forced the knee capout of place Dr. F. M. Hines was called, and replaced it, though the operation was very painful for a short one. The lady is doing well. Mr. Lockwood's daughter, was so excited by the suffering of her stepmother, that she fainted, and altogether there was quite an excitement.

The ascensions here Saturday evening were fine. As noted in the DAILY of that date, the one in the forenoon, was only enjoyed by the goat, the men remained on "terra firma." But in the evening two balloons went up, each with its man attached. At a proper heighth, the men cut loose and came down with their parachutes, descending very gracefully. One came down against the Glazier House, and the other not far from where they started near the Benedict repair shop. As far as the ascensions went people were satisfied. But there was some trouble between them and the advertisere, as it was claimed the balloon men had not done as they agreed.

The balloon men came in to day, and showed us that "Prof. Love," had nothing to do with the matter we had in Saturday's paper. We got all the parties together and found this true. The man to blame for the whole trouble had carried to us the idea that he owned the whole thing and the rest of the earth, But it turns out his name is not Love, but Thompson, "Thompron with a p," and that is what is probably the matter, The others seem to be decent men, but Thompson, etc., etc., will keep them in hot water if they don't get rid of him He had his face ornamented with court plaster, the result of a saloon fight Saturday evening.

Tuesday's Daily.

Bert Spitler of the COURIER force, returned to day from Allen county, where he was called by the sickness of his grandfather. He reports him somewhat improved, though still quite low.

The Misses Jennie and Lou. Patterson, of Waterloo were in town to-day calling on friends including the family of their former pastor, Rev. J. K. Walts.

B. C. Lewis and wife, of Albion, came over here last evening to call on his brother, James Lewis of this place. They came "awheel," and as the reporter came up town at seven this morning, he met them at the corner of Main and Seventh, escorted by "Jim" also on his wheel. There was no stop of the two steel horses, as the plucky couple said "Good by" and went west and out in the open country on their 22 mile spin for home. The lady showed herself a match for her husband, for as they went out of sight she was even with him.

Yesterday afternoon Morris Widney started to drive over to Garrett to take part in a rehersel there. Just as he was approaching Levi Bovee's residence his horse became frightened at Mrs. Bovee dusting a carpet, she heard him talking to his horse and looking around saw that it was frightened and dropping the carpet called for her husband. By this time the horse had the buggy upset and was dragging Mr. Widney. He finally managed to regain his feet and caught the horse by the bitts and with the assistance of Mr. Bovee managed to quiet the horse. The buggy was quite badly damaged but Mr. Widney escaped with only a slight sprain of the ankle. He was quite badly scared as well as Mrs. Bovee who thought she would probably be the cause of killing a man. She says this will learn her a lesson.

THE KING SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

Reader, did you ever take SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR, the "KING OF LIVER MEDICINES?" Everybody needs take a liver remedy. It is a sluggish or diseased liver that impairs digestion and causes constipation, when the waste that should be carried off remains in the body and poisons the whole system. That dull, heavy feeling is due to a torpid liver. Biliousness, Headache, Malaria and Indigestion are all liver diseases. Keep the liver active by an occasional dose of Simmons Liver Regulator and you'll get rid of these troubles, and give tone to the whole system. For a laxative Simmons Liver Regulator is BETTER THAN PILLS. It does not gripe, nor weaken, but greatly refreshes and strengthens.

Every package has the Red Z stamp on the wrapper. J. H. Zeilin & Co., Philadelphia.

THE GREATEST VALUE.

You get the greatest value out of a silver quarter when purchasing a package of Simmons Liver Regulator, powder. There is nothing like it for Indigestion or Constipation. Take it dry, on the tongue, or make a tea. You'll afterwards take it in preference to pills.

The first ballon ascension which was made this forenoon was a success so far as the balloon is concerned but it seems too much like cruelty to animals to attach the goat to the parachute. The goat went up however, this morning and came down all sound as a dollar and only drifted about five hundred feet south-east of from where it started. The balloon came down in the alley south of Abe Mader's house and not more than two hundred feet south of the place it started from. The balloon was handsomely decorated with advertisements.

An evidence of the growing prosperity of Northern Indiana can be found in the increase of postal receipts and the consequent increase of postmasters' salaries. Among the towns favored with an increase are as follows: Ligonier from $1500 to $1600; Albion, $1100 to $1200; Kendallville, $1800 to $1900; Garrett, $1200 to $1300; Butler, $1300 to $1400; Kappanee, $1100 to $1200; Warsaw $1,800 to $1900 and so on along the list. Waterloo, Auburn and other towns show no increase while enough decrease is shown to warrant a cut in salaries at Columbia City, $1900 to $1800; LaGrange $1300 to $1400.—Ex.

From the way wooden schooners have been sinking fine steel steamers on the great lakes the United States Government should take off a few plates from the ram Katahdin before it backs her too heavily as an engine of destruction.

Four Chicago pickpockets arrested in Bridgeport, Conn., were surprised because they could not buy their release, and explained that they "always paid $5 apiece to the Chicago police whenever they were arrested." Here is a touching story which may prove interesting to the Chicago Police Commission.

Chicago now claims a population, by a census just taken, of 1,650,000. Unless Brooklyn and New York and their respective suburbs shall be merged into one city, Chicago will stand, within five years, as the most populous city in the country. It must become such in the end, for it has room to grow. Our children will see the day when its population will equal that of London.

The trouble with some people is that they not only burn the candle at both ends, but they try to burn the candle at each end before the candle is made. It is no wonder that some people are prematurely old; it is no wonder that there are so many physical wrecks when one sees how large is the number of those who are fitting themselves for a life-work, and at the same time attempting to do that very life-work before they are qualified.

The bicycle is nothing if not sensational. It is now turning its attention to fashions in dress, both male and female. It has forced the men to return to the knee breeches of their ancestors, when short clothes and silken hose were the only wear, and it has compelled women to adopt man's cast-off trousers. As the bicycle may now be regarded as a permanent institution, these new fashions will undoubtedly be quite as permanent. After all, who cares? Dress is only a matter of habit.

"The drinking cups," exclaims the Gloucester (Mass.) Daily Times in a double-leaded editorial, "have disappeared from the fountain on Western avenue, this side of the bridge. Their removal is an outrage, as they are not worth stealing, and their frequent disappearance not only puts the city to expense, but thirsty travelers to much inconvenience. At this season of the year," argues the Times with much force, "such facilities for slacking thirst are not only a benison to travelers, but with the saloon at every corner they become active temperance work as well. By all means let the dippers be promptly replaced as fast as they disappear!" So say we all of us. The authorities of Gloucester are under a solemn obligation to hunt down the conscienceless thieves that have stolen those dippers. It is their duty to spare no pains to bring the miscreants to justice. Civilization demands this at their hands. In the interest of law, order, temperance, and good government let them not falter. The eyes of the world are upon them. Dipper-stealing in Gloucester must cease.

Why is it that a rural visitor who goes to a big city immediately forgets every dictate of common sense and good judgment and turns his back upon every moral precept and practice he has religiously practiced all his lifetime? Why should the farmer who lands in Chicago for the first time cheerfully hand over his valise and his pocketbook for safekeeping to the first stranger he meets? Why should he try to buy counterfeit money or diamonds or gold bricks? The other day Rev. Dr. Bailey, of Missouri, arrived in town. He carried a hymn book in his hand as he left the depot and wandered uptown. Within twenty minutes he had been steered into a saloon and had been induced to bet $60 on a domino game, which he lost. We feel sorry for Rev. Dr. Bailey, of course. But will some one who has studied psychology and mental philosophy kindly explain his case?

The loss of the Pacific mail steamship Colima near Mazatlan, Mexico, on her voyage from San Francisco to Panama, appears to have been caused by improper lading or stowing of cargo. On account of the increased cost of stowing all the cargo in the hold and carefully trimming and securing it, there is a temptation, when there seems to be a prospect of fair weather, for comparatively short voyages, to run the risk of heavy deck loads or unsecured freight in the hold. The testimony of survivors indicates that such neglect was the cause of this disaster. In the lake commerce there is special temptation to such risks and many losses are to be charged to this cause. It is to be hoped that this great loss of life will call attention to the matter of properly loading vessels, and that if necessary some system of inspection may be adopted that shall prevent such criminal risks.

Rev. Louis Archer, of Battle Creek, according to a dispatch in a Chicago paper, is in trouble. And the charge against him is kissing Mrs. John H. Waters violently, forcibly and against her will. The minister in his own behalf admits that he kissed Mrs. Waters, but adds that it was "merely the kiss of sanctification." Of course if the clergyman can convince a Michigan jury that he has a new brand of osculation which can be used without any harmful effects he may get off scot free. But we advise him to exercise a wise discretion in introducing his new-fangled kiss. There is danger in sowing any sort of kiss broadcast. The "kiss of sanctification" may do the recipient no harm. She may even like it. But an emotional, nervous, muscular husband is quite likely to distinguish no difference between the "kiss of sanctification" and the old-fashioned kiss which keeps our divorce courts busy. And before the minister can explain the difference he is liable to have his eyes blackened, his nose broken and a handful of teeth knocked out. We believe Brother Archer would do well to keep his "kiss of sanctification" for home consumption.

The purpose and effect of the new libel law amendment passed by the Legislature of Illinois is to remove the inference of malice from a newspaper publishing a libel through mistake or misapprehension of the facts where, on the truth being presented to it, a correction or retraction is printed as conspicuously as the libel. It does not relieve a newspaper from liability for actual damages caused by a libel, but only from those exemplary or punitive damages which have followed from the inference of malice. This bill is directly in line with the constitution of Illinois, which provides that "every person may freely speak, write and publish on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that liberty; and in all trials for libel, both civil and criminal, the truth when published with good motives and for justifiable ends shall be sufficient defense." There is nothing in the bill to relieve newspapers of the vexatious and malicious suits brought by plaintiffs without the shadow of a cause, but more to "vindicate" frauds and swindlers from the just effects of the publication of the "truth that hurts." Nine out of ten of the libel suits against newspapers answer to this description. They are brought as a blind behind which knavery hopes to retreat into security. A libel suit is about the only salve a swindler knows for his lacerated feelings on being found out. He brings it and then is never heard from more. But he puts the newspapers to the expense of retaining counsel and going through all the motions of preparing for a fight in court which never comes off. The new libel affords no relief from such legal blackmailing, but it reduces the temptation of frauds to bring suits for exemplary damages.

Cruelty in Fishing.

There is nothing more to be said against the use of fish for food than the use of any other kind of animal food; and, since fish may be lawfully eaten, they may be lawfully taken; but there ought to be no cruelty of any kind in taking them. We wish to warn our readers against two kinds of cruelty which are only too commonly practiced among fishermen.

Live bait ought never to be used. To take a live minnow, to thrust a hook through its back, and then to jerk it fifty or sixty feet through the air, in order that it may wriggle in agony at the end of the line until it attracts some other fish to swallow it, is about as wanton a piece of cruelty as any one could invent. There is nothing sportsmanlike in fishing of that sort. The skillful fisherman will use a fly or some other device by which the fish he wishes to capture may be deceived and caught. The live minnow is the bait of the blunderer, not of the expert.

Even experienced fishermen sometimes commit another sort of cruelty which ought never to be practiced. They think that their fish must be kept alive as long as possible, and, therefore, run a string through its gills, and throw it overboard, to be hauled after the boat. This is as foolish as it is cruel. When the fish has a string through its gills it cannot breathe. It is slowly strangled to death, and if it is hauled through the water after the boat it is simply drowned in its own element. Fish, when taken, should be immediately killed. That is the only way to prevent needless suffering, and we may add that it is the best way to bring the fish home in good condition.—Our Animal Friends.

Pertinacious.

Whittier was frequently annoyed by admiring strangers who not only called on him, but thriftily insisted on putting up with him all night. "Thee has no idea," said his sister, "how much time Greenleaf spends trying to lose these people in the streets. Sometimes he comes home and says, 'Well, sister, I had hard work to lose him, but I have lost him. But I can never lose a her. Then women are more pertinacious than the men; don't thee find them so, Maria?'"

If we were a young man, we wouldn't fall in love with a girl who loves a dog.

DAWN OF LIBERTY

LEXINGTON AND CONCORD KINDLED THE FLAMES.

Patriotic Fires Lighted There Fused the Thirteen Colonies Into the Fabric of Our National Life—The Shot that Was "Heard Around the World"

First Patriot Blood.

The first collision in that memorable struggle which gave a new nation to the world was the battle of Lexington. That first shot, which the poet has aptly said was "heard around the world" kindled the flames of war, and in these flames the thirteen colonies were fused into the fabric of the American nation, now the greatest, the most prosperous and the most freedom-blessed among the powers of the globe. Not only was the battle of Lexington and Concord the introductory to the surrender at Yorktown and the birth of a new nation; it was the introductory to the subsequent political changes in Europe, when dynasties were swamped, tyranny overthrown and the people for the first time were made aware of their powers, their duties and their rights. It was the sponsor if not the parent of democracy in Europe.

Prior to the initial outbreak at Lexington the provincial authorities were preparing for a struggle and had collected at Concord provisions, arms and ammunition. Unhappily these were not easy to obtain. On April 19, 1775, only twelve field pieces could be counted in Massachusetts, but there had been collected in that colony 21,549 firearms, 17,441 pounds of powder, 22,191 pounds of ball, 144,099 flints, 10,108 bayonets, 11,979 pouches, 15,000 canteens. There were also 17,000 pounds of salt fish and 35,000 pounds of rice, with large quantities of beef and pork. Surely twelve field pieces and 17,000 pounds of salt fish were not a great encouragement upon which to enter into a contest with the greatest military power of the world, but the contest came sooner than either side expected and lo! a new nation arose as if by magic and throwing out her arms embraced the Pacific and the Atlantic.

DR. JOSEPH WARREN

Paul Revere's Ride.

It was upon the night of April 18, 1775, that Paul Revere set out on his memorable ride from Boston to notify the patriots in Concord that the British contemplated raiding the place and confiscating the military stores. He was sent by Dr. Joseph Warren, head of the Committee of Safety in Boston. To be doubly sure Warren sent two messengers, one of them, Revere, to proceed by way of Charlestown through Lexington to Concord, and the other, William Dawes, to take the route by way of Roxbury. A certain signal was to be given from the church tower of North Church by the sexton, Robert Newman, as to the route the British were to take in making their raid. The signal was duly given by means of two lanterns and then Revere, supplied with all the information necessary, crossed the Charles river and began his ride to Concord. Two soldiers attempted to intercept him, for the British commander, Gen. Gage, had issued orders that no American should be permitted to leave the city, but Revere eluded them and spreading the news of the intended raid on the way safely reached Lexington. Here he notified Hancock and Adams and was joined by Dawes. Together the two messengers rode out of Lexington for Concord and were joined on the way by Dr. Prescott. At Lincoln the three were confronted by a squad of British soldiers and Revere and Dawes were taken prisoners. Prescott, however, escaped arrest and continuing his journey, bore the important news to Concord.

Lexington and Concord.

Meantime the British troops under command of Col. Smith had left Boston and at daybreak the advanced guard, under Major Pitcairn, approached Lexington. When the main body came up the entire force took up a position on Lexington green and found themselves confronted by a couple of score of Americans under command of Capt. John Parker. "Don't fire unless you are fired on," were the words of Capt. Parker to his men; "but if they want a war let it begin here." It began there; the Americans were fired on, losing all told eight of their number killed and nine wounded. They made an ineffectual reply, wounding three British soldiers and the horse of Pitcairn. The rest of the Americans retreated, and receiving reinforcements, pursued the British toward Concord and attacked them with desperate fury, capturing seven prisoners—the first prisoners taken in the American war.

Then followed the fight at Concord, where 450 Americans rallied to meet the British. The principal fighting was done at the north bridge and there the American captain, Isaac Davis, fell. The Americans opened a galling fire and the British detachment fell back in disorder. Their main body was too strong to be attacked and after committing a few depredations they began their return march. It ended in flight. The American minute men from behind every tree and house poured in a deadly fire and the British would have been forced to surrender before reaching Lexington had not Lord Percy arrived with a reinforcement of 1,200 men. Even with this support the British fell back, for the Americans were pouring to the scene in hundreds from Dorchester, Milton, Dedham and other towns. The struggle was on.

The fight at Lexington electrified the colonies. The day before there were not many who thought of war; the following day the British were beleaguered in Boston and the possibility of a war became a certainty. In New York, Philadelphia, Charleston and Savannah the news of the fight was received with enthusiasm. That raw, provincial troops should have faced and routed the British army was not only a surprise, but an impetus to the grand struggle that gave England a rival amid the nations of the earth.

THE FOURTH AT PIKEVILLE.

Trials and Tribulations of the Committee on Ceremonies.

THE Fourth will never be forgotten at Pikeville. The program was prepared at a meeting thirty days beforehand. The meeting was exciting. Miss Laura De Sha was elected to read the Declaration of Independence. "She's the only young lady that can read, I suppose," whispered Mrs. Ames, and she glanced at her five grown daughters. Whispers continued until twenty women had agreed never to buy even a yard of calico at Mr. De Sha's store. Six young ladies said they would not speak to Miss De Sha any more.

Dr. Bunkerman was elected orator.

"Maybe he's the only man in town that can make a speech," muttered Lawyer Tibbs, and his gold-headed cane struck the floor.

"I wouldn't have him doctor a canary," said Mrs. Tibbs. Two lawyers, one doctor and four district school teachers agreed with Mrs. Tibbs.

The grocer, Mr. Brown, proposed a foot race.

"I object!" thundered Squire Midd. "Let's have a jumping contest. My Thomas can jump any of the boys, but he can't run."

The majority, however, voted for the foot race, and Squire Mudd and nineteen others said they would get their groceries in Swamptown for the future.

The blacksmith, William Bonn, moved to adjourn.

Joseph Scanlan and Johnny Gray opposed the motion, but it was carried, and Mr. Scanlan, Mr. Gray and ten more said their horses should go unshod rather than be taken to Bonn's.

For weeks after this meeting people passing the homes of Miss De Sha and Dr. Bunkerman late at night could hear her reciting the "Declaration" in a sweet voice, and the doctor rehearsing his oration; now softly, now in tones loud enough to be almost sublime.

Many stopped and listened, looking up at the shadowy gestures on the window curtains. These rehearsals were heard until even the little boys on the streets were shouting, "When in the course of human events it becomes necessary," and "Fellow citizens of Pikeville."

At night men were seen here and there running in alleys and pastures by starlight They were practicing for the foot race.

The 3d of July came. Until midnight mothers and daughters ironed white dresses. Dissatisfaction with the program would keep no one at home to-morrow. All would celebrate. And everyone was delighted that the sun had set in a clear sky, arched by two rainbows, and that now at midnight all the stars shone.

Little birds were awaking one by one on the morning of the Fourth, when all the windows in all the houses of Pikeville rattled. People leaped from their beds to close the shutters. The lightning flashed. Women ran into cellars. Rain fell heavily all day, and no one went out of doors.

FLAG OF THE FREE.

It Carries with It the Power and Dignity of the American Nation.

INDEPENDENCE Day carries us backward to the time when America became the scene of a bloody conflict. The "tiger strife" with the red man was scarcely passed when the gauge of battle was thrown down before the British army in the streets of Boston. Then followed the disastrous riot eleven days afterward, and the destruction of tea in Boston harbor, and then in succession the battles of Lexington and Bunker's Hill. Over the grave of the first victim was opened a mighty chapter in the world's history. One cannot read the graphic descriptions of these events in history without the stirring of his patriotic spirit, and it may be commended as a wholesome exercise to read the opening chapters as a preparation for the proper observance of the Fourth of July. We need not tell over the old well-worn tale of hardship, patriotism and heroic endurance of the thrilling conflict whose pathos will ever make strong men weep. Coming to a later period in our history, we mark the time when on the 13th of April, 1818, our beautiful "Star Spangled Banner" was first hoisted over the hall of representatives at Washington. The Star Spangled Banner from that time to the present has continued to be the national standard of the American Republic.

At first it contained but thirteen stars, representing the thirteen original States; but now forty-four stars herald the birth of forty-four States, with more to follow. As we contemplate our national symbol on this Independence Day, we may use it as an object to conjure by, for we hold sacred the American flag. It is the emblem of liberty, and as star after star flashes upon its banner, it becomes the record of prosperity, and the hope of our country's tranquility. Many scenes and incidents of our history have abiding interest because they are linked to the flag of the Union. The immortal national song, the "Star Spangled Banner," was penned by Francis Scott Key while he was watching from the British fleet the bombardment of Fort McHenry. His soul was wrought to intense anxiety for the safety of the flag, and he exclaims, "O, say! can you see? O, tell me! Is it still floating? Can you see it?" As the night wore away and the morning dawn revealed the Stars and Stripes still floating, the poet broke forth into a strain that is reverberating in other continents—

"And the Star Spangled Banner forever shall wave
O'er the land of the free, and the home of the brave."

When the great Empire of Brazil declared herself free, the Star Spangled Banner with Brazilian colors was adopted as the emblem of the new Republic. The Stars and Stripes are moving on, over land and sea, carrying with them the power and dignity of the American nation.

I HEARD it ring all through the night
In joyful tones supreme
As though from freedom's far off height
The melody did stream;
And liberty
O! liberty—
Its only constant theme,
And liberty
O! liberty—
It shouted through my dream.

It seemed to lift, to rise, to float
Me on the joyful strain;
The pulsing accents seemed to gloat
On that one rich refrain;
And liberty
O! liberty—
It echoed through my brain,
And liberty
O! liberty—
It called and called again.

All through the dreamful, happy night
I heard its voice outpour—
The "poor old bell"—the people said
"Would ring ah! evermore."
But liberty
O! liberty—
I heard it o'er and o'er
And liberty
O! liberty—
As in the days of yore.

And does it ring no more—ah me!
They spoke who were not wise.
Its voice is rolling round the world—
Such music never dies.
Still liberty
O! liberty—
Unceasingly it cries
And liberty
O! liberty—
A listening world replies.

"Great Expectations."

Obliging.

Miss Slimson—I am so glad you have come, Mr. Featherstone. The children want you to help them set off their fire works, but don't keep them up later than ten.

Featherstone—No, I won't. And can I see you afterward, Miss Clara?

Miss Slimson—Oh, yes; you can come around to-morrow night, if you like.

A Glorious Occasion.

Miss Palisade—Do you remember the last Fourth of July celebration we had Mr. Stuffer?

Mr. Stuffer—I remember it very well Miss Palisade, for it was the last time I took dinner with you.

Youthful Precocity.

Mr. Ruskin is an instance of precocity as remarkable as Thirlwall, though he did not begin to publish so early. He began to write "books" at 6 years of age. His first dated poem was written a month before he reached the age of 7. A poem he wrote when 7 years old reminds Mr. Collingwood (see "Life," 1893, Vol. 1, page 26,) of "Blake's best touches." His first appearance in print was in The Magazine of Architecture in 1834, when he was 15. Macaulay, too, was an infant prodigy. He wrote a compendium of "Universal History" and three cantos of a poem in imitation of Scott when he was only 7 years old. Mrs. Browning (Elizabeth Barrett) read Homer in the original at 10 years of age, and her poem, "The Battle of Marathan," was printed while she was still a child. It is said to have been written when she was 11 or 12, a sufficiently early age at which to produce an epic in four books. —Notes and Queries.

SIX O'CLOCK.

WEARY WOMEN WATCH FOR THAT BLESSED HOUR.

Help for our Working-Girls and Women Near at Hand.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

ON the stroke of six ends the day's work at stores, offices, factories, mills, where women are employed. But their necessary work at home, sewing, mending, etc., must be done after that time, and "theirwork is never done."

All women work; some for ambition, some for economy in the household, but the great mass of women work for their daily bread. All are subject to the same physical laws; all suffer alike from the same physical disturbances, and the nature of their duties often quickly drifts them into the horrors of all kinds of female complaints, ovarian troubles, inflammation, ulceration, falling and displacement of the womb, leucorrhœa, and perhaps irregular or suppressed "monthly periods," causing severe backache, loss of appetite, nervousness, irritability and weakness.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the unfailing cure for all these troubles. It strengthens the proper muscles, and cures displacement.

Backache, dizziness, fainting, bearing-down, disordered stomach, moodiness, dislike of friends and society—all symptoms of the one cause—will be quickly dispelled. Write Mrs. Pinkham about your trouble.

You can tell the story of your pain to a woman, and get the help that only woman can give. Mrs. Pinkham's address is Lynn, Mass.

The Greatest Medical Discovery of the Age.

KENNEDY'S MEDICAL DISCOVERY.

DONALD KENNEDY, OF ROXBURY, MASS.,

Has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures every kind of Humor, from the worst Scrofula down to a common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunder humor). He has now in his possession over two hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston. Send postal card for book.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the right quantity is taken.

When the lungs are affected it causes shooting pains, like needles passing through them; the same with the Liver or Bowels. This is caused by the ducts being stopped, and always disappears in a week after taking it. Read the label.

If the stomach is foul or bilious it will cause squeamish feelings at first.

No change of diet ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it. Dose, one tablespoonful in water at bedtime. Sold by all Druggists.

IN WANT OF AN ISSUE.

REPUBLICANS KNOW NOT WHERE THEY ARE AT.

Chasing Up and Down the Country for an Issue on Which to Base Their Campaign—The "Wind-Jamming" Convention at Cleveland.

Are in a Bad Way.

The Republican party wants an issue as much as Byron wanted a hero, and it is not half as likely to get what it wants as he was.

There is the silver question, but the Republican party is mortally afraid of that. It "mixed in" with that question in 1890, but came out badly disfigured. It failed to get the electoral votes in 1892 for which it had paid the Sherman act in advance in 1890, and it had a very bad panic to its credit in 1893. In view of its recent experience it would fight shy of the silver question even if there were a fair prospect of making an issue of it next year.

Then there is the tariff question, but that is most unpromising as an issue. The Republican organs are printing pages of news all to the effect that prosperity is not returning, but already here; that works in the protected industries which were shut down in the days of the McKinley sort of prosperity are resuming operations with full forces; that 250,000 men in those industries have had their wages raised, in nearly all cases by the voluntary action of their employers, within ninety days; in short, that a great industrial boom is "on."

With the party organs printing such news under loud display headlines how can the party leaders expect to make an issue of the tariff? If they should make an issue of it, how could they expect to win thereon? Everybody knows it is not the McKinley tariff under which the wheels of industry have resumed their motion at accelerating speed. Everybody knows it is under the Democratic tariff of last August that this has come to pass, and everybody knows that there will not be a different tariff in less than three years from now. Of course, with the facts in plain sight, nobody can be made to believe that the new tariff is ruinous and that a return to McKinleyism would help the country. In fine, high tariff as a Republican war cry has been drowned by the boom. It is not the Republican party that will profit by the tariff next year.

There is the Hawaiian annexation yell that surged over the country some two years ago. We hear a faint echo of that yet from time to time, but the people, upon taking a sober view of the matter, have concluded that it is absurd to go wild for the annexation of a few islands 2,000 miles off in midocean and occupied mostly by people who have not sufficiently emerged from barbarism to be fit for self-government. They are not now crazy to complicate, or rather borrow, difficulties by annexing a petty oligarchy.

What, then, will the Republican party do for an issue?

The political wise men who assembled in Cleveland recently declared in substance as follows: As a Republican league we know nothing about the silver question or any other public question. But as a Republican convention next year we will know all about every such question, and we confidently believe that we will then make "a declaration of principles destined to secure the best possible administration of government and the highest obtainable prosperity of the people." And that is all they did except to elect officers. They might as well have put their declaration in this form: Resolved, That we don't know what the principles of the Republican party are, if it has any, and that just now we haven't any political principles anyway. But we are Republicans, hip, hip! every day in the week and twice on Sunday, hurrah!! and we are out for the offices, tiger!!!

Time was when the Republican party had some principles and purposes that it was not afraid to proclaim from the housetops, and when no national representative assembly of the party could dissolve without making a tolerably plain declaration of those principles and purposes. But now such an assembly sits for three days and does nothing but "respectfully refer" all questions of principle and policy to another party assembly to be held at a future time. Republicans have no political creed that they dare proclaim to-day, and the prospect is that they will be no better off next year. They would be glad to make the issue one of general respectability if they could, but as that is out of the question they will have to make a platform of ancient history with possibly a fresh and sappy jingo plank. And on such a platform they will go where they went in 1892.

Exporting Iron Ore.

When the Wilson bill proposed to put iron ore on the free list, so that iron works on the Atlantic seaboard might have the advantage of using certain kinds of ore mined in Cuba and Nova Scotia, the high tariff organs protested that with free ore our iron mining industries would be ruined. Of course nobody believed the claim of the protectionists, for it was well known that iron can be mined cheaper in the United States than in any other part of the world. Convincing proof that the Democrats were right in their assertion that iron ore needed no protection, is afforded by the fact that during the past two weeks 1,500 tons of iron ore from the mines at Port Henry, N. Y., have been shipped to Germany, where it is to be used in making Besemer pig iron, and the Iron Age states that, "There is a very large market for these special ores on the continent and England," and that "negotiations are now pending for shipments to England." Thus one by one the pretenses of the high tariffites that American industries cannot compete with those of other countries, are being refuted by the cold logic of facts. Yet the Republican organs will continue to whine about the "deadly blow struck at our iron mining industry by the Wilson bill."

Pleasant and Profitable Ruin.

According to the Republican calamity press the Democratic party is still at its awful work of destroying the industries of the country!

It is amazing that more than half the citizens of the republic should think of bringing poverty and distress, desolation and ruin upon their own land, and all by an enactment for the reduction of taxation upon the people of that land. We know that they were engaged in this heinous work, because we had the assurance of the Republican press and of Republican orators that when the Democratic party passed a bill for the reduction of taxation they entered upon a policy which must destroy the industries and the commerce of this country.

We have had frequent occasion to point out how the awful work is progressing. Additions are made daily to the record. On June 17 the National Malleable Casting company at Cleveland notified 900 employes that a general increase of 10 per cent would take place immediately. At the Eberhart Manufacturing company of the same city notices were posted that 1,000 employes should have 10 per cent increase of wage. The Illinois Steel company at Joliet notified its employes of a general advance of 10 per cent on July 1, excepting to operatives paid on sliding scale.

If the process of reducing taxation at the custom houses 50 per cent is to result in just such ruin to American labor and to American industries, why not make the ruin complete by reduction of 100 per cent?

The Landslide States.

In those states which gave the largest Republican majorities in 1894 the greatest popular discontent prevails. In the legislatures of what may be called the "landslide" states—from the overwhelming extent of the Republican majorities—the misuse of power by the Republican majorities was flagrant and scandalous. Corruption under gang and boodle rule was everywhere.

In Illinois the facts have come home to the people through the proclamation of Governor Altgeld in calling a special session and through the press of both parties. No previous general assembly at Springfield was so profligate, so recreant to the public duty, so thoroughly under the control of corporation influences.

The same story comes from other states in the "landslide" list. The New York legislature was as bad as that of Illinois—as partisan, as corrupt, as much under lobby control. It was worse in one respect. Two hostile Republican factions—Platt and anti-Platt—were engaged in a constant struggle for superiority, and public interests were sacrificed to the interests of factions. In Illinois the lines of Republican factions were obliterated in the scramble and riot to obtain possession of spoils and bribes.

In Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin and other western states where Republican legislatures were inspired by a belief that the "landslide" majorities by which they were elected clothed them with immunity from popular judgment and condemnation, the fruits of the sessions have been the same. The lobbies of the corporations and other corrupt influences controlled everything. There was little wise legislation. Questions of reform in revenue and the collection of taxes, of reform in the administration of justice, affecting labor and the conflict to establish its rights and of the general good were neglected and abandoned. Every call to action on these grave subjects of legislation was disobeyed and repudiated. Republican leaders, the bosses, the politicians, believed that their sweeping victories in the most of the states assured them a long lease of power. The misuse they have made of their victory has everywhere excited popular condemnation.—Chicago Chronicle.

A "Windjamming" Convention.

The league of Republican Clubs attracted to Cleveland all the small fry politicians in the party and frightened all the big fellows away to points unreached by telegraph wires.

Every Republican who wants to be President fled—nearly every one who wants to help make a man President who will give him an office was there. One issue alone kept the chiefs away—the question of the currency. Every one of them would rather be President than be right, and each feared to speak for the right in the money debate lest he shatter his hopes of advancement.

Accordingly, the convention of clubs was a chronicle of harmless thunder and small beer. There was much cry and little wool, voices, and beyond that nothing. The bloviant address of the president, W. W. Tracy, in which Republicans were adjured to teach "the dauntless spirit of Americanism as taught by James G. Blaine," set the keynote. Shrewd politicians among the Republicans were wise enough to see that the convention was just for buncombe and sagely stayed away.

Patriotism Under the New Tariff.

The low prices made on firecrackers this season in consequence of the removal of the duty has caused a larger demand than has been known for years. Some importers state that their sales this year so far are fully 300 per cent. larger than those for the corresponding period in 1894.—Journal of Commerce.

It is strange that the Republicans who are always bubbling over with Americanism and patriotism, never thought how much more patriotic we could be with lower duties on firecrackers. Young America will celebrate this year, sure.

LEADING lumber men say that hard woods in Indiana are about all gone except oak, and that is very scarce.

CHARLES MCINTIRE, aged 4, fell from a fence at New Albany, and died in a few minutes from concussion of the brain.

FRED SHAFER, while riding on an L. S. & M. S. freight train, near Elkhart, was brutally assaulted and robbed by tramps.

THE barn of Curran Bell, south of Elwood, was struck by lightning during a thunder-storm, and burned up. Loss $1,200.

COLFAX residents are tired of living in a city, and a petition will be circulated for the purpose of disorganizing the corporation.

THE Union Steel Works, of Alexandria, employing 1,600 men, has increased the wages of their employes ten per cent. all around.

THE signing of the new tin-plate wage scale insures steady employment for the army of workmen is the American Tinplate Works at Elwood.

JOHN SHUERENBRAND, a tinner, committed suicide at Boswell, Benton County, by hanging himself. He had been in the Insane Asylum several times.

DAVID S. WATSON and Henry Borgman, two life convicts in the Prison South, have become insane. They will probably be removed to the insane asylum.

A HORSE driven by Mrs. Mary Hoehn, of Sellerburg, took fright while Mrs. Hoehn was on her way home from Jeffersonville and ran away, throwing her out and probably fatally injuring her.

AN Elwood servant girl, who is a somnambulist, got up in her sleep at 2 o'clock and prepared breakfast. Wasn't awakened until her mistress went down stairs to see why she was ringing the breakfast bell.

FREDERICK SMITH, an employe of Barnes' saw-mill at Knightstown, was fatally hurt recently. While operating a cut-off saw a sliver in some manner struck him with such force as to break his skull and penetrate his head about two inches.

JOHN NEWMAN, a mere boy, entered Miss Emma Sheppler's home at Raleigh, and playfully snapped an old revolver. It exploded and the bullet crushed into her brain killing her almost instantly. The families of the boy and girl are almost wild over the affair.

FARMER Henry Horn, living near Columbus, while driving a harvesting machine was thrown upon a wire fence by a runaway team of mules and dragged some distance. He received twenty-one cuts across his stomach and abdomen, two of which are believed to have entered the cavity. His arms and legs are also badly cut, and he may die.

CHINCH bugs in large numbers have appeared in the eastern part of Bartholomew County, and are doing great damage to the growing corn. In some localities since the wheat has been harvested these pests have become so numerous that the cornstalks are black with them. At Burnsbill a quart of the bugs was gathered and shipped to Prof. W. C. Latta, of Purdue University, to be inoculated with chinch bug cholera. These bugs will be returned and scattered among the living ones with a hope of thus exterminating them.

INDIANA possesses shale and sandstone deposits of untold value according to State geologist Blatchley, who has just returned from a thorough inspection of the ledges in the western part of the State. Sandstone of the highest quality is found in Parke, Fountain and Warren counties, he says, and the shale beds are near Veedersburg, Attica and Cayuga. At the latter place a factory has been started that is turning out 35,000 pressed brick a day. By merely combining the shales any desired color is obtained. At Cayuga is another factory that turns out 30,000 brick a day. Mr. Blatchley left Assistant Hopkins to complete the prospecting, but he has learned enough, he claims, to convince him that the deposits are among the state's greatest resources.

THE Governor has pardoned Peter J. Clark, one of the men who participated in the opera house riot at Lafayette in January, 1893. The riot was the result of religious excitement growing out of a lecture by George P. Rudolph, an ex-Catholic priest. Clark was charged with assault and battery with intent to kill, and was convicted and sentenced to the penitentiary for four years. Two other participants were convicted and sentenced to the penitentiary. They were pardoned some time ago. The persons who partitioned for the pardon of Clark say he was misguided; that he had previously been a good citizen of Lafayette, and that he has a wife and four children dependent on him. Many of the citizens of Tippecanoe County signed the petition.

JOHN SPRINGER, a well-known resident of Connersville, while fishing, near Alpine, became overheated and fell dead. Heart trouble contributed toward his demise. He was about forty years old and leaves a family.

WESLEY GROSS, of Henryville, sleeps with his artillery in close proximity, because of a letter, accompanied with a bundle of switches, threatening him with violence if he does not cease paying his addresses to a lady in that vicinity. Mr. Gross is an old soldier, and he has retaliated with a warning that the first White-Cap crowd molesting him will be warmly welcomed to hospitable graves.

THE Governor has appointed the following trustees of Purdue University, as authorized by the last General Assembly: Six year term, Benjamin Harrison, Indianapolis; Charles B. Stuart, Lafayette; William A. Banks, Laporte. Four year term, Charles Downing, Greenfield; James M. Barrett, Fort Wayne; Jacob H. Van Natta, Battleground. Two year term, David E. Beem, Spencer; Sylvester Johnson, Irvington; William H. O. Brien, Lawrenceburg.

WILLIAM BROWN, the 70 years-old convict, who escaped from the Prison North, attempted to defend himself with a shotgun when recapture was imminent. For this reason the prison officials are opposing an effort now making to secure his pardon.

Royal Baking Powder

ABSOLUTELY PURE

Equally True.

The most practical of women are slow to forgive any lack of ardor in a wooer, as a man sometimes learns to his cost. Farmer Jones, a prosperous farmer, sought an interview with widow Brown. "Widow Brown," said he, "I am a man of few words, but much feeling. I possess, as you know, between three and four hundred head of cattle. I have saved up $800 or so, and I've a tidy and comfortable home. I want you to become my wife. Now, quick's the word with me; I give you five minutes to decide."

"Farmer Jones," said Widow Brown, very deliberately, "I am a woman of few words—I'll say nothing of my feelings. I possess, as you know, between three and four hundred head of poultry and about ten score of pigs. I have nigh twelve hundred dollars well invested—my late husband's savings and my own earnings. I tell you I wouldn't marry you if it were a choice between that and going to the scaffold Sharp's my word and I'll give you three minutes to clear off my premises."

A Queer Proposition.

How could two persons be born at the same time and die at the same time, at the end of fifty years, and yet one of them live one hundred days more than the other?

The answer turns upon the familiar fact that a person who goes round the world towards the west loses a day, whilst the person who travels in the opposite direction gains a day.

We will suppose, then, that the two men in question were born at the same instant in New York, from whence a trip round the world may easily be made once a year. One of them goes always towards the west, the other towards the east. One loses a day every year, the other gains a day every year.

When the men die, at fifty years of age, one has seen one hundred days more than the other.

A Little too Risky.

What Man Expects of a Wife.

A man expects his wife to be better than he, writes Mrs. Burton Kingsland in the July Ladies' Home Journal. No matter how little religion a man may have himself his ideal wife is always a woman with the purity of soul that only a Christian can have; and to a good man it is usually part of his religion to believe that his wife is morally higher and nobler than himself.

Don't Get Scared

If you should hear that in some place to which you are going malaria is prevalent. To the air poison which produces chills and fever, bilious remittent and dumb ague there is a safe and thorough antidote and preventive, viz., Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. The great anti-malarial specific is also a remedy for biliousness, constipation, dyspepsia, rheumatic and kidney trouble, nervousness and debility.

The Cheerful Idiot.

"It is a rather severe reflection on the vanity of man," said the philosophical boarder, "the fact that his skeleton will fetch no more than $25 in market."

"I had the idea," said the Cheerful Idiot, "that it would amount to a little over two hundred cold bones."

Dr. PIERCE'S Golden Medical DISCOVERY

Cures Ninety-eight per cent. of all cases of Consumption, in all its Earlier Stages.

Although by many believed to be incurable, there is the evidence of hundreds of living witnesses to the fact that, in all its earlier stages, consumption is a curable disease. Not every case, but a large percentage of cases, and we believe, fully 98 per cent. are cured by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, even after the disease has progressed so far as to induce repeated bleedings from the lungs, severe lingering cough with copious expectoration (including tubercular matter), great loss of flesh and extreme emaciation and weakness.

Opium Fiends.

Twenty per cent of the inmates of the state prison at Charlestown, Mass., are habitual opium-eaters, and Warden Bridges says that it is next to impossible to prevent the smuggling of this drug into the prison.

When Traveling.

Whether on pleasure bent, or business, take on every trip a bottle of Syrup of Figs, as it acts most pleasantly and effectually on the kidneys, liver, and bowels, preventing fevers, headaches and other forms of sickness. For sale in 50c. and $1 bottles by all leading druggists. Manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only.

Madam Boisvert.

I am a mid-wife and have been giving McElree's Wine of Cardui and Black-Draught tea to my lady patients both during pregnancy and after birth as a tonic, and have found the treatment will do more than is claimed for it. Two years ago I was so troubled with female weakness myself, that I could not work at all. I heard McElree's Wine of Cardui recommended, and got six bottles of it, and a mammoth package of Thedford's Black-Draught. I began the treatment as directed, and in two weeks I had improved so much I could do my work, and have never been troubled with it since.

Mrs. MARY F. MCCLARIN, Rockmart, Ga., writes: "I have always been a great sufferer during child birth. I used McElree's Wine of Cardui before confinement the last time, and the pains were much less and shorter than ever before, and my baby is larger and much healthier than any of the others.

Out of sorts

—and no wonder. Think of the condition of those poor women who have to wash clothes and clean house in the old-fashioned way. They're tired, vexed, discouraged, out of sorts, with aching backs and aching hearts.

They must be out of their wits. Why don't they use Pearline? That is what every woman who values her health and strength is coming to. And they're coming to it now, faster than ever. Every day, Pearline's fame grows and its patrons increase in number. Hundreds of millions of packages have been used by bright women who want to make washing easy. 481

A Holland Case.

The people of New Holland, O., have been greatly surprised recently by the almost wonderful cure of a young daughter of Mr. Jno Orahood, who for a long time had been afflicted with fits or epileptic convulsions. The affliction seemed more dreadful because of the natural brightness of the child. Doctors and other medicines failed to effect any lasting benefit and cure seemed hopeless until a sample bottle of Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer was providentially handed Mr. Orahood and from the use of it and only two full bottles of the remedy, the young girl has been completely cured of the affliction which threatened to blight her life. Fortunately there are but few cases of epileptic fits, but we venture to say that half the people who read this would feel like new beings after a thorough use of Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer; it is a nerve food, restoring nerve force on the same principal that food restores physical vigor and muscle.

If yours is a case of shattered nerves, frequent headache, perhaps nervously cross, troubled with sleeplessness, a tired feeling in the morning, debilitated, all worn out feeling, promptly use this great remedy, for it will you, and also ward off the most serious sickness or breaking down which you symptoms indicate.

BANK SAFE.

ALL TORN TO PIECES—NO MONEY LOST.

Several years ago the First National of Auburn purchased the very best safe that could be made at an expense of $3,500. It was of the Hall patent with double burglar proof chests the walls of which were six inches thick of case hardened steel. The joints of the burglar chests were dove tailed and plowed and groved. They could not be wedged, they could not be drilled, nor could powder be forced into them. They were guarded with powerful bolt works and had five of the very best combination locks and a double time lock. But with all those safeguards, when we visited the bank this morning we found the burglar chest doors all torn to pieces. This calamity was caused by burglars using nitro-glycerine and dynamite on other bank safes through the country. The painful frequency of that fact induced the officers of the bank to make their safe absolutely secure against that powerful explosive if money and ingenuity could do it. So to that end they employed an inventor of great reputation by the name of J. C. Harris, of the Burton Harris works of Chicago, to carry out their plans to make the safe absolutely secure against dynamite and nitro glycerine without regard to expense, absolute security being the only object Mr. Harris undertook the job and sent Mr. A. Evenson, the ablest expert workman he could find, to superintend the work. Mr. Evenson and his able assistants have been at work several weeks working day and night and the First National now looks more like a machine shop than the leading financial institution in the county. By the contract the Chicago company is required to make the safe absolutely air tight under the most powerful tests known to science To do that all the doors must be taken apart and rebuilt, and all the locks taken off, as the locks are now operated by spindles running through the door. A door cannot be made air tight with a spindle running through it loose enough to be turned. In reconstructing the doors new steel plates must be put in the places of those which were drilled for the lock spindles, then the door may be locked by an automatic lock, operated by the time lock, from the inside of the chest, then by the use of a secret mineral packing lately invented and patented by Mr. Harris, which in a few days becomes as hard as case hardened steel, the door joints are made absolutely air tight. By examination you will find that all sides not so packed, have open joints so that a knife blade can be inserted in some of the joints where nitro glycerine could be sucked in by the use of an air pump and the safe blown open in a few minutes. When this safe is finished and the door closed it will present a solid front with no evidence of a lock, and no possibility of inserting nitro glycerine, as that fluid cannot be inserted where air cannot by any means be forced in by an air pump. Burglars use no other methods now upon first-class bank safes, and the officers of the bank are bound to make their safe absolutely secure against such methods. The automatic lock is a wonderful piece of mechanism and will well pay a visit to the bank to see it operate. When the job is completed it is to be tested by every method known to science before it will be accepted. It will not be completed for some time yet When it is completed and tested, we may have something more to say about it The bank and the citizens of Auburn and vicinity may well be congratulated upon having a place where they know their money will be safe against these troublesome gentlemen. No safe is secure against nitro-glycerine without these newly discovered devices, and the officers of the bank feel very proud over their success in securing them and appear to take great satisfaction in exhibiting and explaining them to their customers, and well they may be.

From Mrs. J. D. Leighty.

We clip the following letter from the St. Joe News. It is from Mrs. J. D. Leighty who is on her way to London England, to attend the international W. C. T. U. convention.

Steamship Berlin, (at sea)
Saturday Morning, June 8.

I am going to write you a line this morning, knowing you will be interested in hearing how I am enjoying the trip. This is our third day out; I have not been sick at all, just a little dizzy the first day, have slept well and only missed two meals at the table. They serve beef, tea and hard tack on deck to those who do not care for a full meal, and the first day I don't think many went to their meals. My room mate has been very sick since the first hour of starting The first day out was very foggy, the engines were stopped and we just drifted for twelve hours, which has delayed us so that we will probably not reach Southampton until next Saturday. To-day the weather is fine; sunny, with a stiff breeze blowing. We are within fifty miles of the coast of Nova Scotia; saw some sea birds and a ship to-day. There are about 160 W. C. T. U.'s on board. Mother Stewart, one of the original crusaders, who is 80 years old, is 80 years old, is sitting by my side writing out a speech. We have prayer and song service every morning at 9:30, on deck if the weather is nice, and in the parlor if otherwise.

Sunday morning, June 9th. After the beautiful weather yesterday, just at sundown, a northeaster struck us and we have been rolling all night, but this morning the sky is clear, with a strong wind blowing and it is just as hard as sharks can do to hold to our chairs, much less to walk. Today a large whale showed up and spouted several times for us.

Tuesday morning, June 11th. At twelve o'clock noon, yesterday we were just half way on our journey. Sails up this morning and we are spinning along with a cold northwest wind. We are wearing our winter cloaks and woolen hoods.

Wednesday, June 12th. On deck as usual, all are feeling better and everybody seemingly happy. We are looking forward to seeing land with a great deal of pleasure.

Thursday morning, June 13. All well and a beautiful morning it is. A break in the machinery will delay our landing until Saturday morning but we have the prospect of seeing land tomorrow, so I will close my letter to-day and writ again on my landing in London.

Cure for Headache.

As a remedy for all forms of headache Electric Bitters has proved to be the very best. It effects a permanent cure, and the most dreaded habitual sick headache yields to its influence. We urge all who are afflicted to procure a bottle, and give this remedy a fair trial. In cases of habitual constipation Electric Bitters cure by giving the needed tone to the bowels, and few cases long resist the use of this medicine. Try it once. Large bottles only fifty cents at Robbins & McCord's drugstore. 2

Rebecca Wilkinson, of Brownsvalley, Ind., says: I have been in a distressed condition for three years from Nervousness Weakness of the Stomach, Dyspepsia and Indigestion until my health was gone. I had been doctoring constantly with no relief. I bought one bottle of South American Nervine, which did me more good than any $50 worth of doctoring I ever did in my life. I would advise every weakly person to use this valuable and lovely remedy; a few bottles of it has cured me completely. I consider it the greatest medicine in the world." Warranted the most wonderful stomach and nerve cure ever known. Trial bottles 15 cents. Sold by Robbins and McCord druggists Auburn Ind. 34tf

The Discovery Saved His Life.

Mr. G. Caillouette, Druggist, Beaverville, Ill., says: 'To Dr. King's New Discovery I owe my life. Was taken with Lagrippe and tried all the physicians for miles about, but of no avail and was given up and told I could not live. Having Dr. King's New Discovery in my store I sent for a bottle and began its use and from the first dose began to get better, and after using three bottles was up and about again. It is worth its weight in gold. We won't keep store or house without it." Get a free trial bottle at Robbins & McCord drug store. 2

The Echo.

Why suffer with rheumatism, neuralgia, gout, sciatica, lumbago, and those other dread blood diseases, glandular swellings, old sores, eczema, scrofula, etc., when Infallible Scotch Cure will cure you? The echo answers "Why," when a trial is so easily made of its virtues. This great Scotch cure cures when all other remedies have failed. When the Heart is Affected

By Rheumatism or any of the muscles near that organ, it is like tampering with an electric wire, for death may come at any moment. If life is worth it, do not hesitate, but get Dr. Drummond's Lightning Remedy. Send $5 to the Drummond's Medicine Co., 48 Maiden Lane New York, and they will send you two large bottles, enough for one month's treatment, by first express. It is not as quick as electricity, but it will save your life if you take it in time. Agents Wanted. 27 28

At four Months Old.

Last June Dick Crawford brought his twelve-months old child, suffering from infantile diarrhœa, to me. It had been weaned at four month and had always been sickly. I gave it the usual treatment in such cases but without benefit. The child kept growing thinner until it weighed but little more than when born, or perhaps ten pounds. I then started the father to giving Chamberlain's Colic Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy. Before one bottle of the 25 cent size had been used a marked improvemen was seen and its continued use cured the child. Its weakness any puny constitution disappeared and its father and myself believe the child's life was saved by this remedy. J. T. Marlow, M D, Tamaroa, Ill. For sale by Robbins and McCord. 27 30

THE EDITORS

The state democratic Editorial Association met at Maxinkuckee yesterday and day before, that being the date and place of its regular semi-annual meeting. The attendance was unusually large from all over the state for the prospect of a discussion of the money question had called out veterans who had not met with us for years. Then there were many new members who are beginning to take an interest in the discussion of the questions that come before the society every year, as well as some recent converts, like C. H. Bliss, late populist candidate for the legislature from this county. The new converts are generally the most enthusiastic. The papers read were excellent and timely and were listened to with the deepest attention. From the first there was a quiet struggle going on between extreme silver men and the more conservative bi-metallists as well as with the extreme gold-basis men. It was soon seen however that no extreme measure would be accepted, as the conservative men were greatly in the majority, and their numbers were soon increased by free silver men who believed it unwise to make the attempt. So when the papers had all been read the discussion came to an end. The paper of the president, Mr. Boyd, was very moderate and conservative for he admitted that while he favored silver, it was not advisable to back up free coinage. Mr. Shanklin who was expected to speak in favor of free coinage, did not come, but sent a letter in which he presented his argument in favor of it. The ablest paper came next. It was by Jacob P. Dunn, one of the editorial writers on the Indianapolis Sentinel. He was for several years our state librarian and what he don't know about financial matters over the world, is a small matter. He held his hearers in almost breathless attention to the close. He was followed by J. B Stoll of the South Bend Times in an able paper, which of course leaned to free silver, and was inclined to criticise President Cleveland. Then followed resolutions in regard to the death of Eli W. Brown, and another of thanks to the popular old Vandalia road for generous favors, and next was the report of the committee on resolutions. Many had expected there would be a wild time over this report, but W. C Ball of the Terre Haute Gazette arose on the call and had a set of resolutions advising harmony and moderation and declaring an abiding confidence in the wisdom and prudence of the democracy, and to the effect that the able and patriotic manner in which democratic administrations had always handled these delicate and difficult questions proved we could trust the party and its papers and leaders to do the proper thing when the proper time came. The report was very witty with all its earnestness and elicited round after round of hearty laughter and applause.

RESOLUTIONS.

"Whereas, There appears to be a laarge and varied assortment of opinions on the money question among the members of the association, and each one seems to think all that is needed to bring his brothers into agreement with him is further study of the question on the part of the latter, and as each and all doubtless concur in this, therefore.

Resolved, That, as in the regular pursuit of their profession, the several members of this association are frequently compelled to form and express opinions on intricate questions, without such opportunity for consideration of them as is desirable, it is a positive pleasure to them in their collective capacity not to be compelled by any present exigency to make formal declaration of positive principles.

"Resolved, That nothing should be done any day that does not have to be done on that day and that can be done better tomorrow.

"Resolved, That if one does not really have to cross a swollen stream at once, or if the bridge spanning it is shaky and in need of repair, and is being repaired and if, besides, the stream is falling and gives promise of being in such condition that it may be forded or crossed dry-shod before one needs to be on the other side it is the part of wisdom to camp under the olive branches in the shady grove on this side of the river.

"Resolved, That Maxinkuckee is a charming summer resort, and that the band which plays on the boat is without a pier, and ought to be until it has as much time to practice as the members of this association propose to take for the study of the financial question.

"Resolved, That we denounce every thing that the republicans have done or left undone, and point with pride to all democratic policies and achievements; that we are proud of them individually and collectively, but as both lists are too long for enumeration at a session limited to two days, the members are advised to fill them in, and herewith, at our leisure, give leave to print from time to time."

The resolutions were written by W. C. Ball, of the Terre Haute Gazette, and the committee waf unanimous in recommending them. Before he began reading them Mr. Ball said the committee realized that there was dynamite in the convention. It had been careful to exclude matches, and had trod lightly. "I feel sorry for the man who cannot stand on the platform we have adopted," said he.

Immediately after adjournment this afternoon twenty five editors out of the seventy-five present met and signed a call for a meeting of free silver advocates, the object being to form a free silver league. The time for the meeting was left blank, but the sentiment was in favor of organizing the league at an early day. The membership will not be confined to editors, but democrats only will be admitted.

SAY : :

HOW MUCH DO YOU OWE?

Who holds your mortgage? How much interest are you paying? Do you owe a building loan association anything? If you do, how much interest are you paying them? Unless you are better posted than the majority of people who have such loans, you cannot tell. You think you are paying 6 per cent. Do you know (of course not) that you are paying at least 12 per cent. If you think not, just figure it out yourself. Now then, are you not paying 6 per cent interest and 6 per cent premium? Certainly. Well now don't you know that premium and interest are the same thing—its all interest. Can you afford to pay 12 per cent interest to a loan association when even your banks only charge 8 per cent and you think they are charging too much, and when do you expect to have your loan canceled or paid off in full? You have been told 72 or 78 months. Now then, we undertake to say that it will take you 100 months, if you will call on us we will show you so you will be satisfied that we are right. Now then, we are prepared to loan you money on monthly installment plan for 8 per cent, we charge you no membership fee and you do not have to make three or more payments in advance so that if on account of insufficient security or bad title your loan is rejected you will not lose one cent. You pay nothing unless your loan is granted. We are making farm loans at from 3 to 5 per cent with privilege of partial payments.

ANOTHER THING!

There is scarcely a day but what there is some traveling agent for some building loan association in Auburn soliciting business, selling stock upon which they charge you a membership fee of from 50 cents to $1.00 per share, which amount goes to the agent and you never get back this money thrown away. If you will call on us we will take your application for all the stock you want in the BEST (we can prove it) building loan association in the state the INDIANA MUTUAL OF INDIANAPOLIS, and charge you NO MEMBERSHIP FEE AT ALL. This is certainly fair. If you have any investment stock in any association just write them a letter and ask them the withdrawal value of same, their reply will probably open your eyes. What would you say if you would deposit $8.00 per month in your bank for one year and wanted to withdraw the same and they would offer to pay you only about $80? The bank would only have to do this in one case to be compelled to retire from business. Now you pay ten dollars membership fee and 8 dollars for 12 months making 108 dollars, you lose the 10 dollars membership fee and 10 cents per share each month for expenses, making 12 dollars, or a total of 22 dollars loss upon which you would receive 6 per cent interest for average time on 96 dollars, making 2 dollars and 88 cts. from 22 dollars would leave you a loser of 19 dollars and 12 cents. In our association your stock is worth alll you have paid in, with its interest added, so that upon withdrawal you do not get less than you paid. We want the people of Auburn to become familiar with this matter, and would like to have any that are interested to call and talk with us, we can give you some pointers.

We are still in the Real Estate, Insurance and R. R. Ticket business.

Foot Smashed.

Last Saturday as Mrs. John Treesh was doing up her Saturday's work she had the misfortune to smash her foot. She was carrying a large jar filled with something and accidentally let it drop It struck her foot and smashed it quite badly. She at once attempted to get to a chair to sit down and in the act fainted and fell. Her husband being out side came in and assisted her to the lounge. She was unable to be out all day Saturday but to-day we learn she is able to be around but cannot step on her foot.

Western Writers.

Dr. Lida Leasure came down from Angola this morning, and went west on the noon train over the Wabash, on her way to Warsaw. She goes to attend the tenth annual meeting of the Association of Western Writers, which begins there to-day and closes on Friday. It will be a meeting of the highest literary interest as there are several poems, essays, etc, for each day, Mrs. Leasure reads a poem, and S. B. McManus of Lagrange county, has a dialect poem, for the occasion. Among those on the program whose names are familiar to our people, are W. P. Fishback of Indianapolis, W. H. Venable of Cincinnati, Prof. John Clark Ridpath, Will Cumback, and Mr. Pfrimmer of Kentland, Gen. Lew Wallace, J. Whitcomb Riley, and other well known authors all over the Central and Western states and Canada, are members of this association. The meetings are at Spring Fountain Park.

NEW PHYSICIAN.

Dr. W. W. Carey celebrated the Fourth by putting out his sign as a practicing physician, at the rooms in front of the COURIER office. They are the rooms that were formerly our business office. Dr. Carey comes to our city with the reputation of being a thoroughly posted physician, and added to his other training, is his experience of two years in the Western Reserve Dispensary, at Cleveland, O. This gave him practical work which will prove valuable in his general practice. The Dispensary is the largest west of New York City and numbers its patients by the tens of thousands, annually. The Doctor has located to practice here and asks for a share of the patronage.

GROVER IN LUCK

Wabash for Garrett

For some time there has been a project on foot to give Garrett the advantage of another outlet into the world. It is to secure for the town a station on the Wabash road, at the nearest point of its approach at the southeast. It may not have occurred to many, that this point is very near to Garrett. But if we notice the direction the road takes as it goes to the southwest from the Junction we can see that it is not any farther off at the nearest point that the Junction is from Auburn. In a straight line from the city limits of Garrett to the nearest point on the Wabash, is one mile, which means a less distance from the Ross House, than that from the Public Square in Auburn to Auburn Junction. And we think nothing of keeping up a hack line to Auburn Junction. The difficulty at Garrett, however, is to get a road in a staight line to the nearest point as that would mean a change in the roads, similar to our "Avedue" to the Junction. But the matter has been taken up by the Garrett folks and fully discussed. A meeting was held and a delegation sent to headquarters at Detroit. At least Mr. Miner, of the Herald, was up there and had an interview with the railway officials, and the Detroit papers gave very full account of the matter. As a station on the Wabash, Garrett would of course give that road and the city of Detroit a part of its patronage, and this would of course, be quite an object, both to the city and the road. So, we will not be surprised to see the station built. Some advantages of a local character might also result, though this would not be so marked. For the communication between Auburn and Garrett would still be beset with difficulties. There would be the same hack fare to the Junction, and another from the new station to Garrett. The great, and perhaps only advantage to Auburn, would be the additional mail facilities, giving us another mail to and from our neighbor town. This being the case, Auburn will not be apt to put in any objections. In fact it is not of sufficient interest to us to induce us to take an active part either way. But we hope to see the new project carried out. It will result in advantages to both towns.

A Voice From The Horse.

A correspondent in Dumb Brutes interprets the horse language as follows:

Don't check my head too high.

Don't cut off my tail and then expect me to stand easy without a fly net.

Don't clip the hair off my ankles and legs.

Don't burn my feet when I am shod.

Don't yank the bit in my mouth.

Don't say back when you mean stand still.

Don't expect me to eat when I have a bad tooth.

Don't hitch me out in the cold with the wind blowing hard.

Don't leave a shoe on me more than four weeks.

Don't trot me down hill.

Don't be afraid to water me when I am warm. Do you ever drink when you are warm?

Don't whip me when I am afraid.

Don't fill me full of useless medicines when I am sick.

Don't blister me all over when I am lame. Let me rest.

Don't let someone drive me if they do not know as much about going as I do, especially a man who is drunk.

Don't forget to feed me three times a day.

Don't call me 13 years old, when I am 26, and expect me to be as good as ever.

Don't hit me over the head.

Don't put blinders on me if I go well without them.

Don't forget my salt.

Don't run me if I have the colic. How would you like the treatment yourself?

Don't burn the bars of my mouth and think you are curing the lampas.

Don't let some smart Aleck make a trotter of me.

Don't work me all day without lifting my collar.

Don't forget to clean the sweat off at night, instead of waiting until the next morning.

Don't put a nasty, mean bit in my mouth.

Don't leave me in fly time without covering me with a light blanket.

Don't allow my stable to be too light in the summer time.

All For Love.

A girl down in Texas a few days ago, had a fellow she loved very much. Now, she has none. Her father did not like the young man, but he failed to make her agree with him. Of course. Then the old man tried strategy. He told the girl that her young man had a number of other girls on his string and was only making a fool of her. He told her that the only way to find whether he loved her was to ask him to let her put a rope around his neck and pull him up to a limb, If he really loved her, he would trust her that much. One evening as the couple were walking out, the plan was tried. The young man readily agreed to let her test his love, for he was earnest. He stood under a suitable tree while the girl stepped into the bushes, where the father was concealed, and got the rope. She fixed it about the young fellow's neck, threw it over a limb and began to pull him up Her heart softened and she was about to let him down, when the father sprang out, and caught the rope, telling her the old lies about the young man's perfidy. Maddenedby by his words she helped pull the rope, and when he was up off the the ground, the old man tied it around the tree and would not let her loosen it. In a few minutes the fellow was dead. Then in her fear of exposure, she helped conceal the body, It was found, however, and she has confessed. It is perhaps the strangest case in the annals of crime.

TABLE TALK.

The woman interested in her home will find much of value in Table Talk, the July issue of which is now before us scintillating with the latest recipes, menus, fashions, novelties and ideas which are a constant delight to the progressive housekeeper. A few of the subjects treated in this number are "Infan-Feeding," by H. H. Hawxhurst, "Housekeeper's Inquiries," by Helen Louise Johnson, 'The New Bill of Fare," and "Linen Novelties," by Mrs. M. C. Myer, "A Cup of Tea with Thomas Carlyle," by Howard Paul, "Fashionable Luncheon and Tea Toilets," by Tillie May Forney, and "Sandwiches up to date," by Emma P. Telford. There are also menus for every meal in the month, a market list, a seasonable talk on books and so on, all for ten cents a copy or one dolla a year. To our readers however, a sample copy, is offered, free, if they will address Table Talk Publishing Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

THE KANKAKEE MARSH RECLAIMED

[South Bend Tribune.]

The removal of the rock obstruction in the Kankakee river at Momence, Ill., has been the means of reclaiming a large portion of the immense waste known as the Kankakee marsh, and in the lower part of the valley a consequent rise of price on this land has taken place. A section in LaPorte county was recently sold for $18,000, which a few years ago would not bring one quarter that amount. The river has been lowered and the marsh dried so that the rank wild grass is fast disappearing and in its place will, before many years, be seen vast cultivated farms. The Kankakee marsh will yet be the garden spot of Indiana.

Higher.

Workmen were here to day raising the wires of the Postal Telegraph higher so as to bring them above the trees along West Seventh street. Our trees are growing so rapidly that a change has to be made every year or two. When the line first went through they used the tallest poles we had ever seen up to that date used for that purpose. Soon after they had to put a spliced piece at the top. Two or three years ago they put new poles along through town much higher than the first set and the wires were so far above the tree tops that we thought the matter settled. But to-day a number of the poles are having a sort of second story added.

Horse Ran Away.

Frank Rush and Bert Casebeer were coming home from Waterloo last even-when two teams came up behind them. The two rigs were running a race. One had two girls in, and the other had one man. They overtook Rush on the Morning Star bridge. The man in the rig alone was thrown out as he struck Rush's buggy. His rig was smashed and and the team ran down to Trout,s livery barn where they belonged. The girls struck Rush on the other side, knocking off one of his wheels. The girls and the rig were not much hurt.

Greatest On Earth.

James M Brooks, Washington Ave., St. Louis, Mo, makes affidavit that he suffered from rheumatism for years, until persuaded to try Drummond's Lightning Remedy, and that by its use he has been fully restored. He says the remedy is the greatest on earth. This is high praise, but fully warranted by other miraculous cures. If you want to be cured, send $5 to the Drummond Medicine Co., 48 Maiden Lane, New York, and they will send to your express address two large bottles of their remedy. This treatment lasts one month, and will cure any ordinary case. Agents Wanted. 27 28

INTELLIGENCE FROM ALL PARTS OF THE GLOBE.

News from Foreign Shores—Domestic Happenings—Personal Pointers—Labor Notes—Political Occurrences—Fires, Accidents, Crimes, Etc.

Struck By a Train.

An Erie freight train crashed into a crowded street car with terrible result at Niles, Ohio. Frank Wilson, a prominent young merchant, was ground into pieces, and eight other persons were probably fatally injured. The street car was crowded down with people returning from Riverside Park, a favorite summer resort. Just as the car approached the track and the engine, with a caboose attached, was seen dashing on toward the crossing, the motorman became confused and stopped the car directly on the track. The engineer saw the terrible danger ahead, but too late, and the engine crashed into the car, smashing it into splinters. Frank Wilson was caught and dragged for over 300 yards. He was torn to pieces, his head lying on one side of the track, his limbs on the other, while the body was horribly mangled. W. R. Lewis, who is head blacksmith of the Falcon Mill, will probably die.

A Trolley Horror in Ohio.

A trolley car with thirty passengers on board, became unmanageable and slid down the Franklin avenue hill, on the north side of East Liverpool, Ohio, killing one man and injuring eighteen other people. The car was manned by James Hamilton, a new motorman. The tracks were slippery after the rain and the car got out of his control. At the foot of the hill it jumped the track on a sharp curve and went over a twenty-foot embankment into a creek. The momentum was so great that one-half the car was almost buried in the sand. Hamilton, the motorman, was instantly killed, his head being crushed to a jelly. The car broke in two as it struck and several passengers fell through the floor and were plunged headlong into the creek. Several of the injured will die.

Wake of Death.

While enroute to Memphis to purchase goods Ed Lewis, a prominent young merchant of New Decatur, Ala., was taken suddenly ill aboard the M. and C. train and died before medical aid could be had. His body was sent back and buried. As the funeral cortege was passing down the street Frank Reeves, a 10-year-old boy, climbed a tree to view it. Just as the hearse approached the limb on which Reeves was perched broke and he fell to the ground, breaking his neck. When his corpse was taken home his grandfather, who was lying at the point of death, on seeing it brought into the house expired.

Both Badly Hurt.

In the village of McCutchensville, Ohio, Earl Rardon and Raymond Miller, two lads of 13, were very seriously injured by the explosion of a mixture of gunpowder and coal oil, which they had placed in the shell of a sky-rocket. When they touched a match to it an explosion occurred that was heard throughout the village. Miller was so badly injured that the flesh dropped off his face and arms. He will probably lose his eyesight. Rardon was more fortunate, but received frightful injuries. Both will recover.

Cremated His Horses.

John Bakehorn, living ten miles southwest of Wabash, Ind., shot his two farm horses, both good animals, and placing their bodies on a big pile of dry wood, cremated them. Bakehorn's crops have suffered severely this summer because of the dry weather, and his friends think constant brooding over the scarcity of feed and the cost of carrying his stock through the winter unsettled his mind. Bakehorn says he preferred to kill and burn the animals rather than sell them at a sacrifice.

Removes the Ban.

St. Louis, special: Archbishop Kain has made a decision that removes the ban placed by some priests on Grand Army funerals. Under his ruling member of the G. A. R. attending funerals may enter the church wearing their uniforms and insignia, and may conduct funerals in accordance with their ritual in Catholic cemeteries.

The Scaffold Fell.

Two workmen were instantly killed at the corner of Franklin and Madison street, Chicago, by the falling of a scaffolding. They were at work on a swinging support seventy-fire feet from the ground when the supporting ropes parted. The men's bodies were frightfully mutilated by the fail to the sidewalk.

Signed the Scale.

At the conference between iron manufacturers and the Amalgamated association at Pittsburgh, the bar and plate scale for the entire Pittsburgh district was signed without opposition. The scale is the same as that signed by the Mahoning and Shenango valley manufacturers.

Traitors Sentenced.

Berlin special: The high court at Leipsic has sentenced a Metz coal dealer named Haune, and a Sergeant in the German army, named Schreiber, respectively to four years and eight years imprisonment for betraying important military secrets to the French.

A Big Battle.

Havana special: A severe engagement has taken place between Spanish troops under command of Maj. Azner, and Gen. Antonio Mucee, insurgent commander, at the head of a large force. Two hundred and eighty of the latter were killed.

Two Boys Drowned.

Two boys, Sutton and Likens, aged about 10 years, were drowned opposite Ironton, Ohio, while bathing. Their bodies were recovered about an hour afterwards.

Got Killed Himself.

On Lower Peter Creek, in Pike County, Kentucky, George Coleman met Smith Johnson, whom he suspected, it is said, of having indicted him in court, and, pulling a pistol, opened fire upon him. Johnson replied in kind, and killed his assailant at the second fire, escaping injury himself.

Drowned in a Kettle.

The 4-year-old daughter of Robert Lanch, of 134 Mitchell street Columbus, Ohio, fell into a kettle of boiling water and was scalded to death.

Train Robbed.

San Francisco special: A Southern Pacific passenger train was held up and robbed at a point known as Riddles, in the Cow Creek canyon, between Ashland and Grant's Pass. The robbers took jewelry, money and other valuables from the passengers and rifled the mail pouches, but failed in their effort to open the express car.

Five Persons Asphyxiated.

Five people, members of the same family, were asphyxiated by gas, and were found dead at their home, 601 Cornelia street, Chicago. They were Fritz Helman, aged 36; Ida, his wife, aged 34; Fritz, aged 12; Willie, aged 8, and Hedwig, aged 4.

WRECKED

Was the Residence of Jerry Bliss at Columbus with a Dynamite Bomb.

Columbus (Ohio) special: At 11 o'clock Saturday night a dynamite bomb was thrown into the residence of Mr. Jerry Bliss, the City Director of Public Works. The explosion was a terrific one, tearing away the front porch and demolishing one of the rooms of the house. Soon afterward another bomb was thrown into a little frame church near the residence of Director Bliss. The explosion in this instance was a terrific one.

Whoever threw the bomb made away in the darkness so quickly that the indications are that he will not be captured.

What the motive was no one can definitely discover at this time. There is a theory to the effect that one of the political enemies of Mr. Bliss, perhaps a crank, is the perpetrator. There is another belief that an insane man is prowling about the city with the devilish designs that only a diseased mind can produce. The fact that a mysterious and seemingly motiveless attempt was made to burn the elegant residence of Mrs. Walter Brown, a wealthy young widow, is now recalled in support of the argument that a lunatic is the evil genius in both cases.

Tramps Seize a Lake Shore Train.

Laporte (Ind.) special: A band of eight tramps made a bold attempt to capture the east bound express train on the Lake Shore road, due in this city at 5 o'clock. When the train left the depot the tramps had taken a position between the coaches and an attempt to eject them resulted in a fierce fight between the train crew and the raiders. The conductor signaled for the train to stop when in the outskirts of the city, and after a hand to hand conflict, the tramps were thrown from the cars. This action precipitated serious trouble and shots were fired at the coaches, the shots being vigorously returned from the train, which was delayed for some time. A posse of officers soon arrived and the eight men were lodged in jail. They are desperate men and their object is surmised to be robbery, as they are all heavily armed.

Fireworks Explode.

There was an explosion of fireworks in front of the L. A. May Company's store in the Sagamore Hotel block, corner Union and Mulberry streets, Lynn, Mass., at a temporary counter erected outside the store on the sidewalk. Immediately the whole mass of fireworks was ablaze. Half an hour after the explosion the entire block, which is four stories high, of brick, and 100 feet in depth, was a mass of flames. The heat caused an explosion which blew out the plate glass front of the L. A. May company's store and injured one fireman, Sidney Greenwood, quite severely. The book-keepers in the L. A. May company's store did not have time to even save their books and accounts on the desks. Loss on building and stock $200,000.

Times are Brighter.

R. G. Dun & Co., in their Weekly Review of Trade, says: The midsummer reports from all commercial centers are of especial interest, covering the question upon which the future business depends. They indicate distinctly better crop prospects than other official or commercial accounts, a marked increase in retail distribution of products, an active demand for goods, and a general enlargement of the working force, with some advance in the wages of more than half a million hands. At the same time they show that the rapid advance in prices has somewhat checked buying of a few classes of products. In every part of the country the outlook for fall trade is considered bright.

Death Sudden and Terrible.

A special from Winona, Mo., says: This place, in point of population and business importance, the leading town of Shannon County, was totally wiped out of existence by a cloud-burst or a torrent similar in devastation. Winona is situated on the Current River branch of the Memphis railroad, 123 miles east and a little south of Springfield, Mo. It had a population of 610.

Birch Tree, eight miles west on the same railroad, with a population of 525, suffered great damage but no loss of life.

Twelve persons were drowned in Winona, and the financial loss will reach at least $60,000.

Insurgents Routed.

Havana special: Capt. Hernando of the civil guards, and Capt Mills, at the head of their respective detachments, have engaged the insurgent forces twice at Caguairan, Santiago de Cuba. The insurgents were commanded by Aldana and Sabo and lost eight killed. In addition there were more than eight insurgents wounded, including Chiefs Aldana and Juan Leon. The same opposing forces had another skirmish and the insurgents were dispersed after losing two more killed. Ten members of the insurgent band commanded by Pino have surrendered at Cartagena, province of Santa Clara.

Scared Off.

Princeton (Ill.) special: Six burglars made an attempt to rob the Ohio City Bank, the postoffice, and the hardware store of Balcom & Wilson. The safe in the hardware store was drilled and blown open, but no money was secured. A large quantity of fire arms and other articles were carried off. At the postoffice much of the mail and fixtures were destroyed and a small amount of money and stamps secured. At the bank the robbers were frightened away after five shots were exchanged between them and citizens. Sheriff Clark and a posse are on the trail of the men.

Jumped the Trestle.

While switching cars at Mingo mines, near Middlesboro, Ky., one of the coke cars, on which were standing Oley Spratt and Brakeman George Chapman, and Ike Graves, jumped the track while on a trestle and fell to the ground. Spratt was caught beneath the car as it hit the ground and was instantly killed. Chapman and Graves jumped on the opposite side from Spratt, Chapman falling to the ground, thirty feet below, and breaking both legs at the ankle, and Graves falling on the trestle and receiving painful chest and shoulder injuries.

Picked Up His Own Arm.

Charles Davis, a Lake Shore and Michigan Southern brakeman, living at Jonesville, Mich., and running in Elkhart, Ind., manifested a high degree of nerve recently. While his train was approaching Elkhart, he fell off and had his right arm ground completely off just below the shoulder. He gathered himself up, and walking up town alone hunted up a surgeon, who attended to his wants. After the operation he accompanied a party to the place where the accident had occurred and picked up the severed arm.

Aeronaut Killed.

John Cunningham, an aeronaut, was instantly killed at Winaga, Mo. He had made three successful ascensions during the day. The fourth time, when about 1,200 feet high, he cut loose but the parachute failed to open and his body was mashed to a pulp.

While inflating a balloon for an ascension, the guy rope to one of the heavy poles which held the balloon came loose, letting the pole fall, hitting Marion George on the head, mashing it to a pulp, killing him instantly.

Reservations Turned Over.

Acting Secretary Doe, of the War Department, has issued orders turning over to the Interior Department two reservations heretofore set apart for military purposes. One is on the west side of Port Townsend bay, about three miles from Port Townsend. It contains 615 acres. The other is the military reservation of Fort Marcy, New Mexico, and contains something more than seventeen acres.

Blown to Pieces.

John Haupt, a gunner at the National Soldiers' Home, Marion, Ind., was blown to pieces by the premature discharge of a cannon while loading. He had just started to give the national salute of 44 rounds, it being on the second shot that he was killed. The cause is in doubt, it being claimed that the gun had not been properly cleaned after the first shot. Haupt was 65 years of age, and had served in the regular army as artillery man for 15 years, and had been firing the sunrise and sunset gun at the Home for the past three years.

He Guessed He'd Die.

"Boys, I guess I will lay down and die," was the apparently jocular remark made by William Cooligan, an inmate of the Soldiers' Home, at Dayton, Ohio, as he stretched his limbs out on a cot. He had just returned from the dining hall, where he had eaten a hearty breakfast. Half an hour later it was discovered that Cooligan was dead. He was 66 years old, and a member of the Seventy-third Pennsylvania Regiment. He was a man of good habits, and well liked among his comrades.

Hanged to a Tree.

Dento (Md.) special: Marshall E. Price, who was recently convicted of the murder of Sallie E. Dean, the 14-year-old school girl in February, and sentenced to be hanged, was taken from the jail here and hanged to a tree in the jail yard. Price begged piteously of the jail officers that they protect him when the crowd of strange men battered down the door of the prison, but the jailers, seeing that they were outnumbered fifty to one, could do nothing and offered little resistance.

Wellington, Ohio, Wiped Out.

Cleveland special: Wellington, Ohio, a prosperous town, thirty-four miles from Cleveland on the Big Four Railroad, is reported to have been entirely destroyed by fire. Help was asked from this city, and an engine and hose cart responded to the call. Wellington has a population of 7,000 and is the biggest cheese, butter, and general produce marketing center in the State.

Fire and Lava.

Naples special: The crater of Mount Ætna is again pouring forth fire, smoke and lava. Mount Vesuvius is also in a ttate of eruption, and is reported to be in worse condition than Mount Ætna. The town of Resina, in South Italy, built over the ruins of Herculaneum, is threatened. Villages in the vicinity of both volcanoes are believed to be in danger.

Elevator Burned.

Bartlett Kuhn & Co.'s elevator was entirely destroyed by fire at Terre Haute, Ind. Nine cars of grain and ten cars of merchandise on side tracks were burned. Mr. Kuhn says the elevator had a capacity of 50,000 bushels of grain and that more than half that amount was in the elevator. The building was valued at $10,000. The loss is covered by insurance.

Shot to Death.

A special from Nogalas, Ariz., says: Four of the five men who held up the paymaster of the Nascari Copper Company on June 13, were captured by the authorities of the State of Sonora, Mexico, and they were taken to the scene of their crime and shot to death, under the new law providing for the punishment of train and stage robbers in Mexico.

Murder and Suicide.

At Terre Haute, Ind., James M. Ryan, 35 years old, a blacksmith, shot and killed his wife and then killed himself. Domestic trouble was the cause. She was preparing to go to her mother's home at Bloomington, Ill., at the time of the shooting. After shooting her, Ryan threw her down stairs to the sidewalk. She died in a few minutes.

Four Boys at One Birth.

Mrs. Abraham Wilson, wife of a farmer on Buffalo Creek, Nicholas County, West Virginia, gave birth a few days ago to four children—all boys. The children are all of the same weight, and appear to be perfectly formed. The mother of the quartet of diminutive mountaineers is doing well.

Capt. Paul Webb Killed.

A special from Cour D'Alene, Idaho, says that Capt. Paul Webb, the swimmer, lost his life near there in an attempt to ride down a 300 foot chute into Lake Cour D'Alene in his barrel. The barrel left the chute and struck the ground. His spinal column was broken.

Infernal Machine.

A man named Patrick Redmond found a tin canister containing an infernal machine on Boyne street, Dublin, Ireland. Redmond, in attempting to open the canister, caused the machine to explode, which killed him on the spot.

A Promise to Protestants.

A letter received in this country recently from Cardinal Gibbons assures Protestants that they shall have religious liberty in South American countries.

Speaker Meyer Dead.

Speaker Meyer of the Illinois House of Representatives died at Freeport, Ill. His death was unexpected, although he had been ill for some time.

JOY TURNED TO WOE.

MANY ACCIDENTS ON THE NATION'S BIRTHDAY.

A Score Are Dead and Others Will Die—Toy Pistol and Crackers Reap a Harvest—Four Hundred Fall with a Bridge.

Celebration Costs Lives.

Press telegrams indicate that the national holiday was generally observed throughout the country, and attendant to the celebration were the usual number of fatalities and accidents. The pistol of commerce and the toy pistol got in its work in the death list, many in the roll being victims of this deadly machine. Firecrackers came next in the list, with a number to their credit. Then came stray bullets, persons being hit at various times and places by shots from instruments held by cheerful idiots who shut their eyes and blazed away. Torpedoes hurt few persons, while the rocket list is small.

Five persons dead and thirty-three injured was the record in Chicago. The dead were not all killed on the day itself, however. Three were victims of the day before, and one fell dead, presumably from heart disease, while watching the celebration, and one man was drowned. At Marion, Ind., while firing a cannon at the Soldiers' Home John Haupt, an old artilleryman and a soldier in the regular army for seventeen years, was killed by a permature discharge. During the progress of a ball game at Hinckley, Ill., Peter Anderson's 6-year-old daughter was struck in the stomach by a foul ball, causing her death. At Kangley, Ill., a man named Mozener had one leg taken off by the explosion of a small cannon. In East St. Louis, two serious accidents happened on account of the celebration, and both will probably result fatally. Eddie Laumann and Willie Strathman, sons of prominent citizens, attempted to fire off a can of powder with a short fuse. In firing a salute at Milwaukee a cannon exploded and an old soldier was killed at the Old Soldiers' Home. A shotgun in the hands of Charles A. Hull, a son of Silas Hull, a prominent farmer residing near Attica, Ohio, was accidentally discharged, fatally injuring his mother and his 11-year-old sister. William Boller, 7 years old, of Tiffin, had both eyes put out by the explosion of a toy cannon. A Sioux Falls cannon improvised from a piece of gas-pipe exploded, breaking $2,000 worth of plate glass and dangerously injuring Richard Peterson, a boy who happened to be standing near by. At Dubuque, Henry Hilderbrand lost three fingers by the explosion of a torpedo, and William Callahan, 17 years old, had part of his face torn off by a cannon cracker.

FIFTY ARE INJURED.

Three Hundred Persons Break Down a Bridge at Bristol, Ind.

At Bristol, Ind., while about 300 of the population were gathered on a bridge spanning the St. Joseph River watching a tub race, 100 feet of the sidewalk of the bridge went down, carrying with it 100 persons. The fall was about thirty feet and the iron fell on many.

As the racers got into their tubs and prepared for the race the immense crowd on the bridge grew wildly enthusiastic. As the crowd surged up against the railing there came a fearful crash and roar. The whole side of the bridge gave way, slowly at first, and then with frightful speed, carrying the panic-stricken and shrieking crowd down forty feet to the river. For a moment there was almost absolute silence before the horrified crowd on the banks could realize what had occurred. Then as the cries and groans of those who had struggled out of the water were heard the farmers and their wives rushed to the rescue. The water is only five feet deep at this season and the rescuers hurried into the river with boards, tubs, and anything that would help the wounded to keep afloat. As rapidly as possible they were carried to the shore, while those who escaped injury scrambled out and assisted in the work.

Messengers were hurried away for doctors and surgeons and every house in the town of Bristol was turned into a hospital. When the surgeons made a hurried examinatfon they found thirty-eight people laid out along the shore and in the residences, many of them insensible. Broken legs and arms, hands smashed, and serious bruises were found to be the injuries in the majority of cases. The bridge which gave way has been used for years. Only last spring it was repaired, and considered able to bear any strain that might be put upon it.

Thugs on a Picnic Train.

In an attempt to murder the crew of a Santa Fe picnic train as it pulled out of Chicago by eight members of the "Henry street gang" a conductor was wounded and two of the thugs bruised and beaten seriously. Over twenty shots were fired by members of the gang and the passengers were terrorized and several women fainted.

Many Are Hurt at Buffalo.

While the riders were taking the track of the five-mile handicap in the bicycle races at the Buffalo, N. Y., driving park a section of the grand stand fell in. It caved from the very center of the stand, taking with it a section stairway, two private boxes and about sixty people.

HARRINGTON IS OUT.

Chief of the Weather Bureau Is Removed by the President.

Professor Mark W. Harrington is no longer chief of the United States weather bureau. He has been removed by President Cleveland, after declining to hand in his resignation. The cause of his removal is ascribed to incompatibility of temper between Secretary Morton on the one hand and Professor Harrington on the other. Mr. Harrington was appinted four years ago by President Harrison, and, almost from the first day that Secretary Morton took charge of the agricultural department, two years ago last March, there has been friction between him and the chief of the weather bureau. So severe has been the strain in their relations, it is understood they had held no personal communication with each other for more than a year, but that their correspondence had been confined almost entirely to missives of the most severely official style.

The difficulties came to a climax soon after the change of administration, when an investigation was instituted by Secretary Morton into the business affairs of the weather bureau, the results of which did not implicate Professor Harrington in any way. This, however, did not ease the strain between him and the Secretary, and it is well understood that for nearly two years the chief of the bureau has had practically nothing to do with the routine management of his office, which has been governed almost entirely from the department. It is no surprise to those who are well informed that the difficulties have now culminated in the summary removal of Professor Harrington, as it is known that he has steadfastly refused to resign.

FIELD ON FIRE TWO MONTHS.

Peculiar Phenomenon Near Indianapolis—Was Once a Swamp.

A field which has been burning ceaselessly for two months is the remarkable phenomenon presented by a farm adjacent to the village of Maywood, near Indianapolis. This field is not a towering Vesuvius, but is rather a valley, and from its deepest part comes the smoke that some believe is the precursor of a worse flame that may reduce the village in the number of houses if not in the number of persons.

Two months ago smoke was seen coming from the ground on a lowland spot of the Campbell farm. It was thought strange by those who saw it, but it was believed to be nothing more than the smoldering remains of some fire. But day after day the smoke ascended or blew a great distance, clinging, although treacherously, to the ground. After a week or so farm hands passing the field saw flames mingling with the smoke. They investigated and found the dry grass and black earth on fire. Sticks were driven into the ground and it was discovered that for a depth of from two to four feet the earth was absolutely reduced to ashes.

The field in which this peculiar fire is burning is a bottom field of black earth that shows clearly its vegetable origin. Those who have lived at the village for years say that twenty years ago the field was a swamp, seemingly ages old, and that it was years before even cattle could be suffered to tread it in search of pasture food. Recently attempts have been made to cultivate it, but none was made this year. The field looks as though a giant mole had gamboled under its surface, for it is ridged with tunnels, whose upper sides sometimes assume the prominence of miniature mountains. The manner in which the fire is breaking out is evidence of its subterranean origin. So complete has the destruction of the earth and grass been in the district patches that the little portions where yellow, withered grass may be look like oases in a desert.

DEATH IN THE STORM.

WIND AND RAIN CAUSE AWFUL HAVOC.

Town of Winona, Mo., Wiped Off the Map and Eleven Persons Drown—Pleasure Party Goes Down to Death in Lake Geneva.

Swept by a Flood.

Eleven persons were killed, eight others are missing, twenty or thirty were hurt, and thirty houses were demolished by a flood which all but swept the town of Winona, Mo., out of existence Friday night. Not in the history of Missouri has such an awful story of terror and destruction been told as that which comes from the little town, and Saturday its inhabitants were wandering about in despair, some homeless, many with relatives or friends dead or missing, and all almost dazed by the awful calamity from which they had emerged. The dead are: Maggie Cannon, Mrs. Clara Crawford, Myrtle Crawford, little daughter of Mrs. Clara Crawford; the Rev. G. W. Duncan, Mrs. G. W. Duncan, wife of the Rev. G. W. Duncan; Miss Mattie Duncan, daughter of the Rev. G. W. Duncan; John Norris, George Nevins, Mrs. Nevins, mother of George Nevins; Miss Norma Nevins, sister of George Nevins; May Wright.

The residents of the village were caught totally unawares by the cloudburst. The evening had been calm, with no sign of an approaching storm with the exception of fitful flashes of lightning far off on the horizon, which, if given a thought, were attributed to the heat, instead of being set down as the precursor of a storm that was soon to wreck the town and engulf human life in its terrible sweep. About 9:30 o'clock rain began to fall, but it was so slight that the few who had not retired for the night did so, thankful for the needed showers. The rain rapidly increased in valume, swelling Pike creek to a flood. Then came the cloudburst, and within an hour the village was ruined and eleven of its citizens were inanimate objects, being dashed and buffeted by the debris as it was hurried down the valley by the seething waters.

Pike creek runs through the corner of the town from west to east. A few miles west several smaller creeks and valleys empty into it and the torrents of water all joined the main stream and burst upon the town at 10 o'clock. There was no time for escape. Within a half hour the village for a space of a quarter of a mile square was covered with water to a depth of four feet. Frame houses went crashing down into the torrent as the foundations were washed away. High above the roaring of the storm and the whistling winds arose the screams of the terror stricken people, awakened from their slumbers to battle with death. Vivid flashes of lightning illumined the scene and added a ghastly pallor to the white faces of the victims as they struggled for a footing in the mad flood. Children could be heard calling for their parents until their cries were forever stilled by the relentless waters. As the smaller structures were washed down families were separated and people could be seen on drifts, floating down to what for many of them was certain death. Hardly a building in the entire town with the exception of those in the suburbs on high ground escaped the flood. A few years ago the village was almost destroyed by fire, only a few houses remaining at that time to mark the site. Reports from surrounding villages indicate that great damage has been done elsewhere, although there are no reports of loss of life.

Pleasure Party Drowned.

A heavy storm passed over Lake Geneva, Wis., Sunday afternoon about 4:30 which unroofed buildings and demorlized shade trees. The hail broke a large amount of glass and ruined corn and what little fruit there was. The steam launch Dispatch was chartered just before the storm by a party consisting of Father Hogan and Miss Hogan, of Harvard, Ill., and Dr. John E. Hogan, assistant superintendent of the Elgin, Ill., insane asylum, wife and child. The boat was in charge of John Preston, a reliable young man. They were caught by the storm and the boat was swamped and all on board were drowned. The body of Miss Hogan was found floating near Kaye's Park.

It is reported that four men who were out in a boat near Waukegan were drowned in the storm. The storm over the State was severe in sections. It passed to the north and south of Milwaukee, but did no damage in the city, although from meager reports received from the State it must have done considerable damage to property and crops.

A furious wind and rain storm struck Chicago Sunday afternoon just before 6 o'clock and raged for an hour, leaving death, injury and destruction in its wake on land and sea. The wind howled across the lake and through the streets at a 50-mile an hour gait, and for a few moments it looked as if a well-developed Western twister was about to turn itself loose on the city. One man was drowned by the capsizing of a small boat and a number of others had narrow escapes from a like fate.

Ten Killed in Georgia.

A terrific cyclone swept across Eatonton and Morgan County, Ga., about 4 o'clock Sunday afternoon. Meager accounts only have been received. At Willard's station on the Middle Georgia and Atlantic Railroad every house was torn to pieces. Henry Adams, white, and Robert Harding, colored, were killed outright. Buildings, fences and crops on the Martin plantation were carried away. Over in Morgan County Andrew Perry's farm buildings and house were blown down. Perry and his family were buried in the falling timbers. Perry is injured internally and will probably die. His wife is in a critical condition. The home of James Collier was demolished and two of his children were mangled by the wreck. Full reports cannot be obtained until daylight. Twenty persons are known to have been badly injured, and the list of fatalities will hardly be less than ten.

CHAPTER XIX.

"Hilda," cried Lord Bayneham, when he saw his wife, "what have you been doing? Late hours and dancing do not suit you. You are like a drooping lily this morning. Look at Barbara—she is blooming like a rose."

Miss Earle smiled at her cousin, but looked anxiously at Lady Hilda.

"I am afraid all this gayety has been too much for you," she said kindly. "You look very ill. Rest to-day, and I will do all I can to supply your place."

Lady Hilda was thankful for the respite and gladly consented to return to her own room until dinner time, when she would be obliged to appear among her guests.

"Pauline tells me you went out early for a walk," said Lord Bayneham. "If I had known it, you should not have gone alone."

"I did two things," she replied, trying to speak indifferently, turning her fair, startled face from him. "I went for a walk, and called to see a sick woman who has been lying ill for some time at the Firs cottage. She died while I was there."

"Good little Samaritan," said Lord Bayneham; "but Hilda, darling, although I love your charity, remember you are not strong. It is seeing all that misery that has made you ill to-day. Be good in moderation."

She looked at him wistfully; how little he knew, how little he dreamed who it was she had been to see!

How little he thought the young wife whose comfort he was studying in that sumptuous room was a convict's daughter! If he knew it, surely he would send her from him and never see her more.

Lord Bayneham piled up soft downy cushions on the couch; he lowered the blinds and placed the pretty little stand by her side.

A vase of rare exotics stood upon it, filling the room with a summer breath of fragrance.

"Shall I read to you now?" he asked. "Barbara and my mother can keep every one amused; or would you like to be alone?"

"Read to me, if you will be so kind," she replied, for she dreaded being alone again; she knew thinking would almost become madness.

The young earl sat by her side; unconsciously one hand lingered on her golden hair, where lately her mother's dying hand had laid. He read in a soft, low voice. She drew his hand from her hair and pressed it to her lips. She would have given the world, poor child, to have told him her secret. He looked so calm and strong; even should he send her from him, as unworthy of his name, it would be better than the slow torture of suspense she must undergo; but the vow made to her dying mother sealed her lips. Of a deeply religious and reverent nature, it seemed to her a sacrilege to dream of breaking it.

Wave after wave of thought rushed over her heart and mind while the soft tone of her husband's voice sounded like a soothing melody in her ears. Wearied and tired, and exhausted by want of sleep and grief, the violet eyes closed gently, and Lady Hilda for a time forgot all her sorrows.

Lord Bayneham saw that she had fallen asleep; he closed his book and watched the fair young face he loved so well. Half an hour passed, and then a change came over the sleeper. He saw her lips quiver, while long-drawn sighs parted them; then she started up, crying, "It was not my fault, Claude, I knew nothing of it. Do not send me away!"

"My darling," said her husband, gently, "you are dreaming. What is the matter?"

"I thought you were angry with me," she said, confusedly.

"Which shows how foolish dreams are," said Lord Bayneham; "hills will become valleys, and the seas turn into dry land, before that comes to pass."

"Would nothing ever cause you to love me less?" she asked wistfully.

"Nothing, my pretty bluebell," he replied; "I do not think I could love you more, and I am certain I shall never love you less. Now I will leave you. You will perhaps sleep, and I have to drive over to Laneham to-day."

He held her in his arms before he went away, and kissed her pale, sweet face, murmuring words of love that filled her heart with a pleasure that was keen pain.

"If he knew," thought the poor girl; "if he knew!"

Until the dressing bell rang she lay quiet and motionless; one might have thought her dead or asleep. Once Barbara Earle came in with a glass of rare old wine. She found her awake, but with a strange expression on her face.

"Drink this, Hilda," said Miss Earle; "it is almost magical; you will feel quite well after it. Lady Bayneham asked me to bring it myself."

"She is very kind," said Hilda, wearily, the same sad thought running through her mind—"what would she say if she knew?"

"Is anything wrong, Hilda?" asked Miss Earle, looking steadily at the fair, sad face; "you are tired. But you seem to be more frightened than ill. Surely you have not seen any of the Bayneham ghosts. Claude firmly believes in them."

"I shall be well soon," said Hilda, evasively, thinking, poor child, how truly Barbara spoke. She had seen the ghost of her youth and happiness; no wonder she looked pale and scared.

When she was once more left alone, Hilda tried hard to arouse herself from the bewildered state she had fallen into.

"They will suspect me soon," she said, "unless I can recover myself."

She thought, with a cold shudder of dread, what the consequences of detection must be. She did not care for her husband's title, his rank, position, or wealth; but she loved him, and without him life would be a burden she could not bear. Hilda inherited much of her mother's loving, constant nature.

Fear helped her. She chose her prettiest dress and rarest jewels. The golden hair was entwined with gleaming pearls. With the shining of jewels it was difficult to detect how pale and changed the lovely face was. Lord Bayneham was delighted to see his wife recovered; he kept near her, and lavished delicate and loving attentions upon her.

Outwardly she regained her composure, singing when desired; moving and warming all hearts by the rich, passionate music of her voice, charming all eyes by her smiling, sweet grace, while her thoughts were ever with the dead mother who lay in the Firs cottage. She could not leave home again alone. She sent money to Mrs. Paine, but Lord Bayneham had taken alarm at her state of health, and was not willing to let her go out of his sight.

Tuesday morning came at last, when Magdalen Hurst was to be laid in her lonely grave, and Lady Hilda resolved to attend her funeral; yet she found great difficulty in doing so.

Happily the morning was bright; the sun shone as though shedding a last blessing upon the broken-hearted woman who was never to see it more. Happily, too, the countess asked her son to drive her over to Grainton Hall, so that Hilda found the greater part of the day at her own disposal.

* * * * * * *

It was a very poor funeral; there was nothing to be seen save the bearers, and Mrs. Paine as chief mourner. No one noticed the lady in the dark dress who knelt in one of the pews and wept as though her heart was breaking. There was no one to note how she stood some little distance from the grave, longing and wishing that she, too, could be at rest with her beautiful, unhappy mother.

So they laid Magdalen Hurst to rest. Of all those who had loved her in her fair youth none were present. The sun shone brightly upon her grave as it had done on the bonny woods of Brynmar, when she met her fate, so many years ago.

Some weeks afterward a plain gray stone marked the spot. It bore no name; she had wished it to be so; but that lonely grave was watered with bitter tears, shed for her who, after life's fitful fever, was now at rest.

* * * * * * *

"I am not at all satisfied with Hilda's state of health," said Lady Bayneham to Barbara Earle. "The child looks as though a cloud had fallen over her. Claude tells me she goes about visiting cottages and all that kind of thing. It must be very injurious to her."

"Did you ever try it, aunt?" asked Miss Earle, quietly.

"Cottage visiting? No, my love, I am too sensitive," said the countess, blandly. "I gave plenty away during the late earl's lifetime, but I cannot endure sorrowful sights; they make me ill."

"We will hope Hilda's nerves are stronger than yours," said Barbara. "I do not think the cottages weigh upon her mind; but she is really ill, and should have a change of air."

Lord Bayneham became seriously alarmed, and summoned one of the best physicians in England to his wife's aid; but the doctor was puzzled too.

"You tell me," he said to the earl, "that Lady Bayneham has had no trouble, no grief or anxiety preying upon her."

"I do not think she knows the meaning of grief or sorrow," said Lord Bayneham, smiling at the idea; "whatever else may ail her, it is not that."

With all his skill, the doctor could find no solution to the mystery—no reason for the weakness and languor that wore away the life of his beautiful patient. He advised change of air, and Lord Bayneham was prompt in action. By the end of that week every arrangement was made, and the earl with his young wife had begun the journey that he thought was to restore her to health and strength.

CHAPTER XX.

"The month of blossoms," "sweet maiden May," came round again, bringing all most worthy of note—men of letters, artists, poets, statesmen, beauties and belles—to the great city. London was in its pride. The season was a good one, and everyone looked busy, prosperous and happy.

In the drawing room of one of the prettiest houses in May Fair, Lady Grahame sat with her friend, confidante and companion, Miss Lowe. The house was not a grand mansion, nor was the drawing room one of the most sumptuous, but everything in it spoke of refinement and elegance. Lady Grahame herself was more elegant than beautiful. No one knew her age; and, what was still better, no one could guess it. She might be looking old for thirty, or young for fifty. Her dark hair was as luxuriant as ever; roses bloomed on her cheek and lip; there were light and fire in her dark eyes, and no wrinkle or line marred the pleasant, comely face.

She was the only child of a country squire, and early in life had married Sir Wilton Grahame, a baronet of noble descent, and through him was connected with some of the best families in England. Her mother was the daughter of Lord Delcairn, and her mother's family was a large one.

Sir Wilton Grahame died, leaving his widow a comfortable jointure; her parents died, leaving a small fortune; and Lady Grahame, while still in the prime of life, found herself free and unfettered, moderately rich, liked and courted by numerous aristocratic members of her family.

The ladies had been out shopping, and something had evidently caused Lady Grahame great pleasure, for her eyes sparkled, and her comely, pleasant face was lit with smiles.

"I tell you, my dear," she said to Miss Lowe, "that I have really never seen a more elegant or handsome man. Poor Sir Wilton had a nice face, but he was not to be compared to him; his attentions were quite marked. Mrs. Henderson tells me he has besieged her with requests for an introduction to me."

The ever-attentive Miss Lowe murmured something to the effect that it was not surprising; which little bit of incense being properly offered and accepted, Lady Grahame resumed her remarks with the same expression of well-pleased vanity.

"I am told that he is very wealthy; that he made a large fortune abroad, and goes into the best society, I know. Really I never saw a more polished or charming manner, and such a flow of spirits. I cannot remember the witty things he said, but we quite agreed upon many points. He has a very handsome house near the Park."

Miss Lowe looked amiably interested, having nothing particular to say.

"Mr. Fulton said something about calling to-morrow morning," said her ladyship; "but I do not know whether he will. We were speaking of jewels, and he said he had a very rare and beautiful opal that he would show me. I forget where it was found, but in some strange place. Do you think pale pink or light blue suits me best? I may as well look nice. We must see about a becoming toilet, my dear—something elegant, but not too young."

The morrow came, and Lady Grahame's maid found it very difficult to please her; but when the toilet was completed, she acknowledged it to be a perfect success. Every good point in her figure and face was made most of, and every defect carefully concealed. Lady Grahame smiled as she gave a long, lingering look at the mirror; Miss Lowe was observed to look unusually tired when the ceremony was over.

It was a bright May day; the windows of the pretty drawing room were open; the soft warm breeze was laden with the fragrance of mignonette, Lady Grahame's favorite flower. The blinds were skillfully arranged, so that a beautiful rosy light came from the silken hangings. It was really a pretty picture; and Lucy Grahame, in her effective toilet, was pleasant to look upon.

"I will not read, my dear," she said, when Miss Lowe suggested a book; "it makes me so sleepy and stupid. Give me that purse I am netting; you can read aloud if you choose."

But not one word did Lady Grahame hear; her thoughts were all upon the visitor whose coming she anticipated so anxiously. It was long since a blush of real pleasure had flushed her face, but there was one when she heard a loud and very imperative knock at the door. Her hand almost trembled when she rose to greet her admirer.

As Mr. Fulton stood there in the subdued light of the May sun he looked a handsome man. The careless, debonair expression was still on his face, and the easy, graceful, languid manner had not deserted him. He was the same man that beneath the shade of the woods of Brynmar had wooed Magdalen Hurst to her fate. There was no trace of that sad, passionate love story in his calm face; no trace of the felon's dock, the convict's cell, or the outlaw's doom. Bland and calm, gay and graceful, he looked like the Stephen Hurst who so many years ago was Lord Hutton's chosen friend.

"I have been impatiently awaiting the time when you gave me permission to call, Lady Grahame," said Mr. Fulton. "I never found a day and night so long before."

Lady Grahame blushed and smiled. Cool, elegant woman of the world as she was, she did not feel at her ease in the presence of this handsome stranger. He had brought the wonderful opal, and there was plenty of discussion over it. He did not say how it came into his possession, but it had been taken from the treasured gems of some great Indian rajah. He showed the wondrous gleaming colors, the ever-changing tints, the hidden fire that seemed at times to flash ruby-red from its depths.

"It should be set in pure, pale gold," said Lady Grahame, admiringly. "I have seen many jewels, but none like this."

"I hope to have it made into a ring," said Mr. Fulton, "if ever good fortune should favor my wishes and I should marry; for that jewel will show to perfection on a fair white hand."

Lady Grahame involuntarily glanced at her own as he spoke, then blushed as she found his eyes bent upon her.

There was so much to be said about the wonderful opal that it was luncheon time before the visit was half ended, and Mr. Fulton accepted Lady Grahame's invitation to join them. He was beginning to fall in love with his own scheme, and the more he saw of the lady the more sure he felt that she, above all others, was best suited for him.

During the course of conversation Mr. Fulton found that Lady Grahame seemed to know everyone, and go everywhere, and that the circles he sighed in vain to enter were open to her.

"You have been abroad for many years, I presume?" said Lady Grahame.

"Yes," said Mr. Fulton. "Many years ago I went to seek my fortune; and I made it, and now wish to enjoy it."

"I should imagine the latter to be very easy," said Lady Grahame.

"Not so easy when one is quite alone," he replied sentimentally.

As he spoke there came across him a vision of the beautiful face of his dead wife. Would anyone ever love him again as she had done?

He left Lady Grahame, resolved to win her. If she were his wife he felt that anything was possible. With her influential connections he might aspire to hold any office. Golden hopes and dreams hovered over him. Rank and position seemed to be within his grasp. His task lay straight before him; he had but to win Lady Grahame and his life would be one long success.

(To be continued.)

MR. POST'S BURGLAR.

In Spite of His Bravado He Had a Severe Fright.

"I should just like to see burglars take off any of my valuables, that's all," said Mr. Post, in the deep bass tones he reserves for family use.

"But suppose he got the drop on you?" suggested Mrs. Post. She read the newspapers and had caught some of their vernacular.

"I should like to see him—I just would," reiterated her husband in an infuriated voice; "he would never live to be hung."

"But you couldn't shoot him without a revolver!"

"Wait until he comes, Mrs. P. I have several methods at my fingers' ends, only don't you wake up and squawk. A woman always hampers a man at such a time; you just keep still and let me settle with the burglar."

"You're quite welcome," said his wife. She believed that Mr. P. would be frightened into a fit by the mere suggestion of a burglar.

As it happened, Mr. Post was awakened a few nights later by a light flashed in his face, and opening his eyes he saw a man standing over him with a black mask on, and a revolver in his hand.

"Your money or your life," said the burglar in the most burglarious manner.

"Don't shoot," implored Mr. Post, "you might kill my wife. Maria," he called in an agonized whisper, but Mrs. Post had been told too often not to "squawk" and she didn't.

"Shut up!" commanded the burglar, "and hand out the gold watch and the money under your pillow. Stop kicking your wife, unless you want me to shoot her. Shell out now, like a man."

And Mr. Post did shell out. He gave up his watch and the roll of bills he had neglected to bank, and then had the satisfaction of hearing the burglar say:

"I've half a mind to shoot you, anyhow."

"For heaven's sake, don't shoot!" gasped the frightened man.

Then the burglar laughed uproariously, pulled off his mask and handed back the watch and money to Mr. Post.

"M-a-r-i-a!"

"Yes, it's me," answered Mrs. Post, regardless of grammar. "I just wanted to show you, Mr. Post, that you aren't half as brave as you think you are; and I succeeded, too, didn't I?"

"Maria," asked Mr. Post humbly, "won't you please point the pistol the other way—it might go off."

"It can't," answered his wife; "it isn't even loaded; it's your old nickel bootjack, Mr. Post."

In consideration of his narrow escape, Mr. Post forgave his wife her burglarious escapade.—Free Press.

MARQUIS OF SALISBURY, ENGLAND'S NEW PREMIER.

FIRST WHITE HOUSE BABY.

Mrs. Wilcox Is a Clerk in the Treasury Department.

The number of children born in the White House is small, being so far only six. They have not all had happy lives nor ones pleasanter than most people's notwithstanding the glory of their infant days. The first White House baby was a girl, and made her debut during the far away reign of Jackson, back in 1830. There was a space of sixty-three years between the first and the last White House baby. Who was the first? She was the daughter of President Jackson's niece, who was the wife of Andrew Jackson Donaldson. This latter gentleman was the Thurber of his day, and performed as Jackson's private secretary. Mrs. Donaldson, Jackson's niece, not yet 20, came with her uncle to the White House to preside as its mistress. The first White House baby, Baby Donaldson, grew up and married a Mississippi gentleman—once in Congress—named Wilcox. Gen. Wilcox has now been dead full thirty years, and Mrs. Wilcox, who was the first baby to try the White House as a place wherein to be born, has, since Grant's time, been a clerk in the Treasury Department. The first White House baby is an old gray lady now, and the day Baby Esther Cleveland was born, she was busy at her desk in the treasury, not 100 yards from the last baby's cradle.

MRS. J. A. WILCOX.

Yet the first baby has witnessed much of the world. Her father, Donaldson, following his term as Jackson's private secretary, was at various European courts as Minister. He came home to plunge into politics, and once ran for the Vice Presidency. But whether it was the property of her father or her husband, or both, the fact remains that the war swept away what riches the first White House baby—Mrs. Wilcox—possessed, and President Grant gave her the position which she now holds, and which she will probably hold until death claims the first White House baby for himself.

A CONVENIENT MONEY DRAWER

Which Has Several Points That Commend It to Shop-Keepers.

The object of this money-drawer, which has just been patented, is to defeat any attempt of a purchaser to make the merchant believe that he gave him a bill of larger denomination than he really did, and to prevent errors in making change.

The drawer is provided with a sliding tray for small change, as such drawers are usually arranged. Beneath the tray it is divided into four compartments for bills, the first for ones, the second for twos, the third for fives and the fourth for tens and larger bills. Over these compartments are three separate movable covers, which slide to one side or the other, thus always leaving one compartment open, it being the object of the device to leave open the compartment in which is placed the bill just received, so that it may be in sight until the transaction is completed, and may be the only bill seen when the drawer is next opened. The position of the lids is secured by a locking device at the back, and a separate alarm-lock is fitted in the drawer.

INDIAN'S PEA-GREEN HOME.

Mas-Que-Canock's House in the Kickapoo Country a Curiosity.

On a beautiful bottom land allotment in the Kickapoo country, says the Kansas City Star, lives an Indian named Mas-que-canock. When Alloting Agent Neal went among the Kickapoos to get their names he came across this copper-colored gentleman and had great difficulty in understanding his name, so he put him down as Master Mechanic and let it go at that. And that is the name that passed before Congress and the Secretary of the Interior and went into history.

Mas-que-canock is a supercilious young buck, who has one of the best allotments in the country. On it he has built himself a beautiful pea-green house, two stories high, but all one room. He has two tiny windows in each end of the house and his door opens into his back yard, leaving the inhospitable looking blank side of the house toward the road. By the side of this new house stands the squat and squalid bark thatched wickiup, in which he lives with a following of squaws, children and dogs. In his beautiful pea-green house he stores his harness and saddles and rusty plow and other implements.

A Giant Barber Pole.

At the entrance of Point Defiance Park stands a giant fir tree at least 150 feet in height and six feet in diameter at the base. At the very apex of that sturdy trunk one day last week a shaft of lightning struck. From the point where it first struck the tree, straight down one side for fifty feet, the bark was torn away from the body of the tree, leaving bare the surface of the wood; thence as though actuated by some spirit of mischief the bolt began a spiral course around the trunk, tearing the bark off for a width of six or eight inches, twice completely encircling the tree in a distance of 100 feet before entering the ground.

THE AUBURN COURIER.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, post-office as second-class matter.

THURSDAY,.....JULY 11, 1895.

Wednesday's Daily:

Miss Della Hough, who is well known to Auburn's young people and Joseph E. Hall of Sheboygan, Mich., were married June 29th; at the home of the groom. The COURIER joins in congratulations. We clip what the Sheboygan Tribune says of the wedding: "Miss Della L. Hough, of Auburn, Ind., and Mr. Joseph E. Hall of this city were married last evening at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. William Erratt, Rev. M Knowles, pastor of the Congregational church performing the ceremony. The Tribune extends its congratulations to Joe and the hope that he and his may enjoy many years of happiness and prosperity."

The little clipping we have about the "Horse" to-day should be read by all especially by those who leave this noble animal standing on the streets all day.

J. G. Clapp has a new ad in this issue and may be found hereafter in both DAILY and WEEKLY.

PRISONERS, as they are released from state prison at the end of their sentence have always been given $15 to last them till they can get work, and so make it easier to keep from crime. But the late legislature cut off this $15 in the interest of "economy," and prisoners step out in to the world again, penniless. No comment is needed.

Misses Edna and Jessie Golintine of Marion, Ind., nieces of Mrs Swineford and Mrs. Forkner of the Swineford House arrived this afternoon and are their guests.

EX-GOVERNOR SWINEFORD of Alaska is trying to interest capitalists in the new nickel mines they are finding in Alaska. We shall soon have nickel of our own.

Mrs. A. B. Richards and children went up to Fairfield to-day to visit her parents Mr. and Mrs. Wm Buss. John and Nellie will stay there a week or two.

Mrs. John Marxer of Brookville, Ind., and Mrs. Emerson Salyer of Wauseon, Ohio, are in the city visiting relatives. Their brother Geo. L. Hurni of Bristol, Ind., is here this week, also. He is now employed in a cigar factory at that place. He returns to Bristol next week on Monday. The ladies will stay longer. Emerson Salyer is now working at the carpenter trade, and his father travels for the Standard Oil Co.

Judge Powers was down from Angola to-day on some law matter in which he is interested.

A line from Geo. Henderson at Cambridge, Mass., has been received at this office. He is located at that famous old town, and will no doubt take occasion while so near by, to see many of the historic places thereabout, including Bunker Hill, Lexington, Concord etc. His address is 1132 Mass., Ave. We will now get the COURIER to him on time.

WAGES are still being raised in various parts of the country. One cannot look into a daily paper now without reading of this or that factory that has voluntarily notified its hands that on a given day they will get a raise.

Bro. Weamer thinks that insomuch as there are nine or ten newspapers in the county we should get together and form an association and discuss their varied interests. He suggests Hamilton Lake, and the date some time in August. Why not come to Auburn? We have no summer resort but are centrally located for and easy of access for all.

THOSE democratic or would be democratic editors who are claiming a majority for free silver at the recent meeting of the State Democratic Editorial Association, will fill a long-felt want by publishing a list. By all means give a list of the free silver editors and of the "antis."

Bring the children to LaPearl's Big 10 and 20 cent railroad show to see cutest little Shetland ponies, goats, dogs and monkeys ever brought to this country. Will exhibit at Auburn, July 23.

It has been expected that the commissioners of Elkhart county would be blamed for the horrible bridge disaster at Bristol last Thursday. The bridge was built in 1868 at their order and for years has been considered an unsafe structure. Some years after the completion of the bridge, which at first contained but two driveways, a footway was added. This was done by bolting five foot beams of cast iron to one end of each of the cast iron beams which support the planking of the driveway. In time many of these bolts gave out and the point of junction between the old and the new sets of beams was strengthened by straps of malleable iron, one-half inch thick and one and three-quarters inches wide. Hence the two sets of beams were held together by these narrow straps of iron when they should have been firmly bolted.

Rev. W. L Meese left to day for Watervliet, Mich., where he will spend a month or more at Paw Paw Lake. His son-in-law, Mr Eaton, of Chicago, has a cottage there and it is by his request he goes. He will drive through.

LaPearl's greatest of the great 10 and 20 cent shows will exhibit at Auburn, July 23

Horse Ran Away

Theodore Kessler Had an Exciting Time Sunday Evening.

Times-Post.

Theodore Kessler of Spencerville, DeKalb county, was in Ft. Wayne Sunday. He brought a wheel off his bicycle for repair. In the evening he started home with a big load on. His horse frightened going past Centlivre's park and ran away. Just east of Leonard's brickyard on the road the vehicle was upset into the gutter with Kessler under it. He seemed to be badly hurt and word was sent to the police station and the patrol wagon went out and brought Kessler and the horse to Liggett's livery barn. The man was bleeding profusely from a gash above the left eye and suffered from a sprained back and bruised body, but his condition was not at all serious. The shafts on the buggy were both broken as was the dashboard, and it presented a generally dilapidated condition. The contents of the vehicle were not damaged, except a water-melon which was demolished.

Pullman Raises Wages.

It almost took away people's breath, to learn on Saturday, that the great Pullman factory, near Chicago had raised the men's wages 10 per cent., and that without having been asked to do so. A year ago everybody was fighting against Pullman because he reduced wages. And the trouble spread till riot and bloodshed alarmed the whole country. Pullman gave out that he was obliged to cut wages, because he was losing money making cars. But no one believed it. Much less did they believe he would raise wages unless compelled to. But this is the very thing he now freely does.

Drum Corps Social.

The S. O. V. Drum Corps will give a social on Henry Wolf's lawn on Wednesday evening July 17. A good supper, plenty of ice cream, cake, etc, and to help enjoy this all are cordially invited.

LaPEARLS R. R. SHOW.

LaPearl's big 10 and 20 cent railroad show will exhibit at Auburn, Tuesday, July 23, and will give two performances, afternoon and evening. You will see more and better gymnasts, acrobats, contortionists, jugglers, lady performers, horizontal bar performers, leapers and tumblers than with any other cheap price show on earth. LaPearl's superb Marine band unrivaled for its excellence the finest musical organization traveling. Twenty-four first-class musicians will give a grand noon day street parade and free open air concert in the evening at 7 p. m.

A CORRECTION.

The M. E. and Christian churches at Ashley have through an item in the COURIER assisted by the readiness of several newspapers to help along a misunderstanding, got into a little difficulty over the excursion that went from that place to Detroit. In giving a notice of the excursion, we said the proceeds would go to the purchase of a bell for the new church. We had in mind the new Christian church, and no thought of another new church, the M. E, which in fact was the "newest" church. Taking advantage of this innocent carelessness of description some one got the idea that the proceeds would go to help the new M. E. church. But about this time the pastor of the M. E. church, Mr. Welch, was applying for help from the conference for a similar purpose. This gave rise to some ill-advised talk, and the leaders of each church seem to have got quite put out about it. After various rumors had got afloat, somewhat distorted by the time they reached us here, an item appeared in the DAILY COURIER which closed by saying:

"The M. E. church was simply used to advertise the excursion."

This was wrong and we do not think such a course was intended or would have been allowed by the manager of the excursion, and we regret that we even innocently assisted to cause the misunderstanding. The excursion was for the benefit of the Christian church just as we intended to state in the first article. We trust our friends in the two churches at Ashley will believe that we had no intention to misrepresent, and hope they will let the matter drop and maintain the friendly relations that have heretofore existed between them.

Overwork, worry and nervous excitement are ruining the health of thousands. Kola gum stimulates digestion and makes steady nerves.

Miss Summer Girl:—A beautiful complexion follows perfect digestion; perfect digestion follows Kola gum.

$40 per month salary! A few energetic adies and gentlemen wanted to canvass. Above salary guaranteed. Call or address, Mrs. T. P. Scott, Auburn, Ind.

There are times when strength wanes and needs to be restored and sustained; when digestion weakens and needs assistance. Chew Kola gum and the needs of the whole system will be supplied. 27-8

People who chew Kola gum never have that "don't care" spirit and "played" out" feeling.

The Kola Nut is the product of a West African tree, and contains a highly nutritious and strengthening substance called Kola which has the marvelous properties of endowing its user with power to endure severe and prolonged physical and mental strain without feeling fatigue.

Miss Edna Davis, Mrs. Annis Leas and Mrs. Ann Culbertson of this place; Miss Lulu Bempis, of Waterloo, and Miss Mattie Gonser, started for Boston this morning over the Wabash on the 5:21 east bound train. They go to attend the national meeting of the Christian Endeavor in that city, and have promise of a very pleasant trip.

By the latest pension law those who did not get $6 a month are all raised to that figure, so that no one will now get less than that. It is estimated that this change will leave $90,000 in Indiana more than ever before.

People who chew Kola gum never feel languid, sleepy nor dull. 27-8

Geo. T. Weeks has purchased the plant of the Times office here and will move it to Edon, Ohio, where he will start the "Edon Independent." His father's family will move to Edon with him, as it is partly on account of his aged parents that he locates in this part of the country. They expect to go there as soon as rooms and a house can be secured. Dwellings are very scarce there, as the disastrous fire of a year or so ago, destroyed over 100 dwellings besides many business blocks. The business rooms are about all rebuilt but dwellings are still scarce. Mr. Weeks is a thorough newspaper man and practical printer. He is besides, a young man of exceptionally good character, and the people of Edon will find they have added a valuable and worthy man to the list of citizens. We feel sure the new venture will be a success if the business men of Edon and citizens generally, stand by it as it deserves.

Have you got $400? If so you can buy a good home in Auburn. Call at this office at your earliest convenience.

DWELLING TO RENT: Good house and lot in McIntyre's Addition. Can be rented on reasonable terms.

Albert Spurgeon, a prominent farmer of Keyser township, died at his home yesterday at 3 a. m. His case was a peculiar one About a week ago, a fire started on his farm and there was a hard fight to stop it Mr. Spurgeon was over heated and on coming to the house drank too freely of cold water, sickness was the result, terminating at last in his death as noted above.

We forgot to say that John Leasure came down with his wife from Angola, to-day. They were accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Leasure. Tom is back from Iowa for treatment as he is in poor health.

Frank Henderson, of Jackson township, son of Commissioner James Henderson, was in town this morning. He took the 9:34 Lake Shore train for Fort Wayne.

A letter from Geo. Hunderson at Cambridge, Mass., states that he is now receiving the COURIER regularly. We are glad of it. By the way, if he will attend the Christian Endeavor Meeting in Boston, near by him, he will see many DeKalb acquaintances.

The Summer Normal school began here this morning. There are three teachers, Mr. Harrison, Mr. Teeters, and Miss Servoss. Prof. Nottingham, the teacher in penmanship will begin work next Monday, July 15. There will be no extra charge for pupils in the Normal School, but anyone not in the Normal School can join his penmanship classes, by paying a fee of $1.

Morris Widney goes to Lakeside some time this week. His father, and mother reside there, and we suppose he will spend some time with them, and probably sing some for the Assembly.

Mrs. Sadie Yesbera goes to Lakeside Thursday to remain for a time. We believe she is to sing for the Assembly there. Her mother, Mrs. Hare has been there for some weeks.

ENCAMPMENT.

The official roster of the National Guards of Indiana has been issued from the office of the adjutant-general. Orders for the annual encampment have also been issued. They are in substance as follows, a copy of which Capt. Kuhlman received to-day:

"The annual camp of instruction of the Indiana national guard for the present year will be held at Fairview Park, near Indianapolis, from July 21 to 27, inclusive. No man recruited after July 4, 1895, will be permitted to be brought to camp, except by special permission from the brigade commander. Brigadier General W. J. McKee is hereby ordered to assume command of the camp.

Commanding officers will put their commands in readiness to move via route and at hours to be hereafter designated. Transportation and subsistence will be furnished by the state.

Officers and men will be paid $1 for each day from July 21 to 27, in which there is no absence from any prescribed roll call, drill of ceremony, either with or without leave, subject to all deductions allowed by law.

Officers and men joining after the tour of duty has begun, or returning home before the tour of duty has ended (except on sick leave) must do so at their own expense. Transportation, subsistence and per diem will be furnished for authorized servants or cooks for regimental messes and camp headquarters.

Transportation and subsistence only will be furnished for authorized servants of officers. Officers entitled to be mounted will be allowed $14 for the use of horses furnished by themselves with forage while in camp. To receive this allowance the quartermaster-general must be notified not later than July 10 of the intention of each officer. No transportation will be allowed for horses.

The quartermaster-general will make all necessary purchases for the proper subsistence and protection of officers and men, and forage for horses, and contract for horses for officers and batteries where not furnished. He will also furnish blankets, bed sacks and straw. Company commanders must report by July 10 the number of men they will have in camp. Any wrongful certification as to absentees will be punished by a fine of $50. The annual clothing allowance is fixed at $3.50. These orders are issued by command of the governor.

SALE OF JEWELER'S STOCK.

August 6, at Waterloo, will begin the administrator's sale of the stock of the late Charles Bassett, and continue that week.

COMMENCEMENT.

The annual commencement of the Richland township schools was held in the M. E. church, Corunna, June 25, 1895. It was a warm evening but long before time for the exercises to commence the house was filled and many were turned away. The audience was highly entertained until the appearance of the graduates, with music by Prof. G. W. Dawson, of Fort Wayne.

There were eleven graduates in the class of '95, one being only 12 years of age. Trustee M. E. Reynolds is always up with the times and gave the people of Corunna and vicinity an educational treat by employing Prof. Arnold Tompkins, of Chicago, to represent the class: Mr. Tomkins subject "The Compass of Life's Voyage," was treated in a very pleasing and able manner. He dwelt on the part the public school has in preparing the child for the duties of life. We can say it was one of the best lectures our people ever had the pleasure of listening to.

The singing was furnished by the Kendallville quartette, Miss Mae Parker, of Kendallville, and Mr. Loomis, of Corunna. The solos by Miss Folio and Mr. Loomis were well rendered and highly appreciated by the audience. Miss Mae Parker sang the "Suawnee River" in a way that called forth continued applause. Miss Parker is a fine solist; her voice shows much natural ability and good culture.

Supt. Merica presented the diplomas, at the close of the lecture, in a short and appropriate speech.

Great Sneezer.

There is no slang intended in this heading, but it is a good way to start out with what we wish to say. It is a sort of text to an "o'er rue tale" we have to tell. Our milkman, H. C. Shull gives good measure and good quality in his milk dealings. Same when he sneezes. The editor of the COURIER was walking down Main street a few evenings ago, in company with a lady. When in front of Jack Ralston's grocery, a loud combination of bang, snort and yell from just out in the street, tore the evening air to fritters and sent the lady almost of the sidewalk. She sprang to the COURIER man for protection from what she supposed a dynamite bomb. A shriek of laughter from Mr. Ralston reassured her, and looking about we saw it was only Mr. Shull who was passing in his milk wagon, and had merely sent off one of his commonest brand of sneezes. The lady has been a little nervous ever since. But the practice she got that evening fortified her for the festivities of the Fourth.

CORUNNA.

Dr. Phillips, who has but recently located in Corunna, is having a good practice right from the start. We predict for the Doctor a successful future.

Doctor Rudolph and family started for Alhambra, California, last Friday. The best wishes of the people of Corunna and vicinity go with them to their far off home on the Pacific.

Another glorious Fourth is past and gone. Whenever we look upon the stars and stripes unfurled, the emblem of our re-united country's power and greatness, it thrills us with an emotion that nothing else can do, and makes us feel like swearing anew our allegiance and loyalty to our country.

A number of our citizens spent the Fourth in Garrett and Kendallville.

The market was overstocked last week with cherries and raspberries.

George Knauer and wife visited in Garrett last week.

H. E. Hall of Pioneer, Ohio, is the guest of the family of E. L. Orr last week and this.

Jim DeLong and family spent the 4th in Lima.

Nettie Shaffer of Kendallville, visited in Corunna last week.

M. A. Boughman is helping Milo Thomas in the store during the absence of Charley Thompkins.

Young America enjoyed the Fourth with firecrackers regardless of the fact that the property owners were kept on nettles all day for fear they would burn the town up.

When a man is put in position to handle public money he cannot hit the wheat pit with impunity.

Political machines may be as well made as ever, but in some way the grist is more difficult to grind.

It is no longer Russia, as it once was, but Turkey, that is "an absolutism, tempered with assassination."

Secretary Herbert has prohibited red neckties in the navy. Perhaps he thinks they would have a tendency to inflame the enemy.

The general-in-chief of our armies is excusable for declining to define his attitude as to silver. Lead is the metal he has to deal with.

There seems to be a general belief that the "Sick Man of Europe" might be benefited by a good vigorous massage treatment with a club.

A physician who recently examined him says that Fitzsimmons' neck is growing larger. Probably it has to do so to keep up with the head.

The London papers insist that Miss Frances Willard is about to marry a wealthy Englishman. Frances herself says she isn't. But how can she tell?

A New York paper says that "it begins to look as if Mrs. Frank Leslie cherishes a deep respect for the marquis de Leuville." It do; it do; she hasn't married him.

New York City has just annexed 20,000 acres more. Size doesn't make a city great. Limitless prairies lie at Chicago's door, but the western plan is to settle first and annex afterward.

Queen Victoria says the girls in Ireland are the most beautiful ones in the world. If Albert Edward comes over here this summer he will be able to set the old lady right in this matter when he goes home.

A Chicago wife asks for a divorce on the ground that her husband is constantly moving to avoid paying rent. He has moved twenty times within the last two years. The plaintiff is right; it is her turn to move.

The Sultan of Turkey has sent $200 to the New York Herald fund to provide free ice for the poor. If the Sultan were not shortsighted he could find an entire nation much nearer home which is pretty hot just now.

The Chicago Pasteur institute is right in calling attention to the fact that "not every dog which bites a person in summer is mad." The fellow who is bitten is, however, whether the dog is mad or only indignant.

A Cincinnati woman has sued a newly married couple for $5,000 for bringing about the match. If this claim is paid we believe the defendant should be entitled to recover damages from her when they sue for divorce by and by.

Emmet, the actor, after firing ten shots at his wife, while crazy drunk, signed the pledge, which, he avers, he will keep for life. If he abstains for a sufficient length of time his aim may be more deadly should he try it over again.

It may seem a little untimely for Uncle Sam to ask Spain to settle that little bill of $1,500,000, but if Spain has millions to keep putting down rebellion in Cuba she ought to have bethought her to use a trifle for paying off an honest old score.

It is probably something of a surprise to a good many people who fondly imagined that the Tammany tiger was finally disposed of last November to read now that the Tammany men in the New York board of aldermen have achieved a material triumph in the reapportionment of the city and the creation of new legislative districts. The tiger has as many lives as the traditional cat.

A little ad in a man's brain grew;
An ad with facts told terse and new.
The ad-smith approached a merchant sad,
And told to him that little ad.
'Twas printed in a prominent space,
The way it caught on was to him surprising,
For he "did'nt much believe in advertising."
Now that merchant's store is a busy place;
And smiles enwreath his once sad face;
And he keeps on advertising.

Some close observers of the situation are inclined to expect a famine in oil. They say the production now runs about 11,000 barrels below the average daily consumption, and it looks as if the article might be really scarce within a year from the present time. Stocks are lower and production no higher than during the oil flurry two months ago, but the price has been kept down by the Standard Oil Company to $1.45 per barrel for credit balances, which is said to have been possible only by the exercise of an iron grip. There is an increase in the production of Lima oil, but it by no means compensates the shortage of the Pennsylvania product, as the latter refines about 80 per cent., while the Lima is such a poor article that it refines but 25 per cent. At the present rate it will not take more than about eighteen months to exhaust stocks, and the shortage per day is expected to show a larger rate rather than a smaller one. The total of stocks of Ohio and Indiana oil at the close of last May was a little more than 20,000,000 barrels. Owing to the increase in price in the last six months hundreds of manufacturing establishments in Ohio and Indiana have given up the use of Lima oil as fuel and fallen back on coal, which is the cheaper of the two. It is thought to be probable that the use of Lima oil as a fuel has ceased for a long time, as the shortage in Pennsylvania oil is likely to continue to keep up the price of the Lima product beyond the reach of those who might use is for fuel if it were as cheap as formerly.

At the Chicago union depot the other morning when the Minneapolis train pulled in a human figure tripped confidently down the steps and started to leave the depot. The stranger's hair was cropped short and parted on the left side. It was surmounted by a straw hat. The trained eye of the depot watchman caught at a glance other features of the visitor's costume—a masculine shirt, cuffs and tie; square-toed shoes, cutaway coat, white vest and—yes, oh, horrors, a skirt! That combination costume was too much for the officer, who immediately took its wearer into custody and asked: "What's your name?" "Nettie Parker," was the reply. "I live in Minneapolis and I've come down to Chicago to see a reh town." "What!" cried the officer, "with that skirt? I guess not. You're a man. Come along." And the Minneapolis sightseer was taken to the Harrison street station. Later in the day Miss Parker was released through the intervention of the matron. Where are we "at," sartorially speaking. The "new woman" seems to have impressed herself firmly on Chicago if a skirt is the first suspicious circumstance to convince the police that its wearer is a man.

A letter from Mr. Tingle, United States Consul at Brunswick, Germany, to the State Department throws an interesting side light on the meat question in that country. The chief demand for American meats, especially pork and its products, comes from the poorer classes of Germany, and it was these that were the largest consumers of American provisions. The prohibition of American cattle in the German market has created a new demand, the supplying of which may destroy eventually the demand for American meats. The price of beef is from 15 to 25 cents a pound, and the German workingman, who receives from 75 cents to $1 a day, is deprived of its use as food more than once a week, which is not sufficient. The supply has been made up by the use of horse meat, which is sold at 7 cents a pound, and is said by Mr. Tingle to be an "excellent food in every particular." The prejudice in Germany against the use of horse meat for food is rapidly disappearing and so long as the price remains about as it is the demand will increase. At present the German butchers pay from $45 to $50 for horses, but already the demand is beginning to increase the price. Mr. Tingle advises the American farmer to go into the business of raising horses to supply the German food market. He says they can be raised cheaper than cattle, and can more easily shipped across the water. As American beef and pork are excluded from the German markets he recommends that the place of these two products be filled with horse meat. Last fall horses sold at auction in Nebraska at from $5 to $10 each. The short crops had something to do with this low price, but the falling off in the demand for horses by reason of the introduction of electricity as a motor, the bicycle and other causes, had far more to do with fixing the price. It is doubtful if the prejudice against the use of horseflesh as food in this country will ever be wholly overcome, and the Germans can eat our surplus horses while we keep and consume our beef and pork.

A MARVELOUS GUN.

It Is Portable and Fires 720 Shots a Minute.

A new gun invented by Hiram S. Maxim can accomplish more in one minute than a company of soldiers. It is so light that it can be easily carried by a single soldier, and is capable of discharging 720 shots a minute. When in operation it is set up like a photographic camera. The muzzle can be moved like a garden hose and made to direct a stream of lead upon any point. It has exactly the same principle as the Maxim quick-firing guns used for naval and artillery purposes, but is is a smaller edition, making the gun practicable for infantry use. Its calibre is .303. It has a range of 3,200 yards, and sends a bullet at a velocity of 1,850 feet a second. A bullet from it will go through forty inches of oak. The weight of the gun is twenty-five pounds. Ready for use in the field with all tools and an extra barrel, it weight forty-five pounds. The War Department is considering the question of adopting it.

THE MAXIM GUN.

Duck Farming.

It is worthy of note that the Chinese very, very long ago hatched out their ducks by artificial heat, and the incubators that seem so wonderful to us at the poultry shows and country fairs were an old story in the East long before our great-grandfathers were born. It is likely that we got the domesticated duck from China, so long ago that we know not when, and the writers on natural history content themselves with telling us that it is derived from the mallard, mixed in some cases with the muskduck and the gadwall, and perhaps the black duck. The domestication of the duck has had an effect the opposite of that usually produced by civilization on man, for the mallard is strictly monogamous. Waterton, the naturalist, says the wild duck is a faithful husband, remaining paired for life, while the domestic drake is polygamous.

At Different Ages.

At different ages, says Judy, man is most fond of:

1. His nurse.
2. His mother.
10. His holidays.
16. His liberty.
20. His—er—sweetheart.
30. His wife.
40. His children.
60. Peace and quiet.

GOOD TIMES ARE HERE

PROSPERITY UNDER DEMOCRACY HAS COME TO STAY.

The Country Recovering from the Unfortunate Administration of Benjamin Harrison with Its Shermanism and McKinleyism Accompaniment.

Calamity-Howlers Dumfounded.

In the canvass of last fall, the country over, the Republicans sent Mr. Dismal on the stump. Republican committees fairly reveled in what they called the calamities of their country. The instructed stumper of the dismal tribe was adjured to advise electors who had voted for Democracy and tariff reform in 1892 to eat the roosters they wore in their caps after the triumphant election of the opponents of special privileges. Wearing hat bands of crape and screwing his features into an expression of profound commiseration, McKinley went out, crying, "I told you so." The calamity howler was heard all over the land. The administration was responsible for all the woes that had come upon America. Democrats had interfered to some extent with the God-given right of protects to enjoy benefits not granted to the rest of their fellow citizens, but paid for by them. The Republican administration had nothing to do with the hard times, so the stumpers averred. Republican demagogy on the silver question, the high taxation which they had enacted in the McKinley law, none of these had aught to do with the distress which was obvious. The blame must be laid at the door of a party which proposed to relieve Americans in some measure of the burden of taxation.

Times are changed and changing. The country is recovering from the unfortunate administration of Benjamin Harrison, with its Shermanism and its McKinleyism. Under the Wilson bill, which it was said would ruin industries, industries revive. Under the Democratic policy which these dismals declared would rob the wage earner increase of wages comes to operatives in rehabilitated industries. The commerce that calamity howlers declared was devoted deliberately to destruction in the Wilson bill is moving steadily and cheerfully. For nearly a year the Wilson law has been in operation, with the result, which Republican Jeremiahs declared could never be attained thereunder, that times have vastly improved. We now hear even McKinley snivveling that the Wilson bill is, after all, but a vindication of his high protective policy.

In 1888, says the Chicago Chronicle, the hired campaign orators of the Republican party organized themselves after what they called glorious victory into an association of "spell-binders." They were so eloquent that, according to the report to their employers, they hade held their audiences everywhere and were mighty proud of their achievements. In 1892 these mercenary "spell-binders" became dismal calamity howlers. Where they had an audience cheering when engaged in the great spell-binding act they had the satisfaction later of finding their eloquence of disaster calling for continual groans. Tariff taxation had been reduced and the country had gone howling to the devil, where Democratic headquarters are in continual session. If the Republican party proposes to go into the campaign with these orators next year, still crying that disaster attends Democratic policy, that industrial chimneys smoke no longer, that wage earners are starved, that the land is ruined, they will talk to empty benches. They can no longer revel in their dire prophecies. Prosperity has come to stay.

Not Caused by Republican Victories.

With one accord the high tariff organs are shouting: "We told you so; the Republican victory last fall has brought good times and business prosperity. We did it all." This confession on the part of the protection organs that trade and industry are reviving, and that wages are going up, is very welcome to Democrats, who want, first of all, to see an end of the long era of depression caused by McKinleyism. As the repetition of the statement that it is Republican successes which have brought about the present industrial boom, may delude some of the unwary, it may be worth while to briefly examine their pretensions.

According to the protection theory everything good comes from high tariffs, and everything bad from free trade. But it is only of late that protectionists have been so bold as to claim that their nostrum works both ways; that it makes times bad when Democrats are in power, and the threat to restore it makes them good just as soon as a Republican Congress is elected. It is a notorious fact that the great panic of 1893 was brought on under conditions created by Republican legislation. It is equally well known that the country began to revive from the exhausting effects of high taxation and restricted trade as soon as ever a measure of tariff reform went into effect. It is to break the force of these damaging facts that the Republican papers are taking credit to their party for the happy change in the industrial situation. But it will not work. Their humbug is too transparent. Business is improving because there is a demand for more goods of all kinds. Factories have got rid of their overstock, caused by high tariff stagnation, and are trying to catch up with their orders. Men are making things because other men want them, and have something to give in exchange for them. People do not buy things merely because a Congress which has not yet met happens to have a few more Republicans than Democrats. They buy because they need things and can sell their products to the men who produce what they want. Party politics has nothing to do with it, except in so far as every additional restriction removed from trade helps make business of all kinds better. It is not the threat of re-establishing McKinleyism, but the natural working of less hampered industrial forces, which has brought about the great improvement in business. And the high tariff, "no trade" organs only make themselves ridiculous by their antics.

He Who Runs May Read.

In August, 1894, the Wilson tariff bill, reducing the tariff duties, became a law. Immediately factories opened. Idle men were set at work, wages increased, mills were crowded to the utmost capacity to supply orders. In the schedules including iron and woolen goods the reductions were greatest. In iron the average reduction was 37 per cent. and in woolens 50 per cent. Yet in iron and woolen factories is the greatest increase in activity noted and in these two branches are the advances in wages most general. The lesson is very plain. It does not require a Solomon or a Newton to discover it. It is simply this: High tariff leads to low wages; low tariff is accompanied by high wages. The proof is overwhelming.—Utica Observer.

Farmers Not Benefited by Tariffs.

Realizing that the old "home market" cry will not again fool the farmer into voting for a restoration of McKinleyism, the protectionist organs are now trying to devise a scheme for a high tariff on farm products. In spite of the fact that our agricultural industries have been established from one hundred to two hundred and fifty years, the professional "friends of the farmer" are working the same old "infant industry" dodge which they used eighty years ago in regard to manufactures. According to these protectionists we have been reading our histories all wrong. Instead of the generally accepted theory that agriculture was the first industry of the country, it appears that the reverse is the case. When the first settlers landed on our shores they found here a number of kind capitalists with factories all ready for operation. Being truly benevolent, as all manufacturers are, these capitalists took pity on the settlers and gave them work. After awhile some of the settlers heard that land had been invented in England, so they sent over for a few shiploads, and spreading it out, proceeded to grow crops on it. The crops grew so well that they decided to make some land for themselves, and being naturally ingenious, succeeded in a short time in manufacturing a large quantity. In the meantime the number of factories having increased, there was a demand for some more land to put them on, and to grow food on to feed the operatives. In this way the farming industry has been gradually built up, so that it is believed that a protective tariff on wheat, cotton, corn and beef would lead to the importation and production of large areas of land.

As America already exports great quantities of all these staple products, it may at first sight seem doubtful where the benefit to the farmers will come in. Skeptical free-traders, who believe that thirty years of protection nearly ruined our farmers, will very likely sneer and say that to talk of helping agriculture by high tariffs is all humbug. They will claim that in the long run the prosperity of any country depends on the condition of its farmers, and that to attempt to protect an industry which sells its surplus products in foreign markets, is the silliest kind of nonsense. And they will also assert that it was the great agricultural industry of this country, established without any government pap, which was the formation for all our prosperity.

But there is no use in arguing with these theoretical free-traders. The facts are all on their side, and anyway, they never could be brought to see the wisdom of making everybody rich by taxing everybody. Let the good, unselfish protectionists stick to their doctrine that the way to help the farmers is by killing foreign trade, and in the course of time they will be regarded as merely innocent victims of a harmful superstition.

To Shut a McKinley Mouth.

Considerable anger has been aroused in the celestial minds of some protectionists over the question of imports of woolen goods under the new tariff. We are now importing a disastrous quantity, they say, such as no truly American tariff would ever allow to come in. One answer to this is to show that even greater amounts came in during a corresponding period under the McKinley tariff. The Wool and Cotton Reporter publishes comparative tables this week showing "a heavy increase" in the imports over the past year or two, "but as compared with those of the fiscal year 1892-'93, the returns for the ten months of the current year make a far less discouraging showing, especially on dress goods and cloths." This is the way to shut a McKinley mouth. The way to shut a merely rational mouth is to take the position that if we import woolen goods, it is because we want them, and have something to give in exchange for them, and can spend our time to better advantage than in making them ourselves. The bigger the quantities we import, the greater amount of things we have to give in exchange for them, the better our wag s and profits and general prosperity.—New York Evening Post.

Tin Industry Given a Show.

According to a Republican contemporary the number of tin plate plants has increased from thirty-two to fifty-four, or nearly 100 per cent. It was not to be expected that the tin plate industry would make much progress while the McKinley law was in operation. That economic monstrosity put a prohibitive duty on tin plate, but a moderate levy on the tin and the plate. The result was that a number of firms established the business of importing the tin and the plate and had the dipping done here. That was a profitable but fraudulent business which gave satisfaction to no one except those engaged in it.—Kansas City Times.

Women in a Protected Industry.

Under the heading "Women Toiling in Iron," the New York Press publishes a detailed account of the employment by the Monongahela Tin Plate Company of a number of women to assist in making tin plate. Had this been in Wales, or England, we should have had from the Press denunciations of the terrible effects of free trade in driving women into such disagreeable occupations. But as it is in Pittsburg, the chief manufacturing city of Pennsylvania, and as the industry is a pet one of the protectionists, we suppose it is all right. How do American workingmen like the idea of their wives or daughters "toiling in iron?"

An Outworn Issue.

Senator Quay expresses the opinion that there is about one more campaign in the tariff question. A greater man than he once thought that there was about one more Presidency in the bloody shirt, and found that he was mistaken. It seems very difficult for some politicians to know when an issue is worn out.—Providence Journal.

DANIEL BOONE'S LIFE.

ROMANTIC CAREER OF THE PIONEER.

Stands Prominently Forward Among American Adventurers—Captured by Indians and Adopted Into Their Tribe—Escaped and Saved Settlement.

Died in Missouri.

AMONG the romantic characters which the early history of our country has furnished Daniel Boone stands prominently forward. He was one of that large band of pioneers whose toils and privations, heroism and courage have gone far to make the country what it is. That we to-day enjoy civilization and peace is due in a great degree to these men's labors.

Daniel Boone was born in Bucks County, Pa., Feb. 11, 1735. His father was an Englishman who had come to this country with his wife and here settled. Daniel received the barest rudiments of an education, but he became well versed in all the knowledge of a trapper and hunter and inured to the sufferings and hardships of pioneer life. When he was 18 he moved with his family into North Carolina and here he married Rebecca Bryan and passed several years as a farmer. After a time this life palled on him and he wearied of the monotony even of this semi-civilization. Accordingly when he was invited, in 1769, to join an exploring party to Kentucky, he eagerly accepted.

DANIEL BOONE.

Boone in Kentucky.

The party traveled to the banks of the Red river and there they halted for several months. Hunting, fishing and encounters with Indians filled their days. In December Boone and a companion named Stewart were captured by the Indians, but with great ingenuity managed to escape and rejoin their friends. They were soon recaptured and Stewart was this time killed, but Boone got away again. In 1771 he returned home with the spoils he had taken and settled down again for three years.

The spirit of adventure still was strong in him, however, and in 1773 he sold his farm and in company with his own family, his two brothers and five neighbors and their families started to Kentucky to settle. They met with much opposition from Indians on the way and were even forced to retreat to the Clinch River in Virginia, where they encamped for several months. However, they all finally arrived safely at their new home and began preparations for a settlement. Boone erected a stockade fort on the Kentucky river, which he called Boonesborough, and here the family made their home.

Captured by Indians.

In 1778 Boone went to the Blue Licks to obtain salt for the settlement, of which it was greatly in need, and here the Indians captured him and took him to Detroit. His knowledge of the Indian character enabled him to make his captors friendly to him and he was adopted into one of the first families of the tribe. He had not been living with the Indians long when he discovered that the British had laid plans for an Indian attack on Boonesborough. He managed to elude his captors and returned to his fort, making the journey in the short space of five days. He successfully repelled the attack which was soon made, and achieved a great victory over his enemies.

BOONE'S GRAVE.

While he was at Detroit, Boone's family, hearing no news of him, supposed he had been killed, and moved back again to North Carolina. Here Boone found them, and great was the joy of all at being once more restored to each other.

In 1780 the family returned to Kentucky, where they continued to live until 1792. Kentucky was at that time admitted into the United States and much litigation arose as to the titles of lands held by settlers. Boone lost all his possessions and in disgust he retired into the wildness of Missouri, settling on the Femme Osage river, about forty-five miles west of St. Louis, where he resided until 1804. This region belonged to Spain, and Boone was appointed commandant of the district, receiving a large tract of land for his services. This also he subsequently lost possession of. In 1812, however, Congress bestowed on him another tract in recognition of his eminent public services.

Boone's later years passed uneventfully at the home of his son-in-law, Flanders Callaway, in Missouri, and here he died Sept. 26, 1820. His remains are buried in Franklin, Ky., where they were removed from Missouri in 1845, and over them an appropriate monument has been erected by the people of that State.

Food and Wages Two Centuries Ago.

The question of prices in those days, the first quarter of the seventeenth century, as compared to these is full of interest to everyone, and it is satisfactory to find that food was not fabulously cheap in the days of our forefathers as we are often led to believe. Mary Verney writes to Ralph at Blois complaining bitterly of the dearness of provisions in London. Beef is 4d., veal and mutton 8d., while Pen Verney reckons 8s. a week too much for her diet, which is afterward fixed at £6 a year. Twelve pounds a year seems a great deal for willful little Betty, aged 13, to spend on her dress, but country bred as she was, she declines, Mary writes, to wear anything but silk. The sum of £30 claimed by Nancy Denton, who was a spoiled child and rich man's daughter, is far more appropriate to her position. In fact, the fees earned by physicians in those days were far in excess of what we should give now, in spite of the exceeding simplicity—not to say remarkable unpleasantness—of their pharmacopoela and treatment.

Dr. Theodore Mayence, the fashionable doctor, left £140,000 (equivalent to over half a million) behind him, and Sir Ralph is miserable because he cannot afford to pay Dr. Denton the £50 which is the ordinary fee for a confinement. A Venetian mirror costs £40, a portrait by Van Dyke £50. A maid's wages come to £3, but the pair of "trimed gloves," with which it is the fashion to reward any extra services on her part, come to £1 5s.—an absurdly disproportionate present. The price of Sir Edmund's Covent Garden house is £100, and many horses fetch as much, while £200 a year is the usual price for a boy's board and teaching in a good French family.—Longman's Magazine.

TWO-STORY CARS OF PARIS.

Run by Electric Storage Batteries and Are Called a Success.

There are no trolley or cable cars in Paris. The storage battery electric cars seem to have been made a success there. They are much larger than those which for a time were in operation on the Madison and Fourth avenue line in New York, being literally two stories high. The outside seats are roofed and are protected at the ends by glass screens. The approach of a car or omnibus is not heralded by gongs, as it is in America. Each of the big, lumbering vehicles is provided with a horn, which the driver can sound by pressing a rubber bulb. These toot and toot and toot, wherever one may go.

A PARIS DOUBLE-DECKER.

The Tourainers.

The Tourainers themselves are comforting to behold—a stalwart, brown-faced people, with contentment deep set in them. The women in their blue cotton gowns, white mutches, and unwieldy wooden shoes, are picturesque enough for anything, if their dark, sloelike eyes and ready smiles be also taken into account. One sees fair faces among the younger girls—Madonna-like faces. It were easy to fancy that Agnes Sorel, "the fairest of the fair," resembled the best of them when she too was young and had not yet caught the eye of a king. As for men, they are what one would expect them to be in such a natural garden—a hard-working class, prone to rejoice in all the festive leisure they can obtain.

They love their native province passionately; it is difficult to realize what they must have felt when, a quarter of a century ago, the Prussian soldiers trod their fields and vineyards under foot and burned their homesteads. "I do not believe," said one of them to me the other day, "there can be any other country in the world better to live in than Touraine. We have so much sun even in winter. The climate is so mild, and all things grow in it."—All the Year Round.

Cooked Breakfast While Asleep.

Somnambulism has in all ages furnished many curious illustrations, and among them may be noted one that occurred in a West Utica residence a few days ago.

The husband and wife were aroused by the breakfast bell ringing in the middle of the night. They arose and discovered that it was 2 o'clock, but on hastily dressing and going down to the dining-room they found breakfast ready and waiting for them.

They were greatly alarmed at the condition of things, for they at first imagined that the hired girl had suddenly gone insane.

After a few minutes, however, they discovered she was asleep. She had got up, started the fire, prepared the morning meal, and had it ready for serving, but was sound asleep all the time. The only unusual thing was her failure to put on her shoes.—Utica Observer.

All Weathers Suited Dr. Johnson.

Dr. Johnson stoutly pooh-poohed the notion of the effect of weather on the mind. "To temperance," he wrote, "every day is bright; and every hour is propitious to diligence." Johnson, however, was little given to analyzing the influences of nature, or any other influences, upon himself. And it may well be that this disposition on his part was in the spirit of the Stoics and in defiance of his own feelings, to which he disdained to give way. It seemed to him a sorry thing that "a being endowed with reason" should "resign his powers to the influences of the air, and live in dependence on the weather and the wind."—Temple Bar.

Seldom Miss a Train.

Foreigners traveling in India cannot fail to be impressed with the crowds of natives to be found at every railway station. As a rule the people have no idea of time, but they have learned that trains do not wait for tardy passengers, so they begin to gather hours before the time for the train to leave.

Suppose One Can't Sneeze.

Chinese dentists rub a secret powder on the gum over the affected tooth and after about five minutes the patient is told to sneeze. The tooth then falls out. Many attempts have been made by European dentists to secure this powder, but none have ever succeeded in doing so.

STATE TO CONTROL IT.

TRANSFER OF THE LINCOLN MONUMENT.

Tribute to the Martyred President Given Over to the State of Illinois by the Monument Association—Law Has Been Lately Passed.

History of the Shaft.

Among the bills passed by the Illinois Legislature which became laws on the first of July is one providing for the transfer of the Lincoln monument from the Monument Association to the State. The law makes appropriations for the repair of the monument, the pay of a custodian, and the erection of a custodian's lodge, or house. It also provides that the Governor, State Treasurer and Superintendent of Public Instruction shall be trustees of the State to have the care and custody of the monument.

The monument was dedicated Oct. 15, 1874, the occasion being signalized by a tremendous outpouring of the people, the oration commemorative of the life and public services of the great emancipator being delivered by Richard J. Oglesby. President Grant also spoke briefly on that occasion and a poem was read by James Judson Lord. The monument was built after the accepted designs of Larkin G. Meade, of Florence, Italy, and stands upon an eminence in Oak Ridge Cemetery, occupying about six acres of ground. Ground was broken on the site Sept. 10, 1869, in the presence of 3,000 persons. The capstone was placed in position on May 22, 1871, and on Sept. 19, 1871, the remains of Lincoln were removed from the temporary tomb and placed in the crypt under the monument. In the other crypt reposes the remains of Eddie, son of Mr. and Mrs. Lincoln, who died in infancy, and of Thomas (Tad), their youngest son, who died in Chicago July 15, 1871.

THE LINCOLN MONUMENT.

The monument is built of brick and Quincy granite, the latter material only appearing in view. It consists of a square base 72½ feet on each side, and 15 feet 10 inches high. At the north side of the base is a semi-circular projection, the interior of which has a radius of 12 feet. It is the vestibule of the catacomb, and gives access to view the crypts in which are placed the bodies of Lincoln and his sons. On the south side of the base is another semi-circular projection of the same size, but this is continued into the base so as to produce a room of elliptical shape, which is called Memorial Hall. Thus the base measures, including these two projections, 119½ feet from north to south and 72½ feet from east to west. In the angles formed by the addition of these two projections are handsome flights of stone steps, two on each end. These steps are protected by granite balustrades, which extend completely around the top of the base, which forms a terrace. From the plane of this terrace rises the obelisk, die, which is 28 feet 4 inches high from the ground and tapered to 11 feet square at the top.

THE LINCOLN HOME, SPRINGFIELD.

WHERE LINCOLN KEPT STORE.

The statute of Lincoln is, of course, the central attraction of the monument. He is represented as standing with fasces at his right hand, in which is his pen. In his left hand he holds the proclamation of emancipation, while on the pedestal beneath his feet is the bronze coat of arms

The Suicide Month.

It would seem as if there was something in the theory of Paille, the French philosopher, that June is the month of suicides, judging from the number of people who are daily reported as having killed themselves. Paille's theory is that in the nature of every human being there lies dormant a germ which impels strongly towards death self-inflicted; that in some people it is small and weak, and in others strong and active, and that in all of the human family is reaches its greatest development between June 1 and June 20. Whether the theory be true or false, the undoubted fact remains that this month has so far witnessed an epidemic of suicides and crimes as unaccountable as it is saddening.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

In a fight between State Constables Pettigrew and Toland and two moonshiners named Fisher and Durham at Spartanburg, S. C., the latter were killed. Pettigrew was shot through the lungs and will probably die. Toland is badly wounded.

Small Change in Mexico.

I had bought some limes, and gave the girl who sold them to me one dollar in payment. By way of change she returned me forty-nine pieces of soap the size of a water-cracker. I looked at her in astonishment, and she returned my look with equal surprise, when a police officer, who witnessed the incident, hastened to inform me that for small sums soap was the legal tender in many portions of the country. I examined my change and found that each cake was stamped with the name of a town and of a manufacture authorized by the government. The cakes of soap were worth one and a half cent each. Afterward in my travel, I frequently received similar change. Occasionally a cake showed signs of having been in the wash-tub; but provided the stamp was not obliterated, the soap did not lose value as currency.

AMBITIOUS WOMEN

MAKE HEROES OF MEN.

She Will Brave Anything for the Man She Loves.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

When an ambitious woman loves a man she will spur him to heroic efforts. She will dare with him the rigors of the frozen North, and encourage him in daring dangers almost unsurmountable.

Women are by nature ambitious according to their physical and mental strength. Hope and ambition come with perfect health, but vanish before sickness and despair.

American women are, unfortunately, particularly subject to those painful female diseases that are the cause of so much hopelessness and misery.

Could all women realize the undeniable fact that they suffer unnecessarily, how much brighter life would be!

Lydia E. Pinkham devoted her life to the study of female diseases and their cause; and she discovered in the Vegetable Compound an absolute remedy. It succeeds in removing the cause of the trouble.

Women who rely more upon their own natural common-sense, rather than on the theories of their physicians, write to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., and are soon restored to health.

Here is a living example: "Four months ago I was unable to stand on my feet. I had falling of the womb, kidney trouble, and inflammation of the bladder; the backache and bearing-down pains were dreadful. My physician could give me no relief. A friend said, try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Well, I did. Oh, if every suffering woman would do the same, they would be cured, cured absolutely and entirely, as I am!" MRS. WM. M. MOREY, 20 Seymour St., Pittsfield, Mass.

KNOWLEDGE

Brings comfort and improvement and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

THE COLLEGE COURSE

EMINENT MEN DISCUSS AS TO WHETHER IT PAYS.

Chauncey M. Depew and Frederic Coudert Believe that It Does, While Henry Clews Will Not Employ a College Graduate in His Office.

Affirmatives Have It.

How much of practical value is to be got from a college course by a young man about to engage in business or a profession has always been, and will continue to be, a mooted question. It is generally understood that the Hon. Chauncey M. Depew believes in the modern university, and that he is in about as close sympathy with the college student of to-day as when he was himself a student at Yale. But while Mr. Depew believes the college-bred young man has much the better chance in the race of life, still he does not consider the college training of these times altogether faultless. Indeed, he believes it lacking in one great essential, that is the decline of the debate as a means of training. "There were debating societies in college when I was a student," he said, "and all the brightest men belonged and took part in the discussions. Nowadays few college students would think of stooping so low as to belong to a debating society or of engaging in a set discussion of any problem. I regard this as a national calamity. It is a good sign when the people of any country begin systematically to debate on current affairs. They sometimes take up the wrong side, but that does not harm in the long run. People had better be mistaken than not to think and discuss, since thought and honest discussion are sure, sooner or later, to set them right."

CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW.

While he does not in any sense approve of the extremes to which the enthusiasts of athletics carry their physical exertions, Mr. Frederick Coudert, the eminent lawyer and man of affairs, indorses the notion of thorough and systematic training most heartily.

"There is no doubt," said Mr. Coudert, "that the man who has a good body and a sound mind, and both well trained, possesses incalculable advantages over the man who has not these tools with which to carve his way through life. Just at present, perhaps, the craze for physical training has gone a little astray. As to the advantages possessed by the college graduate in business or professional life, there is no question at all. The college man has a great lead over his competitor who has not enjoyed the advantages of college education."

Mr. Henry Clews, the Wall street broker, who is as well known in his line as any of the men above quoted in theirs, disagrees with them most emphatically as to the advantages of college education in business.

"You can judge for yourself what I think of college training as a preparation for business life," he said, lifting his hands, "when I say that I will not have a college graduate in my employ. The boy who proposes to go into business should understand the English language so that he can express himself clearly and unmistakably; he should know how to write a plain, legible hand rapidly; he should know arithmetic, and lots of it. He should also have the severe training in business methods that can be got only by serving his time as a subordinate in a business office. My experience has been that the college graduate is apt to have none of these things, and, therefore, as I have said, I do not take college graduates into my office."

Education in China.

In no country is education more highly esteemed than in China. The child of the workingman, as a rule, cannot hope to get more than a mere smattering. But scattered through the country are numberless families, the members of which for generation after generation are always students and from whom, as a rule, the officials come. They have no knowledge of any business or trade. They correspond very closely to what are, or used to be, called gentlemen in England, and preserve their positions with great tenacity, even when hard pressed by poverty.

Rich parvenus, as a matter of course, engage tutors for their children; and in the humblest ranks of life occasionally parents will stint themselves to give an opportunity to some son who has shown marked intelligence at the village school. But neither of these classes compete on an equality with those to whom learning is an hereditary profession. The cultivation and intellectual discipline prevailing in such families give their members a marked advantage over those who get no help of any kind at home, and who must therefore depend entirely on what they learn from their paid teachers.

The orthodox scheme of education is entirely concerned with the ancient literature of China. The original works which occupy the student's attention were for the most part written before the literature of either Greece or Rome had reached its prime. But there are commentators belonging to later periods who must also be perused with diligence. China has not seen an influx of new races, such as have overrun Europe, since the days of our classical authors; but still, from mere lapse of time, the language of the country has greatly changed, and the child beginning his studies cannot without explanation understand a single sentence, even if he has learned to read the words of the lesson which he has before him. The student makes himself acquainted as thoroughly as possible with those classical works. The more he can quote of them the better, but he must master the matter contained in them as well.

He must get to know the different readings and different interpretations of disputed passages, and, finally, he practices himself in verse and prose composition. In prose he carefully preserves the ancient phraseology, never admitting modern words, though there are certain technicalities of style which will prevent his production from being an exact imitation of the ancient literature. His verse must be in close imitation of the old-time poets. They must follow elaborate rules as to rhythm, and the words must rhyme according to classical sounds, which are very different from those of to-day.—The Nineteenth Century.

College Men in Politics.

Postmaster General Wilson, in an address at Central College the other day, chose for his subject "The College Man in Politics." He showed the great need there was for culture and mental discipline in American politics, a point which will not excite much dispute even in the United States, where "the hustler is the man who gets there."

The speaker said that in a recent visit to Europe he was shown through some of the universities and upon the walls of the rooms were hung pictures of the graduates who had distinguished thmeselves in the civil or diplomatic service of the country, and he saw no reason why the same thing should not be common in America. The reason it has not been common is very simple, for under our system there is so much politics that few men can achieve greatness in our civil or diplomatic service. In Great Britain a young man enters the diplomatic service and works his way up through the various grades until he becomes the ambassador of his country at St. Petersburg or Paris or some other great capital. Here a man fails of election to Congress after a few terms and is sent to Mexico or France or Germany, understanding nothing of the business he is to transact or of the language of the country to which he is accredited. The result is that he shows remarkable judgment if he does not make himself the subject of criticism, and when his term of service is over he returns to his law office or farm knowing as little of diplomacy as when he left it. The college from which he was graduated would have no use for his picture nor would his picture subserve any good purpose if the college had it.

In the civil service things are little better. A man is not made secretary of war because he knows a musket from a pontoon, but because he is a power in party management. Heads of departments are not promoted from lower grades because they have shown an aptitude for the business, but are appointed to strengthen the party in one State or another. Political strife runs as high in England as it does in this country, but parties are managed there with some reference to their country and not alone the party. Some one has said that a statesman was one who was trying to see what he could do for his country, but a politician was one who was trying to see what his country could do for him. The United States has too few statesmen and too many politicians. For this reason the pictures of distinguished men are rare on the walls of our universities.—Chicago Record.

Gov. McKinley on Illiteracy.

Gov. McKinley of Ohio in addressing the students of Northwestern University at Evanston, Ill., said: "The last census shows that 87 per cent. of the population over 10 years of age can read and write. Match it anywhere if you can."

The showing is certainly very creditable to the United States considering the large number of illiterate blacks at the South, but there are a good many nations on the globe in which the percentage of illiteracy of the population above 10 years of age is less than it is in the United States. According to the Governor of Ohio 13 per cent. of our population above 10 years of age are illiterate, but in Switzerland only 2.5 per cent. of the same class are illiterate, in Scotland only 7 per cent., in England and Wales only 9 per cent., in the Netherlands 10 per cent., in France 11 per cent., while of the army recruits of Saxony, Wurtemburg, Bavaria, Prussia, Denmark, Sweden, and Norway less than 1 per cent. are illiterate.

The percentage of illiteracy in this country is higher than it would be if it were not for the unschooled colored children of the South and the foreign population in some sections of the Northern States. Italians, Poles, Bohemians and many other foreign-born inhabitants come to this country unable to read and write, and never learn to do either. Perhaps no country on the globe spends as much money per capita in public education as the United States, and few have poorer or worse-executed compulsory education laws. But we are making very commendable progress in this country and the time is not far distant when we can match the more cultivated countries in Europe in the matter of education.

School and College Notes.

The growth of public libraries in the United States is one of the remarkable features of our system of progress. There are now nearly 5,000 of them.

The bill providing for the study of the nature and effects of alcoholic drinks in the public schools of New York state was vetoed by the governor.

The recently issued senior class book of Yale gives the average expense of the students at $912 for the freshman year, $943 for the sophomore, $942 for the junior and $1,032 for the senior. This is an average of $18 or $20 per week for the college year of about thirty-five weeks.

Minor State News.

MISS VIRGINIA LOCKRIDGE, recently injured in a runaway accident at Greencastle, died of her injuries.

THE Studebakers are arranging for a fine reed and horn band among their employes at South Bend.

THE small daughter of Henry Raines of Tipton, drank a quantity of concentrated lye and died in frightful agony.

EARL LACEY, aged 4, was drowned in a pit at Jeffersonville. The boy was missed from home, and he was located by the moaning of his big dog near the edge of the pit.

LEE KUHNS, who found a valuable bed of aragonite, or limestone rock, on his farm near Ingalls, has begun the construction of kilns, looking to the manufacture of commercial lime.

THE Elwood Oil Producing Company has drilled in another 100-barrel well on its land near Geneva, and six more wells will be put down immediately, as the field gives exceptional promise of richness.

AT Cowan in a runaway accident Mrs. George Keltner, of Muncie, was dangerously injured and her 6-year-old daughter had an arm broken. A Mrs. Vorice, who was in the carriage, had an arm broken.

NEW wheat is beginning to come into market at Wabash earler, by nearly ten days, than was ever known before. The yield runs from seven to fifteen bushels per acre, and the quality generally is rather poor.

FRANK JONES, while painting, at Perth, lost his balance and fell from the ladder a distance of about thirty-five feet. His head struck the sidewalk, crushing his skull. He died about noon from the injuries.

AT Mick McCarty's saloon, Muncie, Thomas Rodgers was accidentally shot in the left groin by William Everett. The wounded man cannot live. The two men are flint-glass blowers and employed at the Muncie flint-glass works. A crowd of men were in the saloon, and Everett was recklessly flourishing the self-acting gun, when it went off. Both were the best of friends, but had been drinking.

MRS. JAMES C. YOUNG, of Brandywine township, Shelby County, lost some cattle by poison a few weeks ago. Later strychnine was found in milk pans, and the other morning the hired hands found several piles of salt in the field which were mixed with Rough on Rats and powdered glass. Mrs. Young some time ago applied for a divorce from her husband and is fearful for the life of herself and children.

TWO MEN were seriously burned while working at the National tin-plate mill in Anderson. They were connecting a gas pump, thirty feet below the surface, in a well ten feet in diameter. One of them lit a match to find a leak and the explosion followed. Charles Smith was very seriously burned and his assistant, Peter Geiser, burned on the head and face. Both are in the City Hospital. Smith inhaled the flame. The men climbed a ladder to the top of the well while their clothing was on fire.

WHILE Otto Logan was drawning off a barrel of varnish in the barn of W. A. Williams, Wabash, the fluid, from some unknown cause, exploded. Young Logan was burned about the face and hands, but hastened to turn in an alarm. The department responded quickly, but everything was very dry and the barn and contents were destroyed. Two valuable horses were lost. The flames communicated to W. R. Collins's stable, which was also consumed. Total loss, $1,200; insurance on Williams's barn, $400.

STATE Gas Inspector J. C. Leach has returned from Alexandria, where he has been trying for a week to conquer an obstreperous gas well owned by the DePauw Plate-glass Company. Three weeks ago the well was anchored, and soon thereafter the confined gas began blowing the water out of all the water and gas wells in the neighborhood. The gas evidently escaped through a broken casing and found its way through the shale and clay to the surface of the ground. Residents of the vicinity were alarmed to find their houses, cellars, wells and outbuildings filled with the fluid, and only utmost care prevented many explosions. To prevent accidents the officers ordered the well opened again, and it has for three weeks been blowing off 3,500,000 feet of gas daily. Three expert gas-well men refused to undertake the job of restraining the "runaway." Contractor Decker was finally induced, and he has the machinery on the ground. Mr. Leach and DePauw people hope to have the well under control soon. The escaping gas is boiling up in Pipe creek, half a mile away.

THE Union City Council has authorized the School Board to issue bonds to the amount of $10,000 to build a new schoolhouse. The present forty-five-thousand-dollar school building, built in 1892, is overcrowded.

WM. H. ARTMAN and Joseph Paxton, two life-time convicts in the prison south, died, the other day, within 15 minutes of each other, while lying side by side in the prision hospital. Artman was the victim of consumption, while Paxton died from the effects of an assault by a fellow-convict. Artman killed his wife and son, at Tell City in 1893. Paxton murdered Spencer Bryant, at Jeffersonville, in 1888.

GENERAL order, No. 2, Indiana National Guard, has been issued preparatory for the annual military encampment, July 21, lasting for a week. It will be held at Fairview Park. Brigadier General McKee will be in command. None was held last year because so many of the companies were detailed to quiet the riots during the strikes, and saw some actual service in the line of duty. The encampment, therefore, will serve as a reunion of those who braved the rioters. There will be forty-eight companies in the camp, numbering about 3,000 men. Each of the five regiments will have a brass band. Sunday afternoon there will be a dress parade, and during, the week Governor Matthews and his staff will inspect the camp.

TOMB OF A ROMANTIC PAST.

Venice No Longer a Living City, but Merely a Vast Museum.

Venetian life in the large old sense has since come to an end, and the essential present character of the most melancholy of cities resides simply in its being the most beautiful of tombs, says Scribner's. Nowhere else has the past been laid to rest with such tenderness, such a sadness of resignation and remembrance. Nowhere else is the present so alien, so discontinuous, so like a crowd in a cemetery without garlands for the graves. It has no flowers in its bands, but as a compensation, perhaps—and the thing is doubtless more to the point—it has money and little red books. The everlasting shuffle, in the piazza, of these irresponsible visitors is contemporary Venetian life. Everything else is only a reverberation of that. The vast mausoleum has a turnstile at the door, and a functionary in a shabby uniform lets you in, as per tariff, to see how dead it is. From this constatation, this cold curiosity, proceed all the industry, the prosperity, the vitality of the place. The shopkeepers and gondoliers, the beggars and the models, depend upon it for a living; they are the custodians and the ushers of the great museum—they are even themselves to a certain extent the objects on exhibition. It is in the wide vestibule of the square that the polyglot pilgrims gather most densely; Piazza San Marco is like the lobby of the opera in the intervals of the performance. The present fortune of Venice, the lamentable difference, is most easily measured there, and that is why, in the effort to resist our pessimism, we must turn away both from the purchasers and from the venders of ricordi.

She Knew What to Ask.

A West Washington young lady who has been married but a few weeks had her first experience at "going to market" the other day. After she had succeeded in making several laughable blunders, as young wives are apt to, she approached a poultry dealer and asked the price of chickens. Being told by the dealer, who also handed her a fine pair of live birds to examine, she quieted their fluttering as best she could, and then, applying her nose to them and giving them an audible smell, said in the most innocent manner: "Are you sure they are fresh, sir?" —Washington Post.

Throat Paralysis.

(From the Courier-Herald, Saginaw, Mich.)

It was publicly talked all over Clare County, Michigan, for some time before the Courier-Herald sent a reporter to Dover to fully investigate the Coulter matter. He finally went, and we publish to-day his full report. The Coulters are prominent people, though Mrs. C., in response to the question whether she objected to being interviewed, said: "Certainly not." Her story follows:

"About fourteen years ago we decided to take up our abode in Dover, and everything went along smoothly for several years, business progressed, and being of a saving temperament we accumulated quite an amount. Our family increased as the years rolled by, and we now have five children living, the oldest 15, youngest 3, but sickness made its way into our household, and doctors' bills flooded upon us, until we have nothing left but our home, and these sweet children. Everything went to satisfy the claims of physicians.

"About three years ago I had a miserable feeling at the back of my ears, my right hand became paralyzed and the paralysis extended to my arm and throat, and would affect my head and eyes, sometimes for days I would lose my sight, my face was deformed, lifeless, as it were, my nose was drawn to one side and I presented a pitiable appearance and never expecting to regain my natural facial expressions. I employed the best physicians that could be procured, expending thousands of dollars for their services, but could not obtain relief. At last, they stated my case was beyond the reach of medical skill, and it would be but a short time until the end would come. This certainly was not very encouraging to me, but I never gave up hope. In connection with receiving the attendance of physicians I have tried every medicine known to the apothecary, but never received any relief until Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People came to my assistance. Before I had taken half of the first box the deformity in my face had left me, and before four boxes had been consumed the paralysis had disappeared entirely and much to my surprise I felt like a new woman. I have not taken any medicine since last spring, just about a year ago, and my trouble has not appeared since. I owe my health, my life to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

"A short time since my little boy John was afflicted with St. Vitus' dance. He could not walk across the room without assistance; in fact, he would fall all over himself, but after taking a few boxes of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, St. Vitus dance entirely left him, and no trace of the affliction is left. These pills are worth their weight in gold. You may say in this connection that I am willing at any time to make affidavit to the truth of these statements, and furthermore, I will answer any communication concerning my case, as I consider it nothing more than right and just that I should assist suffering humanity."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are for sale by all druggists, or may be had by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y., for 50 cents per box, or six boxes for $2.50.

Signor Crispi's Coat of Mail.

Since the last attack on his life Signor Crispi has constantly worn under his shirt a light, but solid, coat of mail. So a Genoese newspaper declares. The New Age recalls the fact that, after Bismarck was fired at in Berlin thirty years ago, he also wore a steel shirt next his skin. The joke about him was that he got his linen at the iron-monger. After all, it counts for something to belong to the great unknown."—Westminster Gazette.

ABSOLUTELY PURE

The Rules of Court.

Ambiguous phrases sometimes lead to laughable blunders. In South Carolina, rules of court prescribe that not only the judges but also the attorneys must wear robes in court. Against this rule the leader of the bar—his name was Petigree—stoutly rebelled. He constantly appeared in court in the rough costume of a planter, and the judges pretended not to notice it. One day, however, when he was leading counsel in an important case, and he rose to address the court in his usual pepper and salt, the presiding judge felt compelled to draw his attention to the rules of court regarding the attire of attorneys. Petigree smiled and observed: "I understand your honor to say that the rules of court must be executed." The judge bowed. "Then, sir," said Petigree, holding the rules in his hand, I read this rule; "'The sheriff shall attend this court in cocked hat and sword.' I now draw your attention to the sheriff there. His hat is cocked, but most certainly his sword is not."

Progressive.

A New York florist whose enterprise should ensure his success has started a new branch of business which is indicated by the words over his shop: "Flowers by telegraph to all parts of the world." He has arranged with the leading florists in every city in Europe, so that his customers can have their orders carried out without delay. The price of the cable or telegram is charged to the customer. A gentleman who wished a boquet sent to a lady in Paris before she started to the theater, called in after dinner one afternoon lately, and gave the order. There were just two hours and a half to do it in, but the flowers were handed to the lady while she sat at dinner. Another gentleman wished a floral greeting to reach a lady who had left New York for Liverpool, and when she arrived a man with a basket of flowers awaited her as she stepped ashore from the vessel.

Spiders of La Plata.

In a chapter on spiders mention is made of the many strange and wonderful features known in connection with them. Some spin a wonderfully complex and beautiful web; some live on or in the ground; many simulate inanimate objects or death itself. Of two species belonging to the same genus one is green, while another is like a withered or dried-up leaf. The first, when distubed, falls rapidly to the ground like a fresh green leaf broken from a twig, but the second falls slowly, like a very light, dried, and withered leaf. Some of the spiders are very large and will chase a man from thirty to forty yards, keeping place with a slow trotting horse. An instance is related where one ran up the lash of the author's riding whip to within three or four inches of his hand, and would have bitten him had he not thrown the whip away.—Science.

The Pursuit of Happiness.

When the Declaration of Independence asserted man's right to this, it enunciated an immortal truth. The billous sufferer is on the road to happiness when he begins to take Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the most efficacious regulator of the liver in existence. Equally reliable is it in chills and fever, constipation, dyspepsia, rheumatism, kidney trouble and nervousness. Use it regularly, and not at odd intervals.

Wages of the Peacemaker.

It is reported that John W. Foster will receive as his fee for acting as the mediator in the troubles between Japan and China the sum of $250,000. This princely fee will come from the Chinese government, and it is said that before Mr. Foster left the United States to intercede in behalf of the Orientals he was paid $100,000.—Washington Evening Star.

FORTUNATE is the woman with an eye to matrimony who has a young looking mother.

ON THE ROAD to recovery, the young woman who is taking Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription. In maidenhood, womanhood, wifehood and motherhood the "Prescription" is a supporting tonic and nervine that's peculiarly adapted to her needs, regulating and strengthening the system and curing the derangements of the sex. Why is it so many women owe their beauty to Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription? Because beauty of form and face radiate from the common center—health. The best bodily condition results from good food, fresh air and exercise coupled with the judicious use of the "Prescription."

It reaches the origin of the trouble and corrects it.

Cynical.

At four Months Old.

Last June Dick Crawford brought his twelve-months old child, suffering from infantile diarrhœa, to me. It had been weaned at four month and had always been sickly. I gave it the usual treatment in such cases but without benefit. The child kept growing thinner until it weighed but little more than when born, or perhaps ten pounds. I then started the father to giving Chamberlain's Colic Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy. Before one bottle of the 25 cent size had been used a marked improvemen was seen and its continued use cured the child. Its weakness any puny constitution disappeared and its father and myself believe the child's life was saved by this remedy. J. T. Marlow, M D., Tamaroa, Ill. For sale by Robbins and McCord. 27 30

Chamberlain's is the best of all, Vincent J. Barkl, of Danbury, Iowa, has used Chamberlain's Cough Remedy whenever in need of a medicine for coughs and colds, for the past five years and says: "It always helps me out. If anyone asks me what kind of cough medicine I use, I reply, Chamberlain's, that is the best of all. 25 and 50c bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord. 27-30

A Holland Case.

The people of New Holland, O., have been greatly surprised recently by the almost wonderful cure of a young daughter of Mr. Jno Orahood, who for a long time had been afflicted with fits or epileptic convulsions. The affliction seemed more dreadful because of the natural brightness of the child. Doctors and other medicines failed to effect any lasting benefit and cure seemed hopeless until a sample bottle of Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer was providentially handed Mr. Orahood and from the use of it and only two full bottles of the remedy, the young girl has been completely cured of the affliction which threatened to blight her life. Fortunately there are but few cases of epileptic fits, but we venture to say that half the people who read this would feel like new beings after a thorough use of Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer; it is a nerve food, restoring nerve force on the same principal that food restores physical vigor and muscle.

If yours is a case of shattered nerves, frequent headache, perhaps nervously cross, troubled with sleeplessness, a tired feeling in the morning, debilitated, all worn out feeling, promptly use this great remedy, for it will you, and also ward off the most serious sickness or breaking down which you symptoms indicate.

It is warranted sure to relieve and cure nerve troubles as represented. For sale by F. E. Davenport 30

The Discovery Saved His Life.

Mr. G. Cailloutte, Druggist, Beaverville, Ill., says: "To Dr. King's New Discovery I owe my life. Was taken with Lagrippe and tried all the physicians for miles about, but of no avail and was given up and told I could not live. Having Dr. King's New Discovery in my store I sent for a bottle and began its use and from the first dose began to get better, and after using three bottles was up and about again. It is worth its weight in gold. We won't keep store or house without it." Get a free trial bottle at Robbins & McCord drug store. 2

PAINT cracks.—It often costs more to prepare a house for repainting that has been painted in the first place with cheap ready-mixed paints, than it would to have painted it twice with strictly pure white lead, ground in pure linseed oil.

Strictly Pure White Lead

forms a permanent base for repainting and never has to be burned or scraped off on account of scaling or cracking. It is always smooth and clean. To be sure of getting strictly pure white lead, purchase any of the following brands:

"Anchor," "Collier," "Eckstein," "Shipman," "Armstrong & McKelvy," "Southern," "Beymer-Bauman," "Red Seal," "Davis-Chambers," "Fahnestock."

FOR COLORS.—National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors, a one-pound can to a 25-pound keg of Lead and mix your own paints. Saves time and annoyance in matching shades, and insures the best paint that it is possible to put on wood.

Send us a postal card and get our book on paints and color-card, free; it will probably save you a good many dollars.

AT ST. JOE.

The celebration at St. Joe was a grand affair. There was a large crowd of people in attendance. The celebration was in charge of the G. A. R. boys of this place. The exercises were held in Curie's grove on the banks of the St Joe river, the grove being a peer to any grove in Northern Indiana. The exercises were opened by the singing of America, led by Prof. C. A. Woodcox's chorus class. A fervent prayer was then offered by Rev. W. W. Lineberry of the M. P. church of this place. The Declaration of Independence was then read by O. H. Widney, after which recitations were given by Lenore Widney and Delphia Hamilton; song, by the chorus class. The forenoon address was by Prof. L. W. Fairfield, of Angola. Prof. Fairfield's address bristled with new ideas. I heard a number say that it was the best they ever heard. After the address was a song by the chorus class. Then came dinner, given by the G. A. R. boys; chicken, beans, coffee, in fact every thing that a good appetite could relish. After the appetite of the crowd had been satisfied, at 1:30 the afternoon's exercises commenced. Opened by a song, followed with recitations by Esta Baker, Maud Culbertson and May Hamilton. This was followed by a song which was grand. The afternoon's address by Hon. John W. Hayden, of Ft. Wayne. No audience in DeKalb county ever listened to two better addresses than Prof. Fairfield's and Hon. Mr. Hayden's. Both were delivered in good oratorial style and bristled with good points from beginning to end although Mr. Hayden was very unwell at the beginning of his address. If his address was a sample of what he could do sick, what would it be if he was well. Mr. Hayden's address closed the exercises in the grove. Then there was a bicycle race on the street, won by a rider from Butler, by the name of Brown; next was a sack race, won by a little girl by the name of Serville. The crowd cheered heartily when the little miss won the prize over her big competitor. Next was the fat man's race, won by the good natured, whole souled fat Foote St. Joe Butcher. I tell you the fellow that tackles our Foote in a foot race will find him feet before he gets through with him; he is six feet of Foote and a hundred pounds to the foot. Next the fantastic parade under command of Chief Moosetocimaguntic. The parade was best ever seen by a St. Joe audience There was about 100 in line in all kinds of uniforms. It would be impossible to describe them. The prize was given to Lester Curie. Base ball also entered into the day's festivities. The St. Joe nine played the Milford the score standing 21 to 14, in favor of St. Joe. In the evening the crowd was treated to a fine display of fire works. So the day closed but I cannot close without complimenting the G. A. R. boys on the grand success of the celebration held under their auspices. Everything was the very best in fact everything in connection with the celebration.

ANOTHER EYE.

South Main had another accident last evening from the irrepressible fire cracker, so we hear. Della Hensiger wanted to shoot one of the big cannon sort, and held it too long in her hands, or else the warm weather made it explode too suddenly. Now her left eye is in mourning, as well as in some danger for if it is not properly treated and cared for she may lose it. The 4th proves to be the genuine, old-fashioned mangler this year same as other years.

STATE PRIDE

Indianapolis Sun July 8.

School commissioner Frank Blackledge's idea, about making the study of state history a more prominent feature in the public schools, is worthy of attention on the part of the school board. There has been a tendency during the past few years to introduce a maze of stuff into the common school curriculum that is not for the best. The same is true of a good many colleges. It has resulted in the cramming of pupils full of superficiality that is disappointing. Mathematics is a good foundation for a pupil to lay his education upon. The ancient languages are excellent for the student who contemplates excursions in later life into the field of literature. Science ought to teach a pupil to love nature and her most mysterious ways and is an excellent training school for the mind.

But what is the really sound basis for making a good citizen of a man if not history? Take, for instance, the great majority of children who never become language professors or great scientists. It ought to be the aim of the state, which educates its children, to make of them good citizens. In later life they should repay the state for every dollar expended upon them. They can do it in two ways, First, by becoming self-supporting; second, by becoming good citizens who have the welfare of the state at heart. A study of Indiana's military history ought to inspire any child with the bravery of her sons and there are many of them whose stars are as bright as the world's history records. The state's record in the industries has been a marvel, especially during the last ten years, No state in the union can eclipse it. In every direction Indiana has kept abreast, aye, even ahead, in many respects, of its haughtier eastern sisters.

It seems to The Sun that a study of its progress from the early Indian wars when its real bravery began; its career through the war of Mexico, and finally the brilliant story of its victories on southern battlefields; the history of its great political warriors, its great legal lights, and men who have walked in all the professions and trades in a manner that made their names honored, ought to be an incentive to state pride. From state pride grows the ambition in a child's heart to do its native sod a good deed, and it ought therefore to be encouraged.

VANDALIA LINE.

The Vandalia Line should be kept before the people of Northern Indiana, especially for the convenience in reaching our most popular watering place, Lake Maxinkuckee, to which lovely resort it affords the only line. The people from this section go west over the B. & O. to La Paz, or over the Lake Shore to South Bend, or over our division of the Wabash to Logansport, to connect with the Vandalia. We can go also over the new Wabash line from Ashley, or from Montpelier and reach the Vandalia at Lakeville in St. Joseph county. But this, while it directly interests our people, is but a small part of the Vandalia's interests. Its lines reach to some of the most important points south and west. Its equipments are first class and its officers gentlemanly and pleasant. Travelers should not ignore the great Vandalia lines and judging from what we have seen of their patronage, they do not.

Delightful Excursion

The Barnum and Bailey Greatest Show on Earth Offers Low Round Trip Rates. Some of the 1,001 Rare Rights.

The Barnum & Bailey circus is soon to exhibit in this vicinity, and the usual crowds will doubtless avail themselves of the low excursion rates offered by the railroads for the occasion. The fact of the various railroads yearly making excursion rates to these immense shows, is convincing proof of the importance of this vast amusement institution, and the crowded condition of the trains on circus day indicates a popularity attained by no other shows.

The "Greatest Show on Earth" will positively exhibit at Butler, Friday, July 12, and it is positively promised to surpass in magnitude and merit any previous exhibition ever seen under canvas. One of the principal charms of the circus this year is its educational features. The menagerie is a marvel of completeness, and contains many famous specimens never before seen outside of the jungles. Johanna, the giant gorilla, and Manuel, the bluenosed mandrel are the main features of the menagerie this year, to which a visit will repay everyone. These giants of the jungle and forest are so nearly allied to some race of human beings as to startle everyone with the remarkable similarity and some zoologists, like Garner, claim that they have a language. Johanna is the only gorilla now in captivity in the world. Standing in erect position she is nearly five feet high. Her arms are very long and powerful, while her hands are three times as big as those of a man and just as perfect, only they have ten times the strength of any single person. The performance in the main tent—which is water-proof,—in addition to the equestrian feats by twelve champion riders in three rings, the specialists on two stages, the trapeze artists, the racing on the tracks, are supplemented by a trained animal exhibition in a specially constructed steel barred arena. Into this enclosure while troupes and companies of wild and domestic beasts go through a series of most wonderful performances at the word of command of a weaponless trainer. Lions are driven in harness to chariots; tigers, ponies, elephants, sheep, dogs, etc., singly and in troops, platform marvelous feats, and nearly every kind of four footed brute becomes an accomplished actor. A new street parade will be given on the morning of arrival, with living reproductions of the crowned heads of the world and the military uniform of all nations. Full information as to the schedule of trains, excursion rates, etc., can be secured at the railroad station, and everyone is advised to go early so as to be on time to witness the mammoth parade.

Good Work.

Sensational and slushy papers are beginning to see that the new law is nipping them. A dispatch from Richmond, Ind. dated July 1, is to the point. It says: Saturday, for the first time since the sale began here, the Indianapolis People was suppressed by the police, as were also the Police News, Police Gazette, Kansas City Sunday Sun and the Illustrated Record. The action was taken on the ground that they are pernicious papers and came under the statute that provides a fine of from $10 to $200 for printing publishing or selling such. The newsdealers did not open the stock, but shipped it back to the publishers, who will get some legal information regarding their rights before abandoning the field.

These papers are what as classed by a new law as pernicious literature. The law was passed by the last general assembly and provides a penalty of from $10 to $200 for printing, selling or publishing books, papers or periodicals, the chief feature or characteristic of which is the record of crime or the pictures of crime committed, criminals, desperadoes or men and women in unbecoming costumes.

THAT'S QUEER!

You say a collar and cuff that are waterproof?

Yes.

And perspiration will not affect them?

Yes.

And when dirty you need only wipe them off with a wet cloth or sponge?

Yes.

Wonderful! How are they made?

A linen collar covered on both sides with waterproof "CELLULOID." Looks exactly like a linen collar.

Is it the only waterproof collar and cuff made?

No, but it is the only one made with the linen interlining and consequently the only one that can give entire satisfaction, because it is the best.

How can I know that I get the right kind?

Because every piece is stamped as follows:

TRADE CELLULOID MARK.

Inquire for that and refuse anything else, or you will be disappointed.

Suppose my dealer does not have them?

He probably has, but if not, send direct to us, enclosing amount. Collars 25c., Cuffs 50c. State size, and whether collar wanted is stand-up or turned-down.

THE AUBURN COURIER.

VOLUME XXV. AUBURN, DE KALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY. JULY 18. 1895. NUMBER 29

SAY : :

HOWMUCH DO YOU OWE?

Who holds your mortgage? How much interest are you paying? Do you owe a building loan association anything? If you do, how much interest are you paying them? Unless you are better posted than the majority of people who have such loans, you cannot tell. You think you are paying 6 per cent. Do you know (of course not) that you are paying at least 12 per cent. If you think not, just figure it out yourself. Now then, are you not paying 6 per cent interest and 6 per cent premium? Certainly. Well now don't you know that premium and interest are the same thing—its all interest. Can you afford to pay 12 per cent interest to a loan association when even your banks only charge 8 per cent and you think they are charging too much, and when do you expect to have your loan canceled or paid off in full? You have been told 72 or 78 months. Now then, we undertake to say that it will take you 100 months, if you will oall on us we will show you so you will be satisfied that we are right. Now then, we are prepared to loan you money on monthly installment plan for 8 per cent, we charge you no membership fee and you do not have to make three or more payments in advance so that if on account of insufficient security or bad title your loan is rejected you will not lose one cent. You pay nothing unless your loan is granted. We are making farm loans at from 3 to 5 per cent with privilege of partial payments.

ANOTHER THING!

There is scarcely a day but what there is some traveling agent for some building loan association in Auburn soliciting business, selling stock upon which they charge you a membership fee of from 50 cents to $1.00 per share, which amount goes to the agent and you never get back this money thrown away. If you will call on us we will take your application for all the stock you want in the BEST (we can prove it) building loan association in the state the INDIANA MUTUAL OF INDIANAPOLIS, and charge you No MEMBERSHIP FEE AT ALL. This is certainly fair. If you have any investment stock in any association just write them a letter and ask them the withdrawal value of same, their reply will probably open your eyes. What would you say if you would deposit $8.00 per month in your bank for one year and wanted to withdraw the same and they would offer to pay you only about $80? The bank would only have to do this in one case to be compelled to retire from business. Now you pay ten dollars membership fee and 8 dollars for 12 months making 108 dollars, you lose the 10 dollars membership fee and 10 cents per share each month for expenses, making 12 dollars, or a total of 22 dollars loss upon which you would receive 6 per cent interest for average time on 96 dollars, making 2 dollars and 88 cts. from 22 dollars would leave you a loser of 19 dollars and 12 cents. In our association your stock is worth alll you have paid in, with its interest added, so that upon withdrawal you do not get less than you paid. We want the people of Auburn to become familiar with this matter, and would like to have any that are interested to call and talk with us, we can give you some pointers.

We are still in the Real Estate, Insurance and R. R. Ticket business.

Down The Hudson.

A DEKALB MAN'S IMPRESSION'S OF THE MAGNIFICENT RIVER.

BY GEO. M. HENDERSON.

On entering the narrows of the Hudson at New York for the first time one is impressed with wonder, and the charm abides even with those who pass daily to and fro amid its beauties. No other river in the world approaches the Hudson in varied grandeur and sublimity. The Hudson, more than any other river, has a distinct personality. With moods as varied as the longings of human life, she responds to our joys in sympathetic sweetness, and soothes our sorrows as by a gentle companionship. There are in reality four separate Hudsons, the Hudson of beauty, the Hudson of history, the Hudson of literature and the Hudson of commerce. It has been our privilege to view every mile of its course from Albany to the sea; and from many braided threads of memory, we hope to set forth with affectionate enthusiasm what you all wish to know of her majesty and glory. Baedeker, in his recent "Guide to the United States," says: The Hudson has sometime been called the American Rhine, but that title, perhaps does injustice to both rivers." The Hudson through a great part of its extent, is three or four times as wide as the Rhine, and its scenery is grander and more inspiring; while, though it lacks the ruined castles and ancient towns of the German river, it is by no means devoid of historical associations of a more recent character. How graphically the poet Willis has put the picture in musical prose, referring to Henry Hudson, the first to traverse the waters of the Hudson. "Fancy the bold Englishman steering his yatcht, "Haalve Maan,' for the first time through the Highlands. Imagine his anxiety the channel forgotten as he gazed up at the towering rocks and round the green shore and onward past point and opening bend miles away into the heart of the country; yet with no lessening of the glorious stream before him and no decrease of promise in the bold and luxuriant shores. Picture him lying at anchor below Newburgh, with the dark pass of the Wey-Gat frowning behind him, the lofty and blue Catskills beyond, and the hillsides around covered with herbs of the soil exhibiting only less wonder than friendliness." Talmage, in a recent and glowing vision, pictures the Hudson: "Along our river and up and down the sides of the great hills there was an indescribable mingling of gold and orange and crimson and saffron, now sobering into drab and maroon, now flaring up into solferino and scarlet. Here and there the trees looked as if their tips had blossomed into fire. In the morning light the forests seemed as if they had been transfigured, and in the evening hours looked as if the sunset had burst and dropped upon the leaves. It seemed as if the sea of divine glory had dashed its surf to the top of the crags and it had come dripping down to the lowest leaf and deepest cavern."

On the afternoon of June 27th we visited the great Niagara, then took the train from there to Albany. N. Y., connecting with the steamer "New York," plying between the Capital and New York. What a transformation from the rapids of Niagara, with its tumultuous madness of the waters, hurling and foaming in wayward billows and breakers down the descent, and the clear, tranquil Hudson. The power and majesty of the Almighty is exhibited and realized amid the sublime scenery of both. The "Day Line" steamers of the Hudson, the "New York" and "Albany" excel all others in beauty, grace and speed. There is no comparison between these river palaces and the steamboats of any river in Europe as to equipment, comfort and rapidity. No train on the best equipped railroad in our country reaches its stations with greater regularity than these boats make various landings. On first entering the boat at Albany you are met by the courteous captain, who directs you to the baggage and check room, where you may check all parcels free of charge; then you are at liberty and have the freedom of the boat, which is 311 feet long, breadth over all 74 ft., with a tonnage of 1550 gross tons. The exterior of the "New York" is painted white, relieved with a tints of gold. The interior is finished in hardwood cabinet work, the dining room being finished with mahogany. The private parlors on the "New York" are provided with bay windows, and are very luxuriantly furnished. The dining room is located on the main deck, which is a commendable feature, since, while enjoying your meals, your are not deprived of viewing the noble scenery through which you are passing. The departure of the boat presents a novel scene. As the boat launches out, Col. Sinn's Orchestra Band, of Nantauk Theater, Brooklyn, is playing. The good-by mingled with joyous laughter, and the waving of 'kerchiefs, all have their effect on the grandeur of the journey. After leaving Albany, the only places at which the boat stops before reaching New York are Hudson, Catskill, Rhinebeck, Poughkeepsie, Newburgh, West Point and Yonkers. Many smaller towns on the banks of the Hudson are passed, however. The first east of Albany is Greenbush, on the east side of the river. Here pleasant residences and villas look out upon the river from the near bank and the distant hillsides. During the French War, in 1755, Greenbush was a military rendezvous, and in 1812 the United States government established extensive barracks whence troops were forwarded to Canada. The next spot of interest is the Van Rensselaer Place, with its port holes on either side of the door facing the river, showing that it was built in troublesome times. This house was built in 1640, or thereabouts,

Below the Van Rensselaer Place is the Murderer's Kill, flowing into the Hudson, with its sad story of a girl tied by Indians to a horse and dragged through the valley. Two miles above this, close to the steamer channel, will be seen Stants Island, on the east, with an old store house, said to be next in antiquity to the Van Rensselaer at Greenbush. Other historic points are passed, Castleton, a pleasant village, with main street lying close to the river, on its eastern bank; Coxsackie, to the right of which is Stuyvesant Lighthouse, and to the left the homes of Andrew Matthews, E. S. Colburn. J. C. Sherman, T. E. Cornell, or their successors in the ever-changing map of human existence. Then come Athens, directly opposite Hudson, and connected with it by ferry. Athens is in the midst of the "Ice Industry." No man sows, yet many reap a harvest from the Hudson. Ice or no ice sometimes mean bread to scores of families, and it means added or diminished comforts to many more. Then we come to Hillside village, a beautifully located place, and Columbia Springs, an old fashioned resort, with pleasant grove and white sulphur water etc. Next, and the first stop, is Hudson, founded in the year 1784. The city is situated on a sloping promontory, bounded by the north and south bays. The park is on the bluff, just above the steamboat landing. We believe this city is the only one on the Hudson that has a promenade ground overlooking the river. It commands a fine view of the Catskill mountains, and miles of the river scenery.

After leaving Hudson our second stop was Catskill, founded in 1678. The landing is immediately above the mouth of Catskill Creek. The northern slope of the village revels in fine residences, all of which command extensive views of the Hudson. Just out of the village proper, on a beautiful outlook, stand the charming Prospect Park Hotel, unrivalled in its beauty of location. It has a most delightful piazza, 400 ft. long, 16 ft. wide, supported by countless pillars, twenty-five feet high, with many private balconies and charming views from every room. The main building is 250 ft. front, with wing 150 ft. by 40, situated in a large and beautiful park. This handsome park adjoins the best residence portion of the village. The views from the "prospect" are unsurpassed. The Hudson, with its ever changing scenes of busy life, in view forty miles; the majestic mountains in their quiet grandeur; the Berkshire Hills in the distance; the many handsome country seats and mansions on both sides of the river; the busy little village of Catskill and the Catskill River in plain view, all unite in a charming panorama.

Farther on we reach Germantown, on the east side of the bank; Sangerties and North Bay. At the latter place Robert Fulton built the Clermont, receiving pecuniary aid from Chancellor Livingston; and beyond this, Cruger's Island, with its indented South Bay, reaching up towards the bluff, crowned by Montgomery Place. There is an old Indian tradition that no person ever died on this Island, which a resident told me still held true. It is remarkable, moreover, in possessing many antique carved stones, from a city in Central America, built into the walls of a temple, modeled after the building from which the graven stones were brought. The "ruin" at the south end of the island is barely seen from the steamer, hidden as it is by foliage. Still farther on we reach Montgomery Place, residence of Carleton Hunt and sisters, about one-half mile north of Barrytown, formerly occupied by Mrs. Montgomery, wife of General Montgomery and sister of Chancellor Livingston. The following dramatic incident connected with Montgomery Place is recorded in Stones "History of New York City;" "In 1818 the Legislatuee of New York, DeWitt Clinton, Governor—ordered the remains of General Montgomery to be removed from Canada to New York. This was in accordance with the wishes of the Continental Congress, which, in 1776, had erected the beautiful cenotaph to his memory that now stands in the wall of St. Paul's Church, fronting Broadway. When the funeral cortege reached Whitehall, N. Y., the fleet stationed there received them with appropriate honors, and on the 4th of July they arrived at Albany. After lying in state in that city over Sunday, the remains were taken to New York, and on Wednesday deposited, with military honors, in their final resting place, at St. Paul's. Governor Clinton had informed Mrs. Montgomery of the hour when the steamer "Richmond," carrying the body, would pass her home. At her own request she stood alone on the portico. It was forty years since she had parted from her husband, to whom she had been wedded but two years when he fell on the heights of Quebec; yet she had remained faithful to the memory of her "soldier," as she always called him. The steamboat halted before the mansion, the band played the "Dead March," and a salute was fired, and the ashes of the venerated hero and the departed husband passed on. The attendants of the Spartan widow now appeared, but, overcome by the tender emotions of the moment, she had swooned and fallen to the floor." The Sawkill Creek flows through a beautiful ravine in the Montgomery grounds, and above this is the St. Stephens' Seminary, which prepares students for the ministry of the Episcopal church.

Next south of Montgomery Place is Barrytown, on the east bank, 96 miles from New York. It is said, when General Jackson was President, and this village wanted a post-office, that he would not allow it under the name of Barrytown, from personal dislike to general Barry, and suggested another name; but the people were loyal to their old friend, and went without a postoffice until a new administration. The name of Barrytown, therefore, stands as a monument to pluck. Farther on we pass Feincliff, on the east bank, formerly the residence of William Astor, now the home of John Jacob Astor. Our next stop is Rhinebeck, near which stands Mount Hymettus, overlooking West Park. There is seen the Frothingham residence and Frothingham Park. The old Astor place is also close at hand. Passing on we see Mrs. Livingston's residence, on the east bank, and just above this the home of the late William B. Dinsmore. Passing Vanderburg Cove, cut off from the river by the tracks of the New York Central, we see the residence of Jacob Ruppert. Passing Ellerslie Dock, we see "Ellerslie" the palatial summer home of Ex Vice-President Levi P. Morton, an estate of 600 acres.

We next come to Poughkeepsie, Queen City of the Hudson. It is said there are forty different ways of spelling Poughkeepsie, and every year the postoffice record gives a new one. The first house was built in 1702. Ten years later the state convention met at Poughkeepsie, for ratification of the Federal constitution. The town has a beautiful location, and is justly regarded the first residence city on the river. It is not only mid-way between New York and Albany, but also mid-way between the Highlands and Catskills, commanding a view of the mountain portals on the south and the mountain overlook on the north the Gibraltar of Revolutionary fame and the dreamland of Rip Van Winkle. In the Poughkeepsie Court House, by only one vote, the colony of New York consented to become a part of the American Republic. Poughkeepsie honored, in May 1824, the arrival of Lafayette, and dined him, besides exchanging speeches with him. Daniel Webster has spoken in her courthouse, and Henry Clay, in 1844, when a presidential candidate, stopped for a reception. Poughkeepsie has been known for more than half a century as the City of Schools. Vassar College, the first institution in the world devoted to higher culture of women, is situated two miles east of the city. The college has a

for Infants and Children.

MOTHERS, Do You Know that Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, many so-called Soothing Syrups, and most remedies for children are composed of opium or morphine?

Do You Know that opium and morphine are stupefying narcotic poisons?

Do You Know that in most countries druggists are not permitted to sell narcotics without labeling them poisons?

Do You Know that you should not permit any medicine to be given your child unless you or your physician know of what it is composed?

Do You Know that Castoria is a purely vegetable preparation, and that a list of its ingredients is published with every bottle?

Do You Know that Castoria is the prescription of the famous Dr. Samuel Pitcher. That it has been in use for nearly thirty years, and that more Castoria is now sold than of all other remedies for children combined?

Do You Know that the Patent Office Department of the United States, and of other countries, have issued exclusive right to Dr. Pitcher and his assigns to use the word "Castoria" and its formula, and that to imitate them is a state prison offense?

Do You Know that one of the reasons for granting this government protection was because Castoria had been proven to be absolutely harmless?

Do You Know that 35 average doses of Castoria are furnished for 35 cents, or one cent a dose?

Do You Know that when possessed of this perfect preparation, your children may be kept well, and that you may have unbroken rest?

Well, these things are worth knowing. They are facts.

The Richmond Times encourages the idea of a change of name for New York. It says the city is getting bad enough to need another alias. This view of the matter is entitled to respectful consideration.

The doctors of divinity complain that their congregations, instead of sitting beneath the drippings of the sanctuary are riding on their wheels "in God's first temples," while the doctors of medicine complain that their patients are riding away from them. Surely the wheel is an invention of the cloven-hoofed demon.

An American base-ball team on its way to play a series of games in Cuba was mistaken by the Spaniards for a band of insurgents and the boys were arrested. It was mightly lucky for the Spaniards that that crowd was not a gang of foot-ball players, otherwise the royalist troops would have been routed or driven into the sea in two minutes.

A Newark (Ohio) man claims that J. Wilkes Booth was not shot and killed by Boston Corbett, but that he, himself, assisted Booth to escape to South America, where he is now living. We do not know the name of this picturesque Newark romancer, but his work has all the characteristic lightness, elegance and asininity of the airy persiflage of Colonel Jo eph Mulhatton.

The express business of this country has reached gigantic proportions. The American has the largest mileage, 43,000; then the Wells-Fargo, 29,000; Adams, 22,000; Southern, 22,000; United States, 21,400; and Pacific, 21,300. In respect to the number of packages handled in a year, the Adams stands first, the Wells-Fargo second, the American third, and the United States fourth. In respect to money orders issued, the American stands far at the head, with the United States and Wells-Fargo rivals for the second.

The bill permitting towns and cities in Massachusetts to regulate the liquor traffic by the Norwegian system has been defeated in the Legislature of that State, the vote in the House being 128 against to 65 in its favor. Last year the same bill was passed in the House and defeated in the Senate. This ends the question at least for a year. The bill provided that only those cities could adopt the system which had voted for license two or three times consecutively. Prohibition places were ruled out. Evidently Government control of the traffic is not in favor in Massachusetts.

A unique object lesson was recently given to the insurance men of Philadelphia at one of their gatherings at the Merchants' Exchange. It was to show what might result from the common practice of grounding telephone wires on gas pipes. A bad connection is generally made, but quite sufficient for telephone purposes. Finally the telephone wire comes in contact with an electric light wire by some break, a heavy current is transferred to the telephone wire, and, meeting resistance at the ground connection, heats the joint, burns a hole through the gas pipe, and the gas is thus ignited. Other very interesting experiments were exhibited to show the dangers from fires due to the electric current.

A paper in New York City is publishing historical sketches of events which occurred there or in connection with the commerce of the port 100 years ago. In one place the writer tells his readers that "a cyclone was evidently not a cyclone in 1795. It was simply a severe gust." It is probable that what was called a severe gust then ought not to be denominated a cyclone today. It must have been a tornado that swept through Hempstead, Long Island, June 2, 1795, demolishing barns, dwelling houses, orchards, fences and woods. It is strange that the average newspaper writer of this enlightened day always uses the word "cyclone" where he ought to write "tornado."

Another poor woman, only 21 years of age, after quarreling with her husband, committed suicide in Chicago by taking carbolic acid. Suicides by the use of this poison are increasing alarmingly, although there is no other poison which produces such horrible agony. It is comparable only to drinking liquid fire. The reason for its use must grow out of the fact that carbolic acid is cheap and can be procured from any druggist without any suspicious questions. Is it not time, however, that some check should be put upon druggists so that these poor creatures who want to get out of the world may find it as difficult to get carbolic acid as it is to get arsenic, strychnine, or other poisons? It will save them a great deal of unnecessary agony.

A Chicago young man suddenly fell heir to $1,000,000 the other day, and the first thing he did was to buy a 50-cent cigar. The act was typical of the uses to which wealth acquired as this was is likely to be put. The man or woman in moderate circumstances who unexpectedly receives a large fortune through the death of a distant relative usually has very little idea of the best way in which to use the newly acquired possessions. The fact that wealth brings responsibilities is too often lost sight of, even by those who work hard for their money, and it is especially likely to be forgotten by a young man suddenly dazzled by prospective riches. He who receives wealth without working for it is prone to have very little idea of its value or of the duties which it brings. As a result, money acquired in large amounts by inheritance or bequest is likely to be extravagantly and foolishly squandered.

THE ROAD RUNNER OF ARIZONA.

A Bird with Tireless Legs—Decided for the Rattlesnakes.

"There is a bird down in my country," said Major Ransom of Arizona, "which we call the road runner. It is an interesting fellow, this bird, and a fashion of plover, I take it, with long legs that never give out and which devour distance with an appetite that never seems appeased. Generally two road runners go together, for company sake, no doubt. They seem to be great gossipers and do a vast sight of talking to each other. They will chase ahead of your horse as you ride along the trail, and keep up the strife for miles and miles and hours and hours with a steady side-to-side motion much like the gait of a pacing horse. Why they run along ahead of one in this insane fashion can only be guessed at. It would seem to be for fun and exercise.

"They are gifted with a great deal of sagacious malevolence toward the rattlesnakes, with which crawling brood the runner has deadly feud. I suppose the rattlesnake pounces upon the road runner's eggs and makes omelets of them; or gobbles up their young on a spring chicken theory. Whatever the cause of hate, however, the road runner is the deadly enemy of the rattlesnake. They wreak vengeance on it in this way: They espy a rattlesnake in the sun. 'Mum' is the countersign with your road runner; he never says a word. He and his fellow road runner go about in discreet silence and collect the dried, dead joints of the flat cactus, which abounds in the southwestern deserts. They build a corral about the dozing serpent with them.

"These pieces of cactus bristle with thorns as sharp and keen as needles. When they have their snake corralled, the road runners arouse it with yells and the flapping of their little jimcrow wings. They revile it and scold it, and appear to apply all kinds of hard epithets to it. The snake gets frightened and its rattles buzz. But they don't come near it. They stand at a safe distance and rail at it. At last the snake tries to crawl away, but can't cross the cactus fence, which the road runners have built. The spines prick the snake and it draws back. Meanwhile the road runners keep up their derisive racket. With each prick of the cactus the rattlesnake's wrath increases. At last, in desperate, brainless fury it begins to bite itself. Its poison is as deadly to itself as to everybody else, and in a short time it dies. Great then is the mad triumph of the road runners, which taunt it until its last gasp, and exult over the corpse like savages. After the snake is surely dead they walk off with airs of cockney satisfaction, and, as it were, arm in arm."

Unpleasantly Surprised.

"The fact of painting a fly or bee so true to nature that the observer attempts to brush it away is not so difficult as is generally supposed," remarked a painter of still life. "The art lies in making the insect stand out from the background. Not long ago a patron brought me six saucers and a card upon which was pinned a house centipede, or "thousand legs," requesting me to copy it exactly upon each of the saucers, so that the base of the cup would cover it. I did so. Afterward he told me that he had given a little tea party, and without the knowledge of his wife had substituted the painted saucers for the plain ones. His amusement consisted in observing the horrified expression on the faces of the guests when they raised their cups and the quickness with which they put them down again to keep the monster imprisoned. It was only when the hostess noticed that none of the guests drank their tea that the deception was discovered."

DEATH THEIR DOOM.

THIRTEEN PILGRIMS TO ST. ANNE'S SHRINE PERISH.

Second Section of an Excursion Train Plows Into the First—Pullman Cars Telescoped—Wheat Drops Five Cents in Chicago—Cornell Wins.

Was a Fatal Crash.

At Craig's Road station, Quebec, a pilgrim excursion on the Grand Trunk road from Sherbrooke was being run in two sections. The first section stopped at Craig's Road to cross an uptrain, when the second section ran into it, the engine plowing through the Pullman and first-class car. Thirteen persons were killed outright and over thirty hurt. Ten passenger cars and the engine were wrecked.

The pilgrims were en route to the famous shrine of St. Anne de Baupre, where every summer large numbers of sick and crippled gather to invoke the saint to cure them of their diseases. The trains were made up of residents from Sherbrooke, Magog, Windsor Mills, and surrounding parishes. The forward train was making good time, having left Richmond at 10 o'clock the night before. On the rear of this train was a Pullman, in which were the priests and others in charge of the party, and it was in this car that most of the loss of life occurred. The first train reached Craig's Road, which is fourteen miles west of Levis, about 3 o'clock and stopped at the tank to take water. Precautions were taken and the semaphore thrown to danger against the following train. Only the trainmen were out and about, attending to their duties. The Pullman in the rear was wrapped in silence and the sleepers were unaware of the terrible fate that was rushing upon them.

Suddenly there was a great crash. The second train coming at full speed dashed into the rear Pullman of the first section. So great was the impetus of the colliding train that the engine embedded itself in the palace car, and the latter plunged forward and partly telescoped the first-class car immediately in front. Every berth in the Pullman was wrecked and some of the occupants who were killed never knew what happened to them. They died sleeping. Others awoke to their horrible surroundings and position, maimed, bleeding, and bruised, conscious of little else but the agony that racked them.

The cries of the wounded and the moans of the dying, and the outpouring of passengers from cars that were not badly damaged, and the hurrying forms of the uninjured trainmen with their flickering lanterns, all combined to make a sight seldom exceeded in its horror.

CORNELL THE WINNER.

Sensational Result of the Long-Expected International Boat Race.

All the flower of England's nobility, society and college folk saw Cornell defeat the crack English eight, the Leanders, without rowing against them in the first day's race for the Grand Challenge cup of the Henley regatta. The Leanders were not ready when the gun was fired and the Cornells started over the course alone. The winners of the two other races for the Grand Challenge cup were the Eton and Trinity eights. The Trinity crew beat the London crew by six lengths, while the Eton boys came across the finish line with a quarter of a length of clear water showing between its stern and the prow of the Thames boat.

Every good American expected that Cornell would win. Every good American is sorry that it has won in form and manner as related by cable dispatches. Not that Cornell is to blame for the outcome; the American crew was ready to start when the umpire, a Briton, gave the word "Go;" the British crew did not start, and the Americans won without opposition. It is a barren victory. Obviously, the Leander crew was in a state of poor discipline, for in answer to the umpire's question, "Ready?" one of its members said "Yes!" and Cornell had got under way in obedience to the command "Go!" before Leander's coxswain had countermanded his comrade's "Yes!" The grand challenge cup now is a trophy of Cornell, but it is a trophy won by misadventure of the Leander crew, rather than of conquest. The expectation was of victory for Cornell; its crew had made better time than that of the Leander in trial rowing trips over the course; its style of rowing was considered better by competent judges. The best thing that can be done is to row the race over again.

The grand challenge cup is the most coveted of rowing prizes. It can be contested over only by amateurs who are members of a university, or of a public school affiliated to a university, or are members of her Majesty's army or navy. The cup is held by the winning crew until it is defeated by another. It was believed in America that Cornell would capture the cup. It has captured it, but under existing circumstances it may be well that it shall capture it again.

PANIC IN THE PIT.

Wheat Drops Five Cents a Bushel 'Mid Exciting Scenes.

Tuesday was the most nervous and exciting day the Chicago Board of Trade has seen since the farmers came into town some weeks ago and bought wheat up from 52 cents to 82¾ cents. Wheat declined 5 cents, and many an excited man chased his fortune to the brink of the wheat pit to see it sink out of sight. And these crazy bulls, says a Chicago dispatch, brought their grappling hooks in the shape of reported damage to Northwest crops by hot winds, and threatening frosts, etc., and dragged the pit, but they couldn't find their gold. Surely enough, it seemed to be a bottomless pit.

The bulls were never in it at all. The bears ran the whole show from the start. Wheat opened up at 67 5-8c, and in three or four minutes had sunk to 66¼c. This was a great surprise to the bull element, which hoped for a firmer market. The bulls tried to talk, but were choked off. A week ago when the market was hanging fire they were somebody, for they could frighten the bears with a little telegram telling how wheat was growing into the shock or something of that kind, but Tuesday morning their chinch bugs were dead, their hot winds didn't blow, and their frost melted.

If the bulls were disappointed when the price of September went to 66¼c they were doomed to greater disappointment later. They smiled when a little rally to 67⅛c was made, but that market was only fooling them when it went up there. It soon turned around and came down hill lickity-cut again, and sold down to 64 cents. But this wasn't the bottom. Along toward the close of the session the price simply leaped over the 65's and closed at 62½c.

In New York the speculative pyrotechnics at the Produce Exchange were dazzling to both the bulls and the bears in wheat, and both factions were equally astonished. A drop of 5 cents a bushel made the hair of the bulls stand on end and it made the bears blink. That makes 8 cents in two days. The bulls thought the course of prices altogether too much like tobogganing. The sudden tumble—the greatest in years—caused a great deal of excitement and interest in Milwaukee. The fact that wheat closed at 62 5-8 cents represented a drop within twenty-four hours that was calculated to create almost a panic

WEATHER AND CROP BULLETIN.

Signal Service Report on Temperature and Crop Conditions.

The official crop and weather bulletin for the past week shows the average to be three to six degrees cooler than the average throughout the Mississippi and Ohio Valleys. Heavy rains have fallen in Oklahoma, Missouri and the northern portion of the Gulf region. Through the Southern States the average fall has been from one to two inches more than the usual amount. The lake region and upper Mississippi Valley had practically no rain. Nebraska and the Dakotas suffered materially from drouth.

Corn has made very rapid growth during the week and, except in Michigan, the general outlook for this crop is excellent. Arkansas reports the largest crop in years, and in Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, Illinois and Missouri the outlook is most promising. The general outlook for spring wheat continues most flattering. Winter wheat harvest is practically completed and thrashing continues general. Some damage in shock has been caused in Maryland by heavy rains; also in Missouri and Kansas. Tobacco is growing well in Kentucky, but the crop is uneven. In Maryland it is in excellent condition and in Ohio it is improved, except in the central part of the State, where it is suffering from drouth. From the Central and Southwestern States the reports are as follows:

Illinois—Last week very favorable except in southern counties; wheat and rye thrashing general, yield light, quality poor; oats harvest completed in southern and progressing in central counties; straw short, yield light; corn growing finely and generally laid by; haying continues with very light crop.

South Dakota—Above normal temperature, high southerly winds, two exceedingly warm days and only scattered showers, mostly light, have been injurious to small grain and grasses over a number of counties; corn grew rapidly and potatoes did well; rain needed generally.

Nebraska—Cool, dry week; wheat and rye harvest has progressed rapidly in southern counties and thrashing commenced, the yield is less than half a crop; oats ripening fast; corn has made good growth and is in fine condition, some early planted tasseling.

Kansas—Cool, cloudy week, with excessive rains, have generally stopped harvesting and thrashing and injured grain in shock, but has been beneficial to all other crops and furnished abundant stock water; corn generally tasseling and beginning to silk and never more promising; flax, fruit, pastures and potatoes fine.

Iowa—Weather favorable except serious need of rain in some eastern counties; oats harvest begun, with prospects of heavy yield; corn has made rapid advancement and other crops are in satisfactory condition.

Michigan—Showers over upper peninsula which were poorly distributed; in lower peninsula there has practically been no rain, and drouth continues with great severity; hay and wheat very poor crops, and oats will give a light yield; corn is just beginning to show effects of drouth; if rain comes soon it can yet help corn, potatoes, pastures and gardens.

Ohio—Favorable for thrashing wheat and hay harvesting; light yields reported; corn, oats, late potatoes and tobacco have improved in growth from rains, except over middle section, where drouth retards growth; pasturage very poor, and water becoming scarce.

Indiana—Warm, fair weather favorable to harvesting; end of week favorable to corn and potatoes, and both crops are in fine condition and growing rapidly; thrashing wheat and rye continues; yield better wheat and rye continues; yield better than expected in localities; haying continues; crop poor.

Wisconsin—The past week has been hot and dry; haying about half completed; rye and barley harvest in progress, and the crop is generally good; corn and potatoes unaffected by drouth, and growing rapidly; oats promise a good crop; pastures very poor.

DEADLY RAID OF BURGLARS.

Armed Men Lie in Wait for the Expected Thieves at Poland, Ind.

As a consequence of a bold attempt to rob W. F. Katteman's general merchandise store at Poland, Ind., one burglar was shot dead and another fatally wounded. Mr. Katteman's store has been robbed twice within the last two months, and recently two men have been guarding the store at night. They were armed with Winchester repeating shotguns. About 1 o'clock Tuesday morning the guards heard a noise in the wareroom and discovered three men, one of whom carried a large revolver. Huffman and Dressler, who were guarding the store, opened fire on the burglars, instantly killing one and sending a charge of shot in another's head, inflicting a fatal wound. The third man escaped, but was subsequently captured and is now in jail. Officers of Terre Haute recognized the men. The wounded man's name is Edgar and he resides at Terre Haute. He has served a term in the penitentiary. The dead man was recognized as Harry Jackson, a noted crook of Chicago.

Income Taxes Returned.

The commissioner of internal revenue Tuesday allowed eighty-five claims for tax paid under the income tax law, aggregating $13,823. The amounts ranged from $30.30 to $2. The collection of the tax under the law before it was declared unconstitutional amounted to about $75,000. The names of taxpayers to whom money was refunded will not be disclosed by the commissioner.

TROUBLE IN THE CAMP

REPUBLICANS EXPECT LOSSES IN NORTHERN STATES.

Attempt to Keep Up Their Courage by Claiming Improbable Gains—Coming Prosperity Reluctantly Admitted by Champions of Protection.

Republican Losses and Gains.

It is evident that the Republicans expect to lose some, at least, of the great Northern States which they carried by handsome majorities in 1894. They are not saying much about these States, but they are making vociferous claims that they will carry Kentucky, Maryland and Tennessee. If they did not expect serious losses, they would not attempt to keep up their courage by claiming improbable gains.

There is abundant cause for the Republicans to apprehend the loss of States at the North which they carried last year by overwhelming odds. In nearly every one of these States they are rent by factions, and each faction is declaring that it would be better for the Democrats to win than for the other faction to win. Warner Miller, in an open letter, said that he had rather see a Democrat elected than the leading Republican candidate for the nomination elected in one of the Senate districts of New York. Throughout that State the Platt and anti-Platt factions are fighting each other with greater vigor and determination than either faction is fighting the Democrats.

In Pennsylvania the war between the Cameron and Quay faction and the faction led by Governor Hastings is embittered in the extreme. "Don" Cameron's Senatorial term expires March 4, 1897, and the Quay politicians are in such straits that they have attempted to unload by announcing that he will not be a candidate for election to another term. In Ohio the condition of the Republican factions is as bad as in New York and Pennsylvania.

In the States carried by the Republicans last year the grossest scandals have occurred in the administrative departments and in the legislatures. The yet incomplete history of the Illinois General Assembly is a specimen of the condition of affairs in other States. Popular indignation has been excited by the enactment of bad laws and by failure to enact good laws, and by general inaction, incompetence and corruption. In every "landslide" State, without exception, this is the record that the victorious Republicans have made.

The Republicans have deserved to lose the great Northern States that they carried overwhelmingly in 1894, and such is the present probability. But their expectation of making gains at the South to offset, in whole or in part, their losses at the North is absurd. What gains they made at the South last year probably will disappear, instead of increasing, in 1895 and 1896.—Chicago Chronicle.

How Dare Prosperity Come?

Where is McKinley? Where are all and singular the Republican editors, the Republican orators, the Republican statesmen who with one direful voice proclaimed in season and out of season that Democratic policy for the reduction of taxation and the elimination of the fraudulent pretense of protection to workingmen would reduce American laborers to the condition of paupers and destroy the industries of the United States?

Day after day the announcement comes of voluntary increase of wages by industrial concerns from one end of the land to the other, especially from those giant industries specially the object of Republican protection—furnaces, forges and rolling mills. The iron industry is the greatest precursor of improved conditions. Throughout the United States the iron industry is actively at work. The fact that the Democratic tariff law reduced the so-called element of protection cuts no figure at all. Wages are increased, activities at iron mines are renewed, lines of transportation are more widely employed, business conditions are everywhere more favorable.

Where is that apostle of calamity and disaster, that fraudulent preacher of the false doctrine that the United States must put heavy taxes upon the whole body of the people in order to render themselves prosperous; that hired advocate of the few who wish themselves to be the special objects of government regard? McKinley is running up and down the land, looking for a nomination to the presidency at the hands of the Republican party, still preaching calamity and distress as the necessary outcome of Democratic tariff laws, and holding his peace profoundly on the silver question. And if nominated in 1896 thereafter nothing will again be heard in this country of either McKinley or McKinleyism.

The Evasive Allison.

"General" J. S. Clarkson, erstwhile of Iowa, now very much at large, is in New York loudly urging the "claims" of Allison to the presidency. In the very heart of the enemy's country, in the bailiwick of Mayor Strong, a militant McKinleyite, and Tom Platt, who has views of his own hostile to the Iowan, the faithful Clarkson raises the standard of Allison and calls lustily upon all to rally about it.

Conservatism is the virtue which Clarkson thinks makes his chief the fittest leader for the Republicans in the impending conflict. If the issue turn on the tariff question, why, there is Allison, who doesn't think a tariff should be too high or too low, who insists that the people shall be taxed neither too much nor too little. And if it be the currency which shall mark the dividing between the hostile camps in November, 1896, who shall dub Allison a "gold bug" or a "silver crank," who can justly charge him with "striking silver down" or with seeking to debase the nation's standard of value? Haply none. Upon these vexed questions of national polity Iowa sage has maintained so nicely impartial an attitude that either side may count him as one of them. In the biology of politics he stands like one of those lower forms of invertebrates, too insensate to be classed as animals, but endowed with such powers of independent motion as to make biologists hesitate to class them as vegetables.

It may be creditable to Mr. Allison's sagacity that at the end of a long public life no man can define with exactness his position on any vital public question. It is not at all creditable to American political methods that this consistent policy of trimming and evasion should be held to peculiarly qualify him for the presidency.

Admitted Prosperity.

The Chicago Inter Ocean, that with veiled lids has been seeking McKinley in the dust, mourning, as one that could not be consoled, the fearful calamities which it said must fall upon this nation as the result of the reduction of taxation at the custom houses, not only lifts its eyes to see prosperity upon every hand under a Democratic tariff, but lifts also its voice to exclaim in joyful note:

ALL SAY IT'S A BOOM.

MERCHANTS CLAIM AN ERA OF PROSPERITY HAS BEGUN.

DARK DAYS LEFT BEHIND.

DRY GOODS MEN SPEAK OF A VAST IMPROVEMENT IN TRADE.

Clothing and Boot and Shoe Manufacturers All Tell of Increasing Orders.

Do we sleep? Do we dream? Is civilization a failure? Is the Caucasian played out? Here is a journal that has never failed to assert that if Democrats, voted into legislative and executive authority by the people of the United States, should make the slightest reduction of taxation from the schedules set up by Republicans, should make a single step in the direction of free trade, the land would lie prostrate under a blow delivered by the land itself! If, was the dire prediction of the Inter Ocean and all its class, the Democratic party should reduce taxation at the custom houses an average of 50 per cent, the prosperity of the country would disappear, its industries would be delivered into the hands of the Philistines, its workingmen would be reduced to a condition of paupers and peace and prosperity would forever fly therefrom.

We have not yet had a year of the Wilson law. The result shows all over the United States. Out of the clutches of McKinleyism the country begins to resume that prosperity that McKinley and Sherman between them had nearly destroyed. The Wilson bill, lacking all that it ought to be, yet furnishing on the average some 50 per cent reduction of taxation, assists the people of the United States to regain their feet far more rapidly after the panic of 1893 than after the panic of 1873, when Grant was President and the Republican party was in full control of every branch of the Government.

When Will Democracy Die?

When the lion eats grass like an ox,
And the fishworm swallows the whale;
When the robins knit woolen socks,
And the hare is outrun by the snail;
When serpents walk upright like man,
And doodle-bugs travel like frogs;
When grasshoppers feed like the hen,
And feathers are found on hogs;
When Thomas cats swim in the air,
And elephants roost on trees;
When insects in summer are rare,
And snuff never makes people sneeze;
When fish creep over dry land,
And mules on velocipedes ride;
When foxes lay eggs in the sand,
And women in dress take no pride;
When Dutchmen no longer drink beer,
And girls get to preaching on time;
When billy-goats butt from the rear,
And treason no longer is crime;
When humming birds bray like an ass,
And limburger smells like cologne;
When plowshares are made out of glass,
And the hearts of true Texans of stone;
When ideas grow in Populists' heads,
And the wool on the hydraulic ram,
Then the Democratic party will be dead,
And the country won't be worth a d—n.

A Tin Plate Nail in McKinley's Coffin.

The increased number and prosperity of the tin-plate mills drive another nail in the coffin of McKinleyism. The new tariff made tin ore free, as it was before the McKinley bill clapped on the preposterous and oppressive tax of four cents a pound. It also reduced the duty on tin-plate from 2 2-10 cents a pound to 1 1-5 cents. Yet there are thirty-five tin works rolling their own black plates and seven in course of erection. In addition there are thirty tin-plate dipping works prospering because of untaxed metal. The amount of finished plates will be increased this year, according to the Metal Worker, from 4,110,000 boxes of finished plates to 5,500,000 boxes, or nearly four-fifths the consumption. The logic of events is making short work with the theories of high-tariff men.—New York World.

Carrying a Heavy Handicap.

Ohio's favored son is logically a hard-times candidate. By an overwhelming majority he was re-elected governor of Ohio as a calamity howler who charged all disaster to the party who overthrew his tariff system and substituted that now in operation. His graphic description of the troubles and sufferings that must be endured until McKinleyism could be restored are on record to discredit him as to his alleged facts as well as to his prescience as a statesman. He committed himself beyond hope of hedging or explaining. He burned his bridges behind him and stands before the people to-day carrying the handicap of a dead issue.—Detroit Free Press.

The Popular Income Tax Idea.

We have heard many men in this country discuss the income tax question, and only the few having a tax to pay have opposed it. One rich summer visitor to Cooperstown, who would have had a large tax to pay, wrote to us when Congress passed the law: "It is one of the most equitable and just taxes ever imposed to carry on the government."—Freeman's Journal.

AN IMPROVED ARC-LAMP.

The Special Feature Is a Convenient Means of Trimming and Feeding.

The pictures here shown are taken from the Electrical Review. They represent a new arc lamp of artistic and convenient design. The first cut shows the lamp ready for burning; the other shows it with the ornamental casing raised so that the feed-rod may be cleaned and the carbons adjusted in line.

The casing is held up by a bayonet-joint at the top of the suspending tube, and in that position it does not interfere in any way with the cleaner while Texan Gets Ice from the Sky.

A remarkable successful plan of obtaining artificial ice has been invented by a ingenious farmer of El Paso, Texas. Even in the hottest summer day this son of the soil will partly fill a tin can with water, attach it to the tail of an enormous kite, and send it to the great height of three miles, where in the rarefied atmosphere it is promptly frozen, completely filling the can. After a sufficient interval for this purpose the kite is rapidly hauled in with a windlass, and the cake of ice removed from the can. But the inventor is now perfecting an even more effective plan for manufacturing on a large scale. He sends up a huge kite, 150 feet long, by a steel wire cable. Under the kite is suspended a pulley, over which runs an endless chain, bearing at intervals hooks by which the cans of water are hung. As the cans of water going up just balance the cans of ice coming down but little power is needed. The cans are filled with water from a pond. As each hook passes the operator he removes the can of ice and hangs in its stead one of water. The cable travels but three miles an hour, and, as the big kite is kept at an altitude of from four to six miles, the cans remain in the cold strata of air quite long enough for the water to become solidified. The inventor expects to be able to furnish a 10-cent lump for 3 cents.—New York Recorder.

The Newest Women.

He Will Succeed.

Like his brother of the North, the Southern small boy is capable of much. A writer in the New York Home Journal says that upon her arrival in a Southern town her cabman was a small boy, aged about 9. The cab had two seats, and the boy told her that if, during her stay, she wanted a carriage, she could get him any time by inquiring for Jackson's Express—price six bits an hour.

"Are you Jackson?" I asked.

"Yes, ma'am," said the expressman, politely, and with great dignity. Then, lapsing into boyishness, he added: "You see, this used to be our carriage. But papa died, and mamma isn't strong—and there isn't much money—and——"

Something certainly filled the boy's throat, for his voice broke, and, hastily becoming a cabman again, he tightened the reins and indulged in a flourish of the whip. But after a little he added:

"It's a real comfort, I think, to earn your living."

Fighting the Thistle.

Western farmers find that individual attempts at fighting the Russian thistle avail nothing, because the plague grows again faster than the individual farmer can find time to hoe it down, so they all unite as often as convenient, to have "hoeing bees" in designated localities. The details of operations are settled by the town councils, every one in the neighborhood takes a day off to fight thistles, and in this way it is possible to make at least some stand against the persevering plague and to keep some sections fairly free for other than thistle crops.—Philadelphia Press.

It Is Not Modern.

People are apt to consider that golf in England is quite a modern introduction, and it will be news to many that it was popular and that it flourished pretty close to London more than a hundred years ago. Evidence of this may be found in a fine engraving by Valentine Green of a picture after L. F. Abbot, entitled "Golfers on Blackheath" and dated 1790.

Change of Life.

When a woman approaches the change of life she is liable to have a return of all the menstrual derangements, and other ailments that afflicted her in former years. The direct action of McElree's Wine of Cardui on the organs afflicted, make it the best remedy for use during this period.

Mrs. D. Pennington, West Plains, Mo., says: "I had been suffering from change of life and it took the form of dropsy. The doctors told my husband it was useless to prescribe for me any more. About that time we got Dr. McElree's book on the treatment of female diseases and decided to try the Wine of Cardui Treatment. After using nine bottles, I am well."

Prepared Breakfast While Asleep.

Somnambulism has in all ages furnished many curious illustrations, and among them may be noted one that occurred in a Utica, N. Y., residence a few days ago. The husband and wife were aroused by the breakfast bell ringing in the middle of the night. They arose and discovered that it was 2 o'clock, but on going down to the dining-room they found breakfast waiting for them. They were greatly alarmed at the condition of things, for they at first imagined that the hired girl had suddenly gone insane.

After a few minutes, however, they discovered that she was asleep. She had got up, started the fire, prepared the morning meal, and had it ready for serving, but was sound asleep all the time. The gentleman was about to summon a physician, when the wife dashed a glass of cold water in the girl's face and she awoke.

IN DESPAIR.

A PEN PICTURE.

Many Women Will Recognize It.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

"Oh, I am so nervous! No one ever suffered as I do! There isn't a well inch in my whole body! I honestly think my lungs are diseased, my chest pains me so; but I've no cough. I'm so weak at my stomach, and have indigestion horribly. Then I have palpitation, and my heart hurts me. How I am losing flesh! and this headache nearly kills me; and the backache—Heavens! I had hysterics yesterday. There is a weight in the lower part of my bowels, bearing down all the time; and there are pains in my groins and thighs. I can't sleep, walk, or sit. I'm diseased all over. The doctor? Oh! he tells me to keep quiet. Such mockery!

Inflammatory and ulcerative conditions at the neck of the womb can produce all the above symptoms in the same person. In fact, there is hardly a part of the body that can escape those sympathetic pains and aches.

No woman should allow herself to reach such a perfection of misery when there is positively no need of it.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound acts promptly and thoroughly in such cases; strengthens the muscles of the womb, heals all inflammation, and restores that unruly organ to its normal condition. Druggists are selling carloads of it. Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., will gladly and freely answer all letters asking for advice.

Mrs. E. Bishop, 787 Halsey Street, Brooklyn, N.Y., suffered all the above described horrors. Now she is well. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cured her. Write her about it.

LITTLE THINGS THAT HAVE MADE MILLIONS.

Invent Something.

Do you need money? If so, why not give your attention to the invention of small and useful articles which may be patented? A little investigation will satisfy anybody that a great amount of money has been made in recent years from small, and, in some cases, trivial patents. It is true that the inventor has not in all cases secured much of the profit himself, but it seems that with energy and ordinary business ability he should be able to do so. How trivial the invention may be is shown by the statement that the "Pigs-in-Clover" puzzle brought in $100,000. Experience does not prove that it is wise for the inventor to occupy himself with such a thing if he can invent something useful. Patents which did not earn a tenth as much as "Pigs-in-Clover" in the same period are profitable still.

THIS WAS SOLD FOR $50,000.

Of course it is given to few to invent such things as telephones or valuable improvements on them, but many intelligent men must feel themselves capable of devising a mucilage bottle that will not clog, or something else of that humble order of usefulness. The modern tendency in business is to struggle for a monopoly. Capitalists are not contented with being rich. They want all the money which the business in which they are engaged is capable of gathering from the people of the whole country. The man without capital appears to have no chance of getting control of any business or industry. He certainly cannot control the supply of all the beef or all the school books in the land, but there is always one way by which without capital he may obtain a little monopoly of his own. That is by means of an invention and a patent. An enterprising New York firm, realizing the attraction which the subject of small patents would have for many men, make it a business of dealing in them. Its circulars show what large sums have already been made by small inventions, and indicate a number of others for which the public is now waiting.

Among the remarkably profitable small inventions is an ingenious automatic shading pen, for which the inventor is to receive $40,000 a year. This pen is used in engrossing, and it makes it possible to use four colors at the same time. A novelty in an automatic inkstand is another example. This keeps an equal supply of clear ink always ready for the pen. It is said that $200,000 has been realized by this. An automatic funnel was sold for $57,000, a knitting machine has earned millions, a squirt boutonniere brings royalties of $12,000 a year.

Among the inventions which it is promised would realize a fortune are a key-board typewriter which could be sold for $25, a device to deaden the noise made by the typewriter, a way of making kerosene odorless, a cheap envelope which cannot be opened without detection, a time stamp for street letter boxes, showing time of deposit of letters. There is, of course, great field for inventions useful in the household. A shoe polishing machine would confer much happiness and improve the general appearance of the community. The great bar to the happiness of the average pipe smoker is the difficulty of cleaning the instrument. As yet it cannot be done without much unpleasant labor. A pipe that will not foul will make a fortune.

Small Farms.

The thrifty Eastern farmer, who cultivates thoroughly his ten or twenty acres of fertile soil, is probably better off than his Western brothers on their hundred-acre farms, and he is making a better living, writes Prof. R. P. Mason. He is better off because he has found out from experience that ten acres are often quite enough for one man to farm, and that when a farm of this size is properly run it pays a good living. His whole life is a steady one, and not a speculative one. He does not expect to make big profits and grow rich suddenly. The dairymen of New York and Pennsylvania, the fruit growers of New Jersey and the Hudson River and the general market gardeners of Masachusetts settle down quietly to their small farms and make them pay, because it is a steady job, and a sure one if properly worked. There are plenty of indications that small farms are increasing throughout the West, especially in the dairy districts. Young farmers who understand their business do not require large estates in the West, as they have been taught to believe. They will do much better to buy one-tenth the amount of land, and put the rest of the money in the bank or in improvements. In the end it will pay a better rate of interest.

The Care of Farming Tools.

Foreigners who have traveled through the United States have always been struck by the carelessness of our farmers in regard to their machinery. No other farmers in the world make such general use of the devices for saving toil produced by modern invention, and nowhere else are such implements so neglected when not in actual use.

Too often a farmer who buys a valuable machine leaves it standing out of doors, exposed to all the vicissitudes of the weather until he has occasion to use it again the following year. Then when he examines it he finds it seriously out of repair, and he suffers delay while it is being put into good condition. Sometimes the damage is so great that he is persuaded to trade the machine off for a new one, paying a large sum "to boot."

One good effect of the hard times has been the development of greater care in this respect among our agricultural population. People who have traveled extensively through the Southern and Western States during the last winter report that the farmers now keep their machines under cover more generally than they ever did before.—Florida Citizen.

The Chinese Style of Boats.

There are three Chinese junks in San Francisco Bay engaged in the shrimping trade. A reporter who visited one of them, the Lund Sune, found everything arranged contrary to nature, according to Western notions. The planking of the deck ran athwartship, the anchor hung over the stern, the rudder had a large number of diamond-shaped holes in it and the batwing-like sail was hoisted with an uncouth windlass though it would be quicker and easier to give the halyards a few pulls. Then the ribs came up a few inches above the deck and the side-planking ran beyond the stern, as if the ship carpenter had forgotten to come back with a saw and finish his job. Nevertheless the captain of the Lund Sune regards her as a clipper and wants to enter in the Fourth of July regatta, if there is to be one.

Presence of Mind.

The fault of exaggeration is a common one, but not all who indulge it have the presence of mind to retrieve their blunders as did a certain admiral. He was describing a voyage, at supper one night.

"While cruising in the Pacific," said he, "we passed an island which was positively red with lobsters."

"But," interrupted one of the guests, "lobsters are not red until boiled."

"Of course not," replied the admiral nothing daunted, "but this was a volcanic island with boiling springs."

THERE is a hermit living in the Patoka River bottoms, near Heyden, who calls himself Bill Cox. He tells a story in effect that years ago his family died until none was left but himself, and then a mysterious voice whispered in his ear that his life was in danger, and that he must leave the State at once. Thereupon he returned to Indiana, and finding this secluded spot in the Patoka River bottoms, he erected a rude little cabin, and there he has remained in seclusion ever since, subsisting on roots, berries and small game. He belives that his hermit way of living is an atonement for crime, of which he refuses to speak.

SUPERINTENDENT of Police Meagher of Terre Haute, will issue a call for a convention of Indiana police chiefs, to be held in that city the first week in October. The convention is to be of chiefs in cities which come under the new metropolitan police law, which affects nearly one hundred cities in the State. The time is fixed to be during the fall trotting meeting.

MRS. WILSON SAGERS, near Burrows Station, while hitching up a team, preparatory to going to her daughter's wedding, was crushed by one of the horses against a high board fence and fatally injured. Only a few months ago, during the absence of the family from the house, two of their children ate rat poison, and were found dead upon their parents' return.

An English Preacher Discusses Probabilities as to Mercury, Venus, and Mars.

Rev. Dr. Dallinger delivered a lecture at Bristol the other night on the planets around us and their possible habitability, says the Pall Mall Budget. Speaking of Mercury, Dr. Dallinger pointed out its chief features and showed that they approximated to those of the earth. Although the heat from the sun there was more intense, it might be tempered by the character of the atmosphere. Venus was yet more akin to our world in every respect, so that life there, as we know it, was yet more possible. The conditions of the atmosphere, indeed, were such that the whole globe might be inhabitable. Mars next came under review, the lecturer explaining its character, substance, atmosphere and other features, which he said made the existence of creatures, if not man, quite possible. People were slowly losing their former notions that there were nothing and nobody in the universe except the world and man. There were other world, however, which, as far as human intelligence could judge, were not yet suitable for habitation, but were gradually assuming conditions which might ultimately make life possible. The lecturer held the opinion that many years hence some means of mental communication with the denizens of the other planets might be established. In the present days of marvelous discoveries in science all things seemed possible, and the establishment of intercommunication of some kind between this earth and the beings of the planets did not seem more improbable or impossible than the sending of a telegraph message from England to New York 100 years ago.

Free to Decide.

Whether a woman acts wisely or unwisely in remaining unwed, is a question no one save herself can satisfactorily answer; but that there is a fast increasing class of women who either do not marry at all or do not marry young, everybody must admit. It seems to me, says a writer in Scribner's, that fathers of sense not quite recognize the duty that this fact imposes upon them—the duty of making such provisions for daughters that they shall, as far as possible, be free to marry or not, and shall not be impelled to do so from the mere need of a home and support. Of course this provision must vary with the means of the father. It may take the form of an adequate income, secured by a proper investment, or it may be a training in some occupation that will yield an income, or it may be in part one and in part the other. The main point, so far as the daughters are concerned, is that marriage shall be a matter of choice, that a fairly comfortable and independent life shall be made possible without it, and that no woman shall feel forced, or tempted, not to put too fine a point upon it, to become a wife to secure such a life. I know that the problem is not a simple one, and that its solution is not easy; but ease and simplicity are not the prevailing characteristics of a man's duties to his children of either sex. This one is none the less imperative on that account.

ADVERTISING PAYS: Newspaper advertising pays best of all. Our most successful and prosperous merchants and tradesmen, whose bright record has added imperishable luster to the history of American commerce, can all testify to this truth from personal experience. The newspaper is the commercial traveler in city and country home, who tells at the fireside, to its evening circle, the merits of your wares and merchandise, if you are wise enough to employ it to speak for you. It never is neglected, never goes unheeded, never speaks to inattentive or unwilling ears. It never bores. It never tires. It is always a welcome visitor and meets a cordial reception. It speaks when the day is done, when cares vanish, when the mind at peace and at rest is in its most receptive mood. Then it is that its story is told and all who read treasure what it says, and are influenced to go where it directs for the thing of which it speaks. What other influences can be so potent to help trade as this quiet but powerful advocate? Let it become a salesman in every home for your wares. Let it make its mighty plea for your benefit. And we assure you it will do more than all other influences to promote your business and put money in your purse. In our long experience we know whereof we speak. Try it. First Loan Contracted by Chicago.

The first brokers in Chicago were Strachan & Scott, in 1838-'39. The village trustees wanted to drain a slough on Clark street, south of Washington. The amount wanted was $60. The brokers would not lend the amount without an indorser. The trustees persuaded E. B. Williams to stand good for the amount. This was Chicago's first loan.

The Trust After No-To-Bac.

Chicago Special.—Reported here to-day that a large sum of money had been offered for the famous tobacco habit cure called No-To-Bac, by a syndicate who want to take it off the market. Inquiry at the general offices revealed the fact that No-To-Bac was not for sale to the trust at any price. No-To-Bac's success is marvelous. Almost every Druggist in America sells No-To-Bac under guarantee to cure tobacco habit or refund money.

THE AUBURN COURIER.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, post-office as second-class matter.

THURSDAY,.....JULY 18, 1895.

JOHN W. BAKER, proprietor of the Columbia City Commercial, has been placed in charge of the press department of the Winona assembly at Warsaw. The selection is an excellent one.

ONE of the new laws which has just gone into effect in this state provides that any man who marries a girl to escape prosecution and then deserts her within two years' time, without sufficient cause, can be prosecuted just the same as if the marriage had not taken place. This is a good, wholesome law and should have been in force long ago.

THE fruits of the big strike at Chicago last summer are now coming to the front. More than one hundred suits have been filed for damages against the city of Chicago, from railroads and other corporations, that assert their property was destroyed by the rioters during that memorable railroad strike. The claims thus far aggregate $1,175,756. Of this the Panhandle claims nearly half a million, which is the largest claim, while the claim of the Pullman company, which is the smallest, is only $26 50.

Thursday's Daily:

Big Fish.

Not the kind that bloom in the spring yarns of fishermen, but such as Auburn sportsmen catch. Al. Bishop and Bert Robbins for example. Yes, that is the idea. Al. and Bert reached home this afternoon, and brought the pick of their latest catch. The string numbered eight with a total weight of sixty pounds. The smallest weighed three pounds and the largest, thirteen. They were caught at Burt lake about twenty miles north of Petoskey, yesterday, from 11 30 to 5 30 and it was pronounced by experienced fishermen, the finest catch seen in that region. On reaching home the fish were strung on a rake handle at Al. Bishop's residence and J. G. Clepp the photographer sent for, and a good picture was taken, which will no doubt be on exhibition. And Al. and Bert, are "as well as could be expected." And after a few days if anyone asks them why they look so well fed, they can reply in the language of J. Cæsar. "We 8,—8." and so get credit for the latest conundrum.

Tuesday's Daily.

Hung Himself.

BUT NOT WITH SUICIDAL INTENT.

Yesterday evening, E. D, Beadle, attempted to go down into his cistern, to clean it out, as there was fair prospects of rain. The manhole to the cistern being very small, as he swung himself down, he found his body was too large, and his cistern so deep that he could not touch bottom, and in attempting to let himself down, one arm became doubled up in such a manner, as to wedge himself in. He was for a time perfectly powerless to help himself, but with strong voice, he made his wants known. His wife heard his cries and run to his assistance, but the predicament was so laughable, she was powerless to help him and instead, laughed at him, until he became mad, and made known that he was perfectly powerless to help himself, when she called to the hired girl to come to her assistance. The hired girl thought it was a joke, was very slow to come, and when she did arrive, she too, had to stand and laugh, and it was next to an impossibility with their combined strengh to pull him out, but finally he was landed on terra firma, not much worse than for his scare. And then he coming in earnest, he knocked the top of the cistern off, and went down and completed the job.

To cap the climax, he dressed himself, and went to lodge, and during a scuffle with one of the members, received a severe gash on the forehead, the wound being so severe, it was neccessay to call upon a doctor, who took two stitches, and patched it up with plaster.

He is again on duty this morning, at his regular post, much the worse for wear, but still in the ring.

Hen Accident.

E. Shull who lives north of town has a new way of bringing his eggs to market, and still we are not certain whether he meant to bring the eggs or the hen. However he left home this afternoon and drove up to Hi. Cupp's, west of town then back and hitched his horse in front of Rant & Co's shoe store. The hen had made her nest in the buggy and here she flew off and started down the side walk east. When in from of Olds Bros. she came in contact with their fine display of china and glassware and as a result several cans were broken. Here the hen was captured and is now held by Olds Bros for the damages. She left a nice fresh egg in the buggy and that was presented to J. E. Pomeroy as he is "batching alone." Mr. Shull spared no ime in getting into his buggy and leaving for home.

Change Of Firm

Frank Baker and John Scott have bought out Campbell and Son's blacksmith and repair shop at the corner of Jackson and fifth streets and will continue the business. Mr. Scott is a skilled workman and will do the wood work. Simon Poorman will do the horse shoeing and blacksmith work. Mr. Baker is also a blacksmith. We predict success for the new firm. Mr. Scott has long been a resident of St. Joe and will be here Monday.

Nice Grapes

The proper way to train a grape vine is to give it a good chance to get sunlight and air. This means a good chance to have room for its leaves and fruit, and lessen the chances for dampness and mildew. S. U. Tarney has a fine example of the right way to cultivate a grape vine. If our readers pass by his residence, they should look at his lovely vines. One extends laterally about 45 feet and the other about 50 feet, and both are full of fine, large, healthy grapes from end to end. They are high enough to be out of the reach of marauders and up in the sunlight and free air. They are models.

Saturday's Daily.

RARE COINS.

Fred Huelsenbeck of Ayilla was in town to-day, which reminds us that he has traveled more extensively than any other man we know. When a young man, he was a peddler and went over pearly every country of Europe from France to Roumania and including Holland, Russia etc. He managed in his business to pick up strange coins and other money from all these countries, and these he brought with him to this country. He has some coins over 2,000 years old and prizes his collection highly. We might add that Fred also has a good collection of the common sort of Uncle Sam's money—a very handy thing to have.

COLD SPRINGS.

Wednesday morning a number of the young people of Auburn started for Hamilton to spend the day at that popular resort. The young ladies who were in attendance furnished an excellent dinner for the party. Several gathered fine boquets of water lillies and brought them home for souvnirs Among those in attendance were: Mary Teeters, Della Finkley, Blanche Carpenter, Pearl Kelley, Elsie Caruth, Vina Cool, Gertie Caruth, Maud VanAuken, Dollie Husselman, Katie Cool, Rowend Tefft, Nellie Franks, Frank Ray, Nelson Morr, Phil Gibson, Chas. Schaab, Ed Little, Walter Penfield, Ed Baker and Thomas Husselman.

HOME NEEDED.

There is a little lad in this town who wants a home. His name is Abe Wingent and his home is in the south part of town. It is said his home is not very pleasant to him and he has asked several to adopt him. Lately he has been coming to Sunday schools and his poverty stricken appearance has called out a good deal of sympathy. We do not know the lad, but if he is the right kind of a boy, with a desire to be something more than his present prospects indicate some one ought to help him to a better chance.

Fine Photographs.

In probably no other business has there been made so many improvements in recent years as there has in the art of photography. In former years, the sun alone was relied upon to do the work, and if a sitting proved satisfactory it was as much the result of chance as anything else. Now that is all changed, and to be successful photographer one must be an artist in the fullest sense of the word. Auburn and DeKalb county in general, is to be congratulated on possessing an artist that is fully capable of doing the best work possible. Mr. Clapp possesses the artistic sense developed by practice and experience. All his views are well taken and his portrait work equals the best products of the city galleries. The gallery on north Main street is admirably adopted to the implied purpose, and patrons are always sure of good work. A few samples of out door pictures may be seen at his gallery. He has a picture of A. Lewis' residence which is good and also two different pictures of the balloons that were sent up here a few weeks ago. The balloon pictures are certainly grand for to be taken as they were rising. They may be bought of Mr. Clapp for 50 cents a piece. He has other out door work that will be finished in a few days.

August 11 the new church called the Lockwood church right south of Aubur will be dedicated. The dedication wi probably be in the forenoon and there will likely be services in the afternoon and evening. There will be a basket dinner for which every thing is convenient plenty of shade, plenty of good water and everything needed, Sermon by Elder Bumpus of Lagrange county. All are cordially invited to attend these services.

$100 EACH.

Two Auburn lads were made happy Saturday evening. John Hoff, son of Frank Hoff, and Frank Hoff, son of Charley Hoff each received a letter that evening from their grandfather, Mr. Hoff, who still lives in the old country, his home being at Aix la Chapelle, Germany. In each letter was a draft for $100 which the old gentleman had sent them. We suppose he had never seen them but they are bright little lads and appreciate the gift. And we think both will make proper use of the money.

DEKALB BOY.

He is always heard from. Our readers will no doubt remember Mr. Belknap, who was a resident of Garrett so many years. He was employed by the B. O. company, but a few years ago was transferred to Chicago. Last year he had the luck to get nominated for Congress, and being on the republican ticket of course he went in on the landslide. But on the face of the returns, his competitor, Congressman McGann appeared to be ahead and was given the certificate. But Belknab contested and the votes are now being re-counted, and so far, Belknap has pulled ahead enough to make him reasonably safe. It is the old story of defective ballots under the Australian law. The voters many of them were so anxious to vote right they voted wrong, a thing that often occurs even with us. But in Illinois the voting is more difficult, as in choosing members of the legislature a voter may give there candidates a vote each or may give his three legislative votes to one man, or two to one man and one to another. So he has to keep his eyes open and his wits clear. Mr. Belknap is a son of ex-secretary Belknap who was President Grant's Secretary of War. He used often to visit his son at Garrett.

BARN BURNED.

Sunday night, in the thunder storm, the barn of J. M. Weicht in Troy township was burned together with its contents. It was struck by lightning, and when Mr. Weicht discovered the fire, i spread too rapidly to permit anything to be saved that amounted to much. He caught up an armful of such things as he could reach, such as harness and the like, and was scorched some in getting even that much. The only crops in the barn, were his hay crop, which was light this year. Still it is a loss for fodder may be scarce. The barn, though an old one, is also quite a loss for him.

THE DRAGGOO WILL.

The will made by James Draggoo Jan 15, 1889, has been probated and is on record at the Clerk's office, and is in substance as follows:

1st. That all just claims against me at the time of my death be paid out of my estate.

2nd. To my wife Hannah Draggoo, lot No. 44, where she now resides, and all the household goods therein.

3d. Hannah Draggoo and son Harry to have all the rents and profits of my real estate—Except item 2d, situated in DeKalb county and in Williams county, O. The said legatees to pay all taxes and keep property in repair. The said rents and profits to continue during the natural life of said legatees. If my son Harry dies then Mrs. Draggoo has all of said rents and profits during her natural life.

4th. After the death of my wife all the real estate that I may own at the time of my death of which the rents and profits are going to my wife and son in item 3d, shall belong to my said son Harry, in fee simple.

5th. To the adopted daughters, Harriet R. Culbertson and Charlotte O. Davis, each $1000 to be paid within one year after my death by my executor.

6th. To pay my brother William Draggoo the sum of $10. per month during his natural life.

7th. To my son Harry all the property not hereinbefore disposed of, both real and personal, including money, bank stock, choses in action, and every other species of property of which I may leave, and if said son shall die intestate and without issue then said property devised to him in this item shall be distributed among and between my relatives as follows: To each of my brothers and sisters who survive me, the undivided one-eleventh of said property and to the children of such brothers and sisters of mine as shall have died prior to my death the same one-eleventh, and if a distribution of said property is made to the brothers and sisters, then the monthly payments to my brother William provided for in item six, shall cease.

8th. My executor shall purchase a tract of land within one year after my death at a cost of not to exceed $1,000 and cause the same to be conveyed to my adopted son, Ellsworth Draggoo, for his life time, and put said Ellsworth in possession thereof and that said purchase be made out of the property of my estate and if I shall have made the purchase of a tract of land for said Ellsworth prior to my death and cause it to be deeded to him as aforesaid, then this item of my will shall be void.

9th. The provisions of this will for my wife Hannah Draggoo are in lien of her interest in my property as my widow except the five hundred dollars of personal property as money allowed her by statute.

SAD DEATHS.

John Fretz received a telegram Sunday from his son, L. B. Fretz at Goshen, that his little girl had died of cholera infantum. The child had been in care of the family of her uncle, O. W. Russel at that place, since her mother's death last October. She was about nine and a half months old. The little one died Saturday evening and was laid to rest beside the mother at Stony Point cemetery in Koscinsko county. The series of sad events, in which Mr. Fretz has been the sufferers reminds one of the almost exactly similar misfortunes that overtook his father at the starting out in life. He was drafted into the army, and soon after leaving his young wife, to go to the front, a child was born to them. That winter, as he lay sick, at death's door, in the hospital, a letter was brought him stating that his wife had died. It was a severe shock to one in his condition, but as he rallied later on, word came that the child had died. He had left his wife in good health but never saw her again. Their child, he never saw. It was one of the many hardships of war.

No Diphtheria

The Report has been circulated that George Baxter had the diphtheria. This is not true. He was taken with a severe cold and also had sore throat, and insomuch as the diphtheria was in the family last year, it was feared it might be the dreadful disease again but the doctor and all others say it is not. We are glad however, the report is not true. But our people cannot be too careful about their homes in keeping them clean. Oft times the sanitary condition of yards, streets and alleys has considerable to do in contracting diseases.

Tuesday's Daily.

NOW IN JAIL

Four new boarders arrived at the Hotel de Stroh in the last few days. They give their names as James McGuire, Alvin Sheldon, John Sherman and John Wilson. The latter two are the pickpockets brought over from Butler. They say their home is in Chicago. They were each fined $25 and costs, making a total of $37 each and could not pay the amount and hence sent to jail. They were brought over Saturday night and since that time have been writing and telegraphing for money but as yet none has come. McGuire was brought over from Waterloo yesterday on a charge of stealing Attorney Phillips' watch. He will remain in jail until court sets. Alvin Sheldon was put in late last night. Sheriff Stroh was on the lookout of him and found him at his home near Newville. He is wanted at Hillsdale, Mich., on a charge of criminal assault on a thirteen year old girl of that place. He got her drunk and then kept her out till about three o'clock in the morning, Sheriff Stroh telegraphed for Sheriff Converse of Hillsdale and he came down to-day and got his man.

BUTLER.

Coe's Normal continues to flourish.

Surprises continue at the churches. The ministers continue to interchange—without previous notice.

Butler was filled to overflowing on show day. The crowd was estimated at from 12000 to 15000 people. The tent that was reported to seat 20,000 people was filled to at least four-fifths of its capacity. The show in itself was a dismal failure. The crowd was very good natured, and not a single fight was reported. The saloons were about the only industries that made any money. The eating places about all overloaded themselves and the losses in stale provisions about equaled their profits. So they labored for no profit. But few violations of law were noticed. The strong force of Deputy Marshals nipped every game in the bud, and but four arrests were made and they were for pocket-picking and the offenders, unknown to our people are moralizing over their defeat and are wondering where their $25 fine and costs are coming from.

Cooler weather will perhaps prevail when hey breath the air of freedom again.

The surrounding country fared as favorably. As many houses left alone by their owners were burglarized and valuables carried off.

Mrs. John A. Madden is convalescing from a serious illness.

Mrs. Peter Helwig is not so well during the dry warm weather.

Lizzie Champion, Mrs. J. A. Campbell's sister, and Sadie Somerlot of Angola were in attendance at the show, and about everybody else within 25 miles of Butler were here too.

E. A. Campbell and wife are visiting with J. A. Campbell.

Father Eddy was reported dangerously sick last Sunday.

A letter from Gertie Wilson at Little Rock, leaves the family all well, which their many friends will be pleased to hear. The $1 50 so skillfully enclosed, comes handy at the COURIER office in our dull season. Some of our other distant friends would have thanks for following the example. Mr. Wilson is in the Little Rock Hoop Company as secretary and treasurer and we hope he will not have the bad luck he had here.

Our dearly beloved balloon men had made arrangements to give an ascension at Waterloo Saturday of this week, an had got the bills printed. But we believe they forgot to pay the printer. Bro. Willis might induce Sherm. Hollister to give him a goat.

Nellie Barns reached home on the afternoon train over the B. & O. to day, after a month's visit with relatives at York, Hastings and Omaha, Neb. She left them all well, including Mrs. Gordon, formerly Mrs. Kelley.

L. Bowers and wife have returned from their visit at South Camden in Hillsdale county. They were visiting the family of Mr. Brosy's father, Mr. Brosy himself being there at the time. Mr. Bowers took advantage of the opportunity to catch some of the fish in their fine lakes.

It's no fun to be a newspaper man these days: "The city editor of the Anderson Bulletin was not only assailed by W. H. Dennison, who waylaid him with a club, and in the first brush of the attack inflicted some injury, but the next day he was called to one side by Orle Johnson, son of Edmund Johnson, clerk of Madison county, and while Mr. Branson was taking out his note book with the expection of receiving an item, young Johnson floored him with a blow in the face. The assault was entirely unexpected, They always are unexpected. If the cowards who assault editors should give them an equal chance, the newspaper man would always come out of the contest first best."

Lafe Miser has rebuilt, remodeled and repainted Jonas Dilgard's house so that his nearest neighbors do not know the place. Mr. Dilgard lives on the John Husselman farm half way between Auburn and Waterloo road. Mr. Dilgard has been having considerable sickness and bad luck in his family of late, nevertheless he is bound to keep his head above water and keep abreast of the times. With a little more improvements he will have as nice a farm as we can find anywhere in the county.

Give your son or daughter an equal chance with others. An education will give them social position and influence and make them independent in earning a living. The Fayette Normal University with its moral influence and excellent instruction has prepared many a young men and woman for a higher life. Send to Pres. J. E. Dodds for catalogue.

Parents, whose children are fond of peanuts cannot be too careful. At Pittsburg yesterdy a 19 months old child died from the effects of attempting to swallow a piece of the skin of a peanut. While eating peanuts the child was seized with a violent fit of coughing which almost threw her into spasms. Physicians found a piece of peanut skin in the child's throat. Tracheotomy was performed, a silver tube being placed in the throat and the neck being cut. Shortly after the child died. The physicians say that the shock incident to the operation killed the child.

R. W. Cobb has one Chainless bicycle left besides the one he is riding, which can be bought cheap for cash. He is no longer in the bicycle business, but may be found at his home, when not "on the wheel". Mr, Cobb has ridden the Chainless more than 6000 miles by Cyclometer count, and with unequaled satisfaction. We are informed that he would pay twice as much for a New Model Chainless, as for a chain wheel of what ever make. He certainly ought to know for he has ridden both and understands both, "mechanically speaking" not alone from personal contact in many of the largest factories in the world, but practical experience with the wheel.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Y. W. McClellan entertained a number of friends to dinner to-day at their home south of Auburn. Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. Wm. McIntyre and Miss Lillie McTighe.

Miss McTighe and Mrs, Elias Zimmerman drove up to Sedan Thursday to see Mrs. Horatio Hine, who was taken very ill Sunday night. They found her some better but not out of danger. From Sedan they drove to Mr. Hewitt's near Corunna, where they had a very pleasant visit.

R. W. Cobb left for Lakeside on the 12:29 to-day. He is on a brief business trip and will return early in the week. He will hear T. DeWitt Talmage, preach on Sunday and Monday will go to Cleveland and will stop at his old home "by the Lake" on Tuesday. The fishing is excellent down there. We have it from good authority that the manner in which Mr. Cobb and others including Sherm Hollister, have taken in the fish with hook and line, down on old Erie would make a Hoosier "sport" ashamed of his string of fish. It is a common occurrence to go on the lake and draw in 3 to 10 pound Pickeral and Bass as fast as a minnow can be placed on the hook and cast into the deep blue waters. This we would call sport and amateurs can do the business.

About the correct solution of the present corn puzzle is the following from the Fort Wayne Sentinel:—The healthy condition of corn this year in spite of the long drought is a puzzle to many people. While blue grass and timothy have withered, corn has seemingly been little affected by the dry weather. The philosophy of it is that because of the dry season, the roots of the corn went down for moisture. In a wet season the roots spread out. When corn comes up in a wet reason and a drought follows it never makes much of a crop.

The first time in its history of the county Cedar Creek has gone dry. Up at the north edge of town near the slaughhouse, the bed of the steam is completely dry. It will hardly be believed but those who doubt can go and see.

He says that DeKalb county has suffered less from the drought than has Noble, Elkhart and Cass counties. We are pleased to note that he is enjoying his trip.

The reporter and wife enjoyed a ride to the old farm home in South Jackson township last evening. No time of the year does the country present a prettier appearance than now, as the golden harvest is ripe and being gathered in. Oats is ripening fast and will be cut next week. The hum of the threshing machine may also be heard A neighbor in that section threshed yesterday and his wheat crop will average over 23 bushels to the acre. We also passed by the new Hopewell church that is being erected. Picker and Bumpus of Auburn have the contract to do the brick work and have it part way up. They get out to work at six o'clock in the morning and work till dark in the evening. They will finish the brick work next week.

Al. Bishop and Bert Robbins are good fishers but Jud Bear caught a fish in Cedar Creek near the swimming hole on the Hodge farm the other day that measured three and one half feet in length. He caught it with his hands and was badly bitten on one finger. The fish had teeth about three quarters of an inch long. It had got in to a place where the water had dried up and it was unable to get out. He was literally covered with mud in capturing the big fish.

Just one year ago to-day on July 17 1894 the Auburn Rifles were called to Hammond, Ind. to assist in suppressing the strike. If you wish to attend a vigorous, progressive, growing, popular institution. enter for the Fall Term beginning Aug. 27.

At the regular meeting of the Auburn Musical Club last night, they decided to have a vacation during the month of August. A special and interesting program is therefore being prepared and will be rendered on visitor's night July 29th. The vacation is brought about by the extremely hot weather.

Word reached here this forenoon that Robert Lockhart's residence had burned down at Waterloo. But on investigation we learned that the report was false. A barn burned in the east part of town Sunday night but no damage was done to Mr. Lockhart's residence.

Rev. Mr. Baker formely pastor of the Lutheran church at Spencerville died Saturday at Shelby, Ohio, and was buried yesterday. He was well known by many here and over the county.

Mrs. Dora Wade and little daughter Eva, have been visiting the families of Frank Rush and Geo. Grund. They go to Butler to day and from there will return to their home at Montpelier, Ohio She is a sister to Mrs. Grund and Mrs. Rush.

Mrs. Elson Dead

Wm. Elson of Jackson township died at 3 o'clock this morning at her home. Her funeral will be held at Grove Bethel church Thursday at 10 a. m. and interment will take place in Woodlawn.

Church Social

The Young People's Society of Butler Canter Chapel, will give an ice cream social on Saturday evening July 27, proceeds go the to benefit of the church. It will be a lawn social and held at Phillip Noel's a half mile west of St. John's. Ice cream, cake, music etc. All are invited to attend and assist these young people in a worthy cause.

DEKALB GIRL.

We have often spoken of the success of the DeKalb young man. Now, we are as well pleased to say a few good words of the DeKalb young lady. We find the following neat compliment in the "Musical Times," a musical paper printed in Chicago, and the leading one in the west.

"A young lady who deserves the highest commendation for her perseverance and energy in obtaining her musical education is Miss Maud Sembower of Garrett City, Ind. Miss Sembower is a pupil of Dr. F. Ziegfeld and travels over three hundred miles for each lesson. She leaves her home at 2:35 a. m. arrives in Chicago in time for her composition lesson at 9:30, takes a lesson in piano and harmony and leaves the city the same afternoon, reaching her home at 7;30 p. m. Though studying under difficulties Miss Sembower passed a most successful examination in the graduating class, received her diploma at the College Commencement exercises, June 25 and intends to pursue her studies under Dr. Ziegfeld in the post graduating class next year. She is a fine musician and should certainly make her mark in the musical world.

Cordially Invited.

Another evidence of Dr. Nusbaum's big heartedness. We are instructed to publish the following liberal notice. "All boys under 18 years of age have a general invitation to feast, and fill themselves upon those beautiful red apples on Dr. Nusbaum's lot just south of the McIntyre residence. No boys over 18 allowed to climb the trees. No charge for setting broken bones of falling from the trees while shaking the apples off. Large boys not allowed to drive smaller boys away from the trees. Pay no attention to any one ordering you away. No two boys allowed on one tree at the same time. No one boy allowed to shake off more than a peck of green apples to get one ripe one. Camping upon the grounds to prevent other boys from getting apples strictly prohibited. Small boys from the south end have the preference as they have been guarding this place from the tenderest blossoms on the trees to the present time. This is the last chance, boys. All cordially invited,

Terrible Indeed.

"Oh, these terrible pains! Will they ever leave my rheumatic racked joints?" Yes, if you will tak the great Scotch remedy, just introduced in the United States —Infallible Scotch Cure. It never disappoints, and speedily cures. Ask your druggist for it, and accept no substitute. Prepared only by the Hall Medicine Company, Toledo, Ohio. Sold by Fischler & Son. 29 30

JOSEPH B. FORAKER.

Spoken of as a Probable Successor to Calvin S. Brice.

Joseph B. Foraker of Ohio has lately been named in connection with a seat in the United States senate. The term of Calvin S. Brice expires March 4, 1897, and it will be the duty of the next Ohio legislature to elect his successor. Mr. Foraker has been named as the most likely man for the place, provided a republican legislature is chosen in November next. If a democratic legislature should be chosen Senator Brice would be succeeded by a member of his own party.

JOSEPH B. FORAKER OF OHIO.

Gladstone and the Languages.

In addition to a scholarly and critical knowledge of Greek and Latin, Mr. Gladstone is almost as well versed in French and Italian as he is in English. His familiarity with the latter language won a tribute from the Italian ambassador to England, who, after a three hours' conversation with the ex-premier in the Tuscan tongue, admitted that Mr. Gladstone had not hesitated a moment for a word, or used any but the right word in the right place. Mr. Gladstone is still busy with general literature. He expects soon to have ready for the publisher an edition of Bishop Butler's works, with full annotations.

A HOTEL GHOST.

The Narrative of a Singular Experience of Lord and Lady Dunraven.

Apropos of the report that the Brevoort house was to be closed, which was denied, however, there is a story that Lady Dunraven has been known to tell about the famous old inn. The countess is described by those who know her as a woman much more inclined to common sense than to ghost-haunted Castlelanes, even with Dr. Johnson's authority. She used to tell the facts in the tale simply for what they were worth, says New York Tribune. It was more than one decade ago, years before the Valkyrie was thought of, when Lady Dunraven was first interested in the mining regions of Northern Michigan. He and Lady Dunraven were staying in New York for a few days before starting west and had taken rooms at the Brevoort—pleasant rooms, with a view of the avenue and a nice glimpse of Washington square. The first night being tired with their voyage, they went early to bed, but, as it happened, not so early to sleep. Both the earl and countess were blessed with hearty English constitutions. They were not at all accustomed to lying awake till the small hours. They wondered what they could have done, what they could have eaten or drank to afflict them with such a tultous vigilance. Just at a venture finally, they bundled themselves into the adjoining parlor, made themselves extempore couches there and slept soundly till morning. Next night and the night after there was the same wakefulness and in the end the same migration to the adjoining room for relief. They began to think they should have to leave town earlier than they had planned, for they would not for the world have made any pretext to shift chambers. The explanation of the mystery, if it was an explanation, came out by chance. They had a call before long from an old-time New Yorker whom they had met in England, an authority on all matters pertaining to the town's minor history. "I wonder," they remarked casually, "that they should have given you these rooms. You know it was in that room there, not so long ago, that a Mr. X—— hanged himself. It was in that room that Lord and Lady Dunraven had tried in vain to sleep, and they exchanged significant glances. Of course, it was only a coincidence, they said; but the next morning they took their departure for the West.

WON WITHOUT BETTING.

The Luck of a Man Who Happened to Stroll Into a Louisville Pool-Room.

A good story is told about Olive Lucas, who died while holding the position of secretary of the board of aldermen, and Bob Cathcart, a horse man who was widely known and who had many friends in Louisville, says the Louisville Courier-Journal. Cathcart was interested in a poolroom here and was selling pools on a big race one day when Lucas came in. The two were well acquainted and Lucas nodded his head as a salutation or greeting. But he caught Cathcart's eye. If he noticed it, he attached no significance to the fact that Cathcart immediately chalked "Sold for $40." Lucas passed out of the room and some days later, at a meeting of the pool room meeting Lucas asked him why he did not come and get the pool he had won. Still ignorant of the fact, and thinking some jest was intended, Lucas flourished his roll carelessly and replied:

"Oh, I don't need it. I've got plenty of money."

A day or two passed and Lucas received a second inquiry about the money. By this time his curiosity was excited and he asked a friend to go to the pool room and find out what that talk was about. This friend speedily learned that Cathcart had accepted Lucas' nod as a bid, knocked down the pool to him, and, as is often done where the bidders are known, simply slipped a "ticket" in the box. The fact that the pool was sold on won the race and there was something overdue awaiting Lucas. When told the circumstances Lucas said to his friend he hardly know whether to take the money or not. I never bid on the plug and never thought of such a thing. I never heard of the horse before." The friend told him he had better as well take the money, as if some one would have won the pool for a dollar or two less Cathcart was not a loser, as the commission money was all he was looking for. Lucas allowed the money to remain there for nearly a week and then told some one about the pool room. He bet $125 of it on some race. He lost the bet and then collected what was left of the winnings on a wager which he had never made.

Jealous of a Stage Lover.

Too much zeal in the discharge of stage duties has lead a jeune premier at a Paris preparatory theater to be disagreeable, not to say, painful, ture, says London Telegraph. The young actor was acting with a lady in his own age in a new piece and had to make a declaration of love. He faced the mirror up to nature so well that no matter that the young lady's real husband, who was looking on from the stalls, flew into a towering passion and thirsted for blood. When the performance was over the man possessed of the green-eyed monster waited at the stage door for the jeune premier and whacked vigorously at the actor with his cane. The player—nose bleeding and tearful—did not make an effort to return blow for blow, but holding up a manuscript which contained his part in the play, referred to his aggressor that he had done more than follow the instructions of the author of the little love comedy in which he had acted with the beautiful young lady. The affair ended there.

Boston Women Withdrew to Weep.

It is a tribute to Mr. Irving's art that when he acted "The Story of Waterloo" the other day so great was the emotion that men wept and women fainted, says an exchange. When at one performance of Mr. Irving's first visit to this country he was playing "Charles I.," the same thing happened in the theater. So bitterly did some women weep that they withdrew to the waiting room of the theater and hysterics all by themselves, which shows how much genuine feeling had been excited by that great and delicate interpretation of a king.

NEWS IN BRIEF GUSTS

BLOWN IN FROM ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

Ex-Premier of Russia Attacked on the Street by Four Men and Shot to Death—A Steamer Burns with Fatal Results—Corbett and Fitzsimmons to Fight on Lake Erie.

FATAL RIVER DISASTER.

A Steamer on Niagara River Burns to the Water's Edge.

Lewiston (N. Y.) special: The handsome steamer, Cibola, of the Nicaragua River line, which plies between here and Toronto, was discovered to be on fire at her dock here. The flames spread with great rapidity and soon enveloped the steamer and communicated to the dock. The steamer broke away from her moorings and floated down the river, a mass of flames. She burned to the water's edge, and her hull lies on the sand-bar between here and the mouth of the river. The fire on the dock spread to the American Hotel and for a time threatened the New York Central depot. The dock and hotel were almost totally destroyed and the depot badly scorched. When the flames were discovered on the Cibola, the crew and a few passengers were aboard and asleep. They were all aroused and all succeeded in escaping, with the exception of the third engineer, William Hammell of Toronto. He was in the engine room at the time the fire started, and was burned to death. The total loss will probably reach $250,000. There were many narrow escapes.

ASSASSINATED.

The Ex-Premier of Russia Meets Death.

Sofia special: While ex-Prime Minister Stambuloff, accompanied by M. Petkoff, was walking home from the Union club, he was attacked by four unknown men. Two of them shot him with revolvers while the other two stabbed him. M. Stambuloff fell to the ground groaning. He was removed to his residence and physicians were summoned. After an examination of the wounds the doctors announced that there were little hope of M. Stambuloff's recovery. The assassins escaped. There is no clue to their identity.

M. Stambuloff was wounded in more than twenty places. He raised his hands to guard his head, and his wrists were nearly severed. Both hands had to be amputated.

M. Petkoff was slightly wounded.

The first report that all four of the assassins escaped was erroneous. One of them was arrested.

Killed By Fire Damp.

Alexander Robinson, aged 63, together with his son, William, and son-in-law, William Matcha, set to work deepening a well 18 feet deep in West Uhrichsville. The son became weak and came out. He soon noticed his father bowing down to the bottom, and went down to his rescue. He had been overcome by fire damp, and the son barely escaped with his life. He lay helpless for some time after gaining terre firma. Five men were almost victimized by the deadly gas before the old gentleman's body was brought up in a lifeless condition. He leaves four sons and a daughter.

The Pope's Edict.

Chicago special: Catholic members of the Knights of Pythias, Odd Fellows, and Sons of Temperance were authoritatively placed under the ban of the Roman Catholic church by a published order which went into effect Sunday and was read from all the pulpits of this diocese. Archbishop Feehan has been notified by Monsignor Satolli, the papal legate, that the edict is to be observed to the strictest letter. It affects some 8,000 Knights of Pythias and several thousand Odd Fellows and Sons of Temperance.

Will Imitate Perry.

Toledo special: The Ann Arbor railway officials here have assented to a proposition made by Toledo sporting men, to allow the Corbett-Fitzsimmons fistic encounter to take place on their two big transfer boats used for ferrying loaded trains across Lake Erie. Each is 260 feet long and sixty feet wide, and the plan is to have the two boats lashed stem to stem and 4,000 people could witness the fight. The Toledo projectors of the scheme are now in communication with the backers of the two athletes.

Dynamite Sweepings Explode.

Maude Bunnell, daughter of a wealthy farmer near Reynolds, Ind., swept together a quantity of dynamite which had been left where her father was filling shells for blasting purposes, and threw the collection into the stove. In the explosion which followed, one hand was torn off and her face badly mangled.

Walked out of the Window.

Miss Lizzie Thomas, of Brown County, an inmate of the Ohio Hospital for Epileptics, at Gallipolis, Ohio, walked out of a window in the second story of one of the cottages, and was instantly killed. She fell 25 feet.

War Threatened.

The relations of Peru with Bolivia are strained. It was rumored that the Minister of Bolivia to Peru is about to retire. The Governor of Peru will send 2,000 men to the Bolivian frontier.

A Big Claim.

Colon (Colombia) special: The British subjects who have been expelled from Bluefields make a claim for over a million dollars damages from the government of Nicaragua.

Fell on His Head.

At Millersburg, Ohio Joe Dronhard, a 17-year-old boy, was killed by falling from a load of wheat, striking on his head on the barn floor.

Burned to the Bone.

Otto Clever was terribly burned at the Massillon Rolling Mill, Massillon, Ohio. He was working at the guide mill, when a red-hot rod of iron wrapped about his limbs. The flesh was burned away to the bone in many places.

Drowned in a Tub.

Ethel, the 15-months-old child of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Trowbridge, living two and a half miles west of Springfield, Ohio, fell out of the back door into a washtub and was drowned.

Miraculous Escape.

P. McCarthy, a brakeman on the Columbus, Sandusky and Hocking Railroad, fell between the cars at Bucyrus, Ohio. Fourteen cars passed over him, every brake beam hitting him in the head. He was dragged a hundred feet by an iron rod, and finally threw himself between the wheels clear of the track. McCarthy told the train crew what had happened, and walked to his boarding house. He had not a bone broken, but suffered some severe scalp wounds.

Double Tragedy.

Mr. Chris. Heid and Peter Moro, two rival fish peddlers, fought with pistols on the highway near San Andreas, Cal., and as a result both of the combatants will die.

COLLAPSED.

A Building at Atlantic City Containing Three Thousand Persons Goes Down.

Atlantic City special: The social session tendered by Atlantic City to the visiting Elks at the Baltimore avenue Casino, ended in a terrible disaster in which 100 persons were more or less seriously injured. The session had just opened, only one speaker had been heard, when without the slightest warning the building, which had not been used for several years, collapsed and fully one thousand persons were thrown to the floor beneath and many women, wives of the visiting Elks, went down into the ruins. Fully two hundred persons who were on the first floor of the building immediately beneath the banquet hall were crushed beneath the timbers and lay helpless. The fact that all the electric lights in the building went out at the time the building gave way added to the terrible situation. A double alarm for the fire department was at once turned in and the city's fire force of 200 firemen and every police officer in the city were called. The firemen set to work to extricate the wounded from beneath the mass of timbers, aided by hotel keepers and residents near the scene. Every house was thrown open for the reception of the injured, and every available conveyance was pressed into service to carry them to the hotels. Meanwhile, physicians were on the scene, and were doing everything in their power to aid the unfortunates who had been caught in the crash.

In the excitement of the disaster it was almost impossible to procure accurate details. The list of injured cannot be fully compiled at this time, but the following are the more seriously injured: James J. Armstrong, New York, both legs broken; Major Wolfe, Atlantic City, lighthouse engineer, injured internally; Charles W. Tolwell, Camden, leg and arm broken; Frederick Claproth, Camden, leg broken; Peckman, Camden, leg and arm broken; Frank Bolten, clerk of hotel, this city, shoulder badly crushed and otherwise injured; Charles W. Foot, Minneapolis, maimed and bruised; Detective James Doyle, Minneapolis, badly bruised and injured internally.

Frederick Claproth has since died.

A BUSINESS FLOOD

Is Sweeping Over This Great Country of Ours.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade says: The business flood is so strong and rapid that conservatives fear it may do harm. It is out of season in July. But seasons this year lap over and crowd each other. May frosts and frights, it is now evident, kept back much business that would naturally have been finished before midsummer, and the delayed accumulation of one season gets in the way of the efforts to begin another on time. But the volume of business, however it may be measured, is remarkably large for the month, even in a good year. Exaggerated fears about the crops have passed; the syndicate is believed both able and determined to protect the treasury, and the time draws near when the marketing of new crops will turn into the national balance, if speculation does not hinder. The week has been notable for the sensational falling of wheat, 8 cents in two days, followed by recovery, though neither accords any interpretation of the quiet disregard of the government report. The sudden drop in prices was the result of speculative rather than commercial influences, though exports are not half as large as last year; 2,097,645 bushels, flour included, were shipped from Atlantic ports for the two weeks of July, against 4,227,915 last year and had their effect, as well as western receipts of 1,987,474 bushels against 2,156,918 last year.

A FIERCE STORM

Sweeps Along the Atlantic Coast Doing Much Damage.

A storm, possessing all the features of a true cyclone, swept over a portion of New Jersey and Long Island Sunday afternoon. During its progress, which was of a typically destructive and circumscribed nature, it manifested phenomena of a unique kind. The damage to property is said to be enormous. Six lives are known to have been lost, and more than 100 persons were more or less seriously injured. The tempest was of an unprecedented nature as far as the section of country over which it passed is concerned.

As far as could be learned, the cyclone manifested itself near Allendale, N. J., about five miles north of Patterson. From thence it traveled in a southeasterly direction, finally sweeping out to sea a little west of Rockaway. At Cherry Hill the violent wind developed which afterward marked the progress of the storm. At this point the wind was from the south with an eastward tendency. A little further on and hail fell. At Carlstadt the circular whirl of the wind was from the eastward. Cutting across the Hudson, the cyclone struck Harlem and Washington Heights with terrific force. From thence on it seemed to gather strength until it reached Woodhaven and Union Course. Hereabouts lightning added its destructive force to that of the wind. Thence it swept out to sea.

A MONSTROUS BLAZE.

The Michigan Town of Wallin Wiped Out.

Thompsonville (Mich.) special: The town of Wallin, four miles north of this place, was entirely burned out the other day. The Sullivan Lumber Company Mill and two million feet of lumber and about thirty houses were destroyed. About twenty people have been brought here by the Chicago & West Michigan railroad. Some of them are in a very precarious condition. No lives have been lost as far as is known.

For some days past forest fires have been raging in the timber about Wallin and in this vicinty. There being no fire protection the strong wind drove the flames into the lumber settlement, wiping out every building. Hardly any of the household effects were saved. Many of the inhabitants barely escaped with their lives. Some of the men, exhausted from fighting the fire, fell fainting while trying to save their property, and had to be carried to places of safety. The principal business of the town was lumber and that industry is at a standstill by the burning of the big mill. This city has been threatened by fire, but favorable change in the wind and help from neighboring villages has arrested the flames.

RAIDED.

Mounted Robbers Terrorize a Florida Town and Loot the Bank.

Lake City, Fla., was raided in Jesse James style the other morning by a band of robbers, masked and mounted. At 2 o'clock a tremendous explosion, followed by shots and cries for help, were heard, and the alarmed citizens rushed out and saw about a dozen masked horsemen galloping through the town firing pistols. The robbers had entered the mercantile and banking establishment of A. L. Chandler, wrecked the safe with dynamite and secured a large sum. They also dynamited the safe at the depot. The night watchman and a negro at Chandler's establishment were shot by the robbers and seriously wounded. Chandler places his loss at several thousand dollars.

These robbers have been operating in Hamilton, Suwannee, Columbia, Alachua and Putman Counties for four weeks, and have raided the towns of Live Oak, Jasper, Huttington, White Springs, Hawthorn and Lake City, securing booty aggregating $12,000. In every case dynamite was used. It is said the robbers' rendezvous is in the O'Keefinokee Swamp, and local confederates inform them when to strike. They are well mounted, the leader riding a powerful black stallion. Posses have been organized and with blood hounds will follow the robbers.

A Cuban Exile Dies of Starvation.

The remains found half eaten by buzzards in a cornfield, near McGregor, Texas, were those of Capt. Stephen V. Blake, who was exiled from Cuba for writing a letter in 1868 to New York parties intimating that a filibustering party at that time might be successful. His property in Cuba was confiscated, and he came to Texas and earned his living as a mechanic. He was making his way across the country on foot to Crawford, where a home had been offered him, and becoming lost, was in a famishing condition, devouring green corn raw, which killed him. Letters found among his effects show that he was recently in correspondence with the Cuban annexationists.

Savage Forest Fires.

Detroit special: The upper part of the lower peninsula of Michigan is dotted with savage forest fires. Already the lumber towns of Wallin, up in Benzie County, and Cleary, near the little town, have been badly burned and no one knows how far the damage has extended. The Thumb has been invaded and the town of Kinde is girdled with fire and ashes, and black leaves are sifting down on people in the resorts to the north. Reports from Traverse City, Petoskey, Charlevoix and other towns are all of the same tenor—that the fires have been burning for about two weeks and that a sudden strong wind has fanned them into alarming activity.

Glad to See Him Hung.

As Sheriff Bowden of Jacksonville, Fla., sprung the trap and the body of Alexander Simms shot down the spectators were startled to hear a woman exclaim: "You killed my boy, and I am glad to see you hang. You won't shoot another white man soon." The woman was Mrs. Minor, mother of Policeman Ed Minor, one of the two men killed by Simms last April. Napoleon Stucks, colored, was the negro's other victim. With Mrs. Minor were her sister, daughter, and daughter-in-law. They were the only women admitted to the jail yard. Mrs. Minor said she would never be happy unless she saw her boy's murderer hanged.

Monetary Conference.

Washington special: No expectation of a national monetary conference assembling this year is entertained by government officials. Few officials here in the confidence of the administration have had any but the faintest hope that a monetary conference would meet, or that if it did in the present state of foreign opinion on the money question, no political results would follow. Summing up the situation as viewed here, there is in the present condition of feeling among the nations of Europe no immediate prospect of any concerted action for an enlarge use of silver.

Death of an Anarchist.

James Nolty, a gunsmith, was found dead in his shop at Cincinnati. He was killed by a bullet from a queer looking pistol of his own make that had been screwed in a vise. The coroner cannot determine whether it was suicide or accidental. Nolty was one of the Cincinnati anarchists suspected of making bombs for the Chicago reds. His shop was almost continually under police surveillance at that time.

His Last Pleasure Trip.

The body of an unknown man was found in a mangled condition near Union Station, Ohio. Fred Ross identified the dead man as J. B. Chamberlain, of Canton, Neb., a dealer in farm implements. Mr. Chamberlain, who was a former resident of Licking county, was on a visit, but went over to Columbus on a pleasure trip. He fell off the train while returning.

Barnum's Widow to Marry.

The rumor that the widow of P. T. Barnum is to marry a rich Englishman is again in circulation, and is more generally believed this time, from the fact that Mrs. Barnum is about to sell most of her American possessions, and will probably live in Europe. She is said to be worth $1,000,000, besides a $40,000 annuity and a country place valued at $300,000.

A Preacher Shot.

W. B. Colvin, a lawyer, shot and killed Josiah Stevens at Indian Springs Station, Ind. Both parties reside in that place. Stevens is a preacher. Stevens first drew his gun, whereupon Colvin approached him with a knife and started off to his home. He returned with a pistol and shot Stevens five times in the breast and then made good his escape.

Kills His Wife and Attempts Suicide.

Daniel Ackerman, a resident of Smith Mills, N. Y., stabbed his wife and then himself with a pocket knife. Mrs. Ackerman died in a short time. Ackerman is not expected to recover. Mrs. Ackerman left her husband for another man some time ago and this is supposed to have been the cause of the murder and attempted suicide.

Fought Twenty Rounds.

At the close of the twentieth round the referee declared the glove contest for points at the Grand Rapids Opera House, Columbus, Ohio, between Tommy White of Chicago, and Billy Murphy of Cincinnati, a draw.

CHRISTIAN SOLDIERS.

FOURTEENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION OF ENDEAVORERS.

Nearly One Hundred Thousand Young People in Attendance—Great Hall and Two Tents Filled While Thousands Overflow.

Big Meet in Boston.

THE fourteenth annual convention of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, held in Boston, exceeded in size any national convention, either political or religious, ever witnessed in this country. The exact number in attendance cannot be stated, but it is estimated that it was near to 100,000. The young Christians poured into Boston from all directions by train loads of hundreds and thousands.

Every State delegation was given a church as headquarters, and the delegates were quartered as far as possible in the immediate neighborhood of the church. Fifty-seven churches were thus apportioned, and at each every comfort was provided for visiting Endeavorers. There were places for them to rest, a room where they might check wraps or small baggage, and where writing paper, ink, tables, stamps and numerous conveniences might be found. Every church was the postoffice for the delegates of the State quartered there, while members of the local societies were at all times at their respective churches to entertain their guests, give directions how to get to this or that place, or to accompany the visitors about the city, as they might wish. Each church also had its emergency hospital, so to speak. Arrangements had been made with near-by physicians so they might be called in, and in some cases two or three trained nurses were engaged.

The main auditorium was Mechanics' Hall, with a seating capacity of over 10,000. Here the principal meetings were held. Other meetings were held in two immense tents on Boston common and in different churches. Three choruses, comprising over 3,000 voices, selected from various singing societies in Boston and vicinity, led the singing. The grandest feature of the week was the mass meeting on Boston common Saturday. This was Good Citizenship day, and at this open air gathering Gov. Greenhalge, Mayor Curtis, and Rev. Donald McLaurin, D. D., of Detroit, were heard in patriotic discourses. Rev. Samuel Francis Smith, author of "America," prepared an original poem for this occasion, and through the generosity of Miss Helen Gould, of New York, souvenir copies of "America" were given to the delegates. The Endeavorers marched in a body from Mechanics' Building to this big gathering, and they made a picturesque sight with their banners and flags flying.

OFFICIAL BADGE.

A feature of the convention were the "sunrise" prayer meetings each day in several of the churches. The masses could not hope to go to the Endeavorers' meetings, so the Endeavorers went to the masses. In other words, companies of delegates, representing different States, held model prayer meetings in big factories, stores and car stations during the noon hour. The greatest enthusiasm prevailed everywhere. In the market places, along the wharves, in lumber and coal yards the young Endeavorers penetrated, and they were welcomed wherever they went. At the hospitals some pathetic scenes occurred, which were in striking contrast with the gayety and good cheer at other places.

SECRETARY BAER.

The street scenes were unique, with marching young people singing Sunday school songs, crowds upon the electric cars waving their crimson and white flags and the throngs of sightseers.

Three times during the first day Mechanics' Hall held an audience of 13,000, and a more interested audience, more beautiful decorations and greater unity of thought and purpose were never known on any public occasion. Long before the exercises began every foot of room where persons were allowed to stand was occupied. The great chorus sung lustily, the immense audience swelled the song, the noise of the great organ welled out grandly and led the singers and above all could be heard the silvery tones of the four cornets played by the Park sisters. The Rev. Francis E. Clark presided at the opening session, and devotional exercises were conducted by the Rev. Smith Baker, D. D., of East Boston, and 13,000 joined in reciting the Lord's prayer.

The Rev. A. S. Plumb, D. D., extended the greeting from the city pastors, and the welcome of the Boston '95 committee was by the chairman, the Hon. Samuel B. Capen. The greeting extended to Gov. Greenhalge which followed was inspiring in its enthusiasm. The thousands upon the floor, in the gallery and in the balcony sent forth cheer after cheer, while white handkerchiefs fluttered like a great cloud of doves. The Governor greeted the Endeavorers as brethren and sisters. Response to the address of welcome was made by the Rev. E. R. Dills, D. D., of San Francisco, in earnest and eloquent words. Dr. Henry O. McCook, of Philadelphia, next made a short but telling address. He said the letters "C. E." had a new significance for him this morning after what he had heard. He felt now that they stood for not only Christian Endeavor, but also "country evangelized," "cities emancipated" and "Christ enthroned."

Report of the General Secretary.

The great audience listened attentively to the reading of the annual report of the general secretary, J. W. Baer, frequently interrupting with applause. Secretary Baer said the total membership of the Christian Endeavor organization was now 2,473,740. In the United States the Presbyterians still lead, with 5,283 Young People's societies and 2,269 Junior societies; the Congregationalists have 3,990 Young People's societies and 1,908 Junior societies; the Disciples of Christ and Christians, 2,687 Young People's societies and 862 Junior societies; the Baptists, 2,686 Young People's societies and 180 Junior societies; Methodist Episcopals, 931 Young People's societies and 391 Junior societies; Methodist Protestants, 853 Young People's societies and 247 Junior societies; Lutherans, 798 Young People's societies and 245 Junior societies; Cumberland Presbyterians, 699 Young People's societies and 231 Junior societies, and so on through a long list.

The Presbyterians held forth in the hall during the afternoon and the greatest enthusiasm prevailed. The Rev. George B. Stewart, D. D., of Harrisburg, presided, and the speakers were William M. Benham of Pittsburg, the Rev. James T. Black of Boston, the Rev. Pleasant Hunter of Minneapolis, J. Howard Breed of Philadelphia, Miss Elizabeth M. Wishard, the Rev. Thornton B. Penfield and Robert E. Speer of New York; the Rev. John B. Campbell of Baltimore, the Rev. J. A. Rondthaler of Indianapolis, President Ethelbert D. Warfield of Easton, Pa.; the Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman of Albany and Prof. and Mrs. J. J. Lane of Philadelphia.

The evening meeting opened with a prayer and praise service conducted by Secretary Baer. The annual address was delivered by President Clark. He was frequently interrupted by the applause, and on concluding the vast audience rose and gave him an ovation long to be remembered, closing with the Chautauqua salute. After singing "Hallelujah," Evangelist Dwight L. Moody talked to the young people in a fatherly way. So great was the crowd at Mechanics' Hall that 10,000 were unable to gain admittance and a big open-air meeting was held in Huntington avenue, addressed by President Clark and Mr. Woolley.

Thousands at Tent Endeavor.

At Tent Endeavor on Boston common the sound of fervent prayer was mingled with the strains of music wafted over from Tent Williston and the hum of the busy city's trade. Not less than 10,000 persons greeted Lieut. Gov. Wolcott when he rose to welcome the delegates in behalf of the State of Massachusetts. The Rev. W. H. Albright of Boston conducted the devotional services, and after referring to the occasion as a day of pentecost he called for testimony from those present.

The Baptists filled the tent during the afternoon. The Rev. H. C. Vedder of Chester, Pa., was the chairman, and the speakers were the Rev. L. A. Crandall of Chicago, the Rev. Clarence A. Barbour of Rochester, the Rev. H. C. Mabie of Boston, the Rev. Henry L. Morehouse of New York and the Rev. Wayland Hoyt of Minneapolis. The speeches savored of patriotism and called forth great applause. The Rev. J. Z. Tyler of Cleveland presided at the evening praise service, and following an address on "Washington, '96," by W. H. Pennell, the annual address of President Clark was read by Prof. James D. Howe of Lexington, Va., and John G. Woolley of Chicago delivered an interesting temperance address.

The great Tent Williston was an inspiring sight all day, the canvas sheltering 10,000 people at each of the three meetings. The services were introduced by a season of song by the chorus, in which the congregation joined with splendid effect. The Rev. Wayland Hoyt, D. D., of Minneapolis, presided in the morning, wielding a gavel made from three historic buildings of Boston—the old South Meeting House, the old State House and Faneuil Hall. After the singing of the hymn of welcome George W. Coleman of Boston delivered the welcome of the committee of '95. The Rev. A. S. Gumbart made the address of welcome for the city pastors, and Alpheus Sanford, chairman of the Board of Aldermen, in the absence of Mayor Curtis, greeted the Endeavorers. Responses were made by the Rev. W. N. Page, D. D., or Leavenworth, Miss Cora B. Rockford of Biddeford, the Rev. Walter H. Brooks of Washington, the Rev. Gilby C. Kelly of Texas and G. Tower Ferguson of Toronto.

W. H. Strong of Detroit presided over the Congregational rally in the afternoon and the most prominent of the speakers were the Rev. D. M. Pratt of Portland, Me.; the Rev. George A. Gates of Iowa, Congressman Elijah Morse, the Rev. F. B. Doe of Ashland, Wis.; the Rev. D. M. Fisk of Toledo, Miss T. Sibley of Belfast, Me., and the Rev. Dr. Nehemiah Boynton of Boston. The evening service, as in the other tent, was devoted largely to "Washington, '96," the Rev. Tennis S. Hamlin being the chief speaker. The closing address was by the Rev. Russell H. Conwell, D. D., of Philadelphia.

The Methodists, to the number of 2,000, rallied at the People's temple and listened to the Rev. Wallace McMullen of Philadelphia, Dr. James Boyd Brady, the Rev. John Potts of Toronto and others. The Rev. R. M. Russell, D. D., of Pittsburg, the Rev. W. W. Lawrence of Bellevue, Pa., the Rev. D. C. Stewart of St. Louis, the Rev. H. C. Swearingen of Allegheny City and the Rev. J. T. McCrory, D. D., of Pittsburg addressed the united Presbyterians at the First Church, Cambridge.

There was unbounded enthusiasm for the church of one's birth or adoption at each of the twenty-seven denominational rallies during the afternoon, but at none was there a betrayal of the least sectarian bitterness. Some of the strongest men in the different denominations spoke their best thoughts, and in several cases significant resolutions were adopted.

The trustees' meeting in the evening was devoted to hearing delegations from

SEVEN DAYS ENTRANCED.

A Wonderful Manifestation of Hypnotic Power.

A most remarkable manifestation of the power of hypnotism was completed last week at Lake Brady, Ohio, when Harmon Leonard was raised from a hypnotic trance, into which he had been thrown seven days before. During the intervening week he had had no food or nourishment of any kind and his physical nature had remained utterly dormant.

June 30 a hypnotist named Santonelli, having obtained the consent of the parents of Leonard to employ him as a subject for his tests, commanded Leonard to go to a certain tent which had been erected for the purpose and to fall asleep. The subject instantly obeyed. The tent in which he lay was open to visitors during the next seven days. At night the sleeper was guarded by a young companion. When he fell asleep his pulse was 84. This Santonelli reduced by hypnotism to 64, and on the following day to 54, and then to 44. It afterward rose to about 50 and remained at about that point until just before he was awakened. During this time young Leonard did not have his clothing changed and did not leave his couch except as he was ordered to "stiffen out" so that he could be photographed on one occasion. His guards are willing to make oath to the fact that he remained without food or other stimulants and that his physical functions were dormant all this time.

Leonard was taken out of the trance by Santonelli in the presence of a large crowd of people Sunday afternoon. His pulse had risen to 120, but subsided to about 90 soon after. He expressed ignorance of the fact that he had been asleep.

Physicians have manifested the greatest interest in the experiment, claiming that in the case of gunshot wounds in the abdomen, when the suspension of the functions would materially assist recovery, the use of hypnotism would be of vital importance.

CHAPTER XXI.

Considering his naturally indolent ease-loving nature, Mr. Fulton certainly gave himself some trouble in attaining his object. He spared no pains. If Lady Grahame went to the opera, he was sure to be seen in her box. Whatever ball or party she attended, he was invariably present. People began to say, "If you ask Lady Grahame, you must not forget Mr. Fulton; he is her shadow."

It so happened that just at that time Squire Grenholme, of Grenholme Park, near Oulston, died, and the greater part of his property, consisting of lands and houses in Oulston, was for sale. Mr. Fulton's solicitors told him of it. The Hall would not be sold until the death of the squire's widow, now old and infirm, but the other property was to be had at a great bargain. In the course of a few years, when that frail life ended, he could purchase the Hall, and would become, as Squire of Grenholme, a man of position and eminence.

The opportunity was too tempting to be lost. The purchase was concluded, and Mr. Fulton found himself a large land owner, and possessor of numerous houses in the pretty town of Oulston; and when all was arranged he went triumphantly to Lady Grahame, to tell her what he had done.

"You have acted very wisely," she said; "money is very well, but nothing gives one such a good standing as the possession of property. Did you say Oulston? Lord Bayneham's estate is somewhere near there, is it not?"

"Yes," replied Mr. Fulton, who had carefully ascertained all the "bearings" of his new acquisition. Bayneham Castle is about six miles from the town. It is the chief place in the neighborhood, I believe."

"I should imagine so," said Lady Grahame, indifferently; "and if ever you should purchase the Hall, Mr. Fulton, and become Squire of Grenholme, you will find them charming neighbors. The Dowager Lady Bayneham is one of my dearest friends. Her son is abroad just now."

"You have so many friends, Lady Grahame!" sighed her admirer. "Is the young earl married?"

"Yes," replied her ladyship; "he married last year one of the loveliest girls in England; they are in Italy now, I believe. The young Lady Bayneham will be one of our brightest stars. I never met any one so exquisitely lovely, graceful and refined.

Paul Fulton, as he styled himself, rejoiced to hear all this. He saw his way clearly now; and once Squire of Grenholme, husband of the fashionable widow, and near neighbor of the young earl, he should attain the summit of his ambition.

It was at his club that Bertie Carlyon made the acquaintance of Mr. Fulton. They became friends in some degree, although there was little in common between them. Bertie was gifted, and, what is more rare, he was industrious. His works were eagerly read by the thoughtful men of the day. He was courted alike by wise men and beautiful women; for that Paul Fulton sought him. He was a rising man, whom to know was a greater honor. So they dined together occasionally, met at their club, and discussed passing events, all unconscious of the tragic link that bound them. From Bertie Carlyon, as from Lady Grahame, Paul Fulton heard warm praises of the young lord's wife. He thought much of his neighbors who were to be when he was Squire of Grenholme. He was, in his indolent, lazy way, anxious to see the beautiful young countess, of whom all the world spoke, and spoke well. To Mr. Fulton Bertie confided his intense desire of entering into Parliamentary life.

"The borough of Oulston returns one member," said Mr. Fulton, "and from all the rumors floating now, I should imagine the country to be on the eve of a general election. I had some thoughts of offering myself as a candidate, but I tell you what, Mr. Carlyon, introduce me to your friend, Lord Bayneham, and we will try if you cannot be returned as the Liberal member for Oulston. I have some influence there, you know."

Bertie Carlyon grew intimate with, and even liked, the gay, good-natured man who seemed so anxious to further his interests.

CHAPTER XXII.

Under the blue Italian skies where myrtles and citrons bloom, by the fair German Rhine, by the snow-clad mountains of Switzerland, and on the sunny plains of beautiful France, Lord Bayneham lingered with his young wife. He watched the pale sweet face brighten gradually. He never suspected any mental suffering, and would have laughed at the idea. He believed his wife to be suffering from the effects of over-exertion and too much excitement. Their winter at Bayneham had been a brilliant one, and she had been a marvelous hostess. He blamed himself for not having sooner perceived her fatigue and languor; but, in his own quiet way he was doing his best to atone for it.

During the whole year they lingered among the fairest scenes of this fair earth. They spent Christmas in Florence, and the spring brought them home. Private letters and public papers brought to Lord Bayneham the news of a general election, and he knew then that his place was in England.

They went at once to London, where the young earl found the leaders of his party anxiously awaiting him. New combinations were forming, great events loomed in the distance, and Lord Bayneham was asked if he had any influence in Oulston; if so, let him use it for the return of a Liberal member. He inquired, somewhat carelessly, if there was any candidate in the field, and he became all fire and interest when he heard that the man they were anxious to secure was no other than the great political writer, his dearest and best friend, Albert Carlyon.

"You may consider the election as good as made," he said to the chief. "I shall go down to Bayneham and take Carlyon with me. There will be but little opposition."

When that interview was ended Lord Bayneham rushed off in search of Bertie. He found him busily engaged at the office, and heartily pleased to see him.

"We may hope Lady Bayneham and Miss Earle will now find their way to London," said Bertie; "they have been at Cowes, I understand, since Christmas."

"Dine with us to-morrow," said Lord Bayneham, "and you will see them both. They will be in town this evening. Now, Bertie, let us discuss business. What is this about the borough of Oulston? You know you may safely reckon on my assistance."

Bertie then told his friend how anxious he was to begin his Parliamentary career.

"I feel that my vocation is essentially a political one," he said. "I can serve my country honestly and well. Mr. Fulton, the new man who has purchased Squire Grenholme's property, has promised to do all he can; and I think there is every chance of success."

"I am sure of it," said Lord Bayneham, enthusiastically. "I tell you what, Bertie, when the election comes on we will all go down to Bayneham together, and I will ask this friend of yours to join us. Lady Hilda and Miss Earle shall canvass for us. You will come in with a wonderful majority. You shall see if I am not a true prophet."

"You are a true friend," said Bertie, gratefully. "I should like to introduce Mr. Fulton to you. Shall you be at the club this evening?"

"I will be there just for that purpose, even if I cannot remain," replied his friend. "You will come to-morrow, Bertie?"

Trying to conceal his delight, Bertie promised, and Lord Bayneham went away.

Evening brought the countess and Barbara; the latter radiant in health and spirits. They were delighted at the change in Hilda. She had grown more beautiful during the year of secret sorrow, and thought gave fresh loveliness to her face, and the dark violet eyes wore a new expression. She looked taller and more matronly, and in all England one could not have found a more perfect type of a young English wife.

"I did not think time could have added a charm, Hilda," said Barbara Earle; "but it has managed to do so. Change of air and scene has improved you wonderfully."

Lady Bayneham gazed with proud pleasure at her son's wife. Even her critical eye could not see one fault or one cause for remark. They were a pleasant family party, and Lord Bayneham left them after dinner to go round to his club. Bertie introduced Mr. Fulton to him; and Lord Bayneham, who liked all pleasant things, was struck by his gay, easy, graceful manner, and his flow of conversation.

"I have not many minutes this evening," he said. "Perhaps, Mr. Fulton, you will favor me with a call some time to-morrow; then we can discuss the Oulston business at our leisure."

That being settled, Lord Bayneham returned home. The ladies were pleased to hear of Bertie's prospects, for the handsome young secretary was a favorite with all. Barbara Earle made no remark; but her face flushed and her eyes shone brightly. She looked serenely fair and calm. That evening, when she stood alone in her room, she took from a little pearl casket a small golden apple and touched it with her lips as though it were something living, smiling as she did so at her own pleasant thoughts.

"I am always coming across old friends," said Lord Bayneham to Hilda, the day following. "I met your old admirer, Captain Massey, this morning; he is leaving England in the autumn, and will dine with us to-day."

It was a party of old friends who met that evening in Grosvenor Square. Lady Bayneham professed herself delighted to see Bertie. Barbara said little, her greeting was kind and gentle; but that did not satisfy the handsome secretary. Perhaps Captain Massey was less at his ease than some of the others. He had dearly loved Lady Hutton's ward, and her marriage with Lord Bayneham had been a bitter blow to him. Not that he thought himself worthy of her, or that she ever gave him any encouragement. He loved her hopelessly and humbly. There were times when he raved against fortune and fate, wishing he were anything but a brave captain, with nothing but an honorable name to recommend him. After Hilda's marriage he left London, and had just returned to make arrangements for leaving England on a mission of some importance.

Then Lord Bayneham met him, and greeted him warmly, pressing him to waive all ceremony and dine with him. Captain Massey was sorely puzzled. He longed to gaze upon the fair young face that had been the one star of his hope and love; he longed to see her in her own home, surrounded by luxury and love. Then he could take the picture into exile with him, and think of it when he felt dull and lonely. So he yielded, and went to dinner, looking with sad eyes upon the one face that had been all the world to him. She welcomed him warmly and kindly, her little white hands outstretched to meet him. There was no thought of love or lovers in that pure, guileless heart. She had never known that he cared for her.

And this man, who had loved the fair young girl so deeply and hopelessly, saw what others had never noticed. He read the expression of that face and those clear, true eyes more correctly than did those who lived with her. She was even more beautiful than before her marriage, but the beauty was changed. The first flush of youth and happiness had died out of it, never to return. He saw something of constraint in the smiles that had once seemed ever to linger round her lips. He noticed that when she was neither speaking nor listening an expression of deep thoughtfulness came over her, and then Captain Massey said to himself that the woman he loved either had a secret or was not happy, he could not tell which.

"Hilda," said Lord Bayneham that evening to his wife, "we must be more careful this time than we were last winter; but as you are so much stronger and better, I thought of asking a few friends to Bayneham—what do you say?"

"Are you going there?" she asked, trying to hide the fear shown both in her face and voice.

"Yes," replied her husband, "we are bound this time on a patriotic expedition. The safety and well-being of the country demand the return of a Liberal member for Oulston. We hope Bertie will be successful; but he will require our aid. No bribery, mind; they are all free and independent voters; still what you and Barbara can do by the magic of voice and smile may be safely accomplished."

"Does Barbara go with us?" asked Lady Hilda.

"Yes," replied Lord Bayneham, "and my mother, too. You will enjoy the canvassing. I must ask Bertie's friend, Mr. Fulton, and one or two more. You do not smile, Hilda; do you not like the prospect?"

"Why should I not?" she asked, calmly; "if I am only with you it matters very little to me in what place."

"And you promise to smile, with all the fascination that you can command, upon the noble voters of Oulston?"

"I promise," said Lady Hilda, "and I hope Bertie will get in. Do you know, Claude, I begin to think he cares for Barbara."

"I knew that, little wife, many years ago," said Lord Bayneham; "I should like to know if Barbara cares for him."

They said no more; but all that night there lay on Lady Hilda's mind a weight of dread, as of some coming heavy evil which she could not avert; and once in her sleep she sprang up, wildly crying, "Claude, do not go to Bayneham. I have dreamed that I lay dead there."

CHAPTER XXIII.

"Will you go with us, Claude?" asked Lady Bayneham on the following morning. "I am going to take Hilda to call on Lady Grahame."

"I should be delighted," he replied; "but I have a gentleman—Mr. Fulton—coming on rather important business; I must therefore defer the pleasure."

For the second time Lady Hilda heard that name uttered before her, and did not remember it. The carriage drove off, and she sat serene and smiling by Lady Bayneham's side. They saw a tall, handsome man go up the broad flight of steps, but no warning came to Hilda, no impulse or instinct told her that he was man whose cruelty had doomed her mother to death.

"I am glad you are come, Mr. Fulton," said Lord Bayneham, courteously; "we will go into the library, as we shall require pens and paper for our calculations."

The visitor followed his young host. Was it chance that directed Lord Bayneham there? The library was a grand apartment; its chief ornament was a magnificent picture hanging over the mantelpiece. It was the portrait of Lady Hutton's ward, taken by the celebrated artist, Mr. Seaton, and valued by Lord Bayneham above all other treasures. The summer sunbeams fell slanting upon it, lighting the golden hair and beautiful face with a bright radiance. It was a face to dream of, so pure, so fair and lovely. The violet eyes and sweet lips smiled at you; the tender, innocent heart, the guileless, loving nature, sweetness, constancy and truth, were imprinted on every feature. The sunbeam was not brighter than the sheen of the rippling golden hair.

As Mr. Fulton entered the library his eyes fell upon the picture, and it startled him so much that he uttered a low cry. He went up and stood before it. He asked himself was he dreaming or awake. The room, Lord Bayneham, and the present faded from him; he stood in Brynmar woods, under the cool shade of the green trees, the lovely face blushed at his passionate words, the fair young head drooped beneath his gaze. He was there wooing Magdalen Hurst in the opening of her fair youth and beauty. It was for but a moment, and something dimmed the eyes that had long been dry. He started; what, was he, Paul Fulton, sentimental?—going to cry because a beautiful picture resembled his dead wife, making a simpleton of himself for a painted face?

"You admire that painting," said Lord Bayneham; "it is considered an exquisite gem of art."

"I—I—once knew some one whose face resembled this," stammered the visitor.

"Indeed!" said Lord Bayneham, quietly; "she must have been very beautiful, then."

"She was," replied Mr. Fulton; and then there came across him a vision of his dead wife's face as he had seen it last, white and worn with the misery and anguish of pain, deeper than death.

A CITY WITHOUT OFFICERS.

Unique Record of a Kansas Municipality for Nineteen Years.

Probably nowhere else can be found the unique conditions that have for nearly two decades obtained in the city of Humboldt, a thriving Kansas town, of 1,800 inhabitants. During all that time it has been growing and thriving; public improvements have been made and law and order been observed without the place having a legal existence or a legal officer. The city's government has been solely by common consent and the situation has been acceptable to all. Every spring, as there will be this year, has a red-hot municipal election taken place. One man has received the election to the office of mayor, another to police judge and others to councilmen, but none since 1876 has taken the official oath or "qualified."

The reason is this: In 1870 the town, then just started, bonded itself for $275,000 for a new railroad. In 1876 it added $25,000 for another, which never got further than the building of a few miles of roadbed. To pay these bonds without the impetus of railroads meant bankruptcy, and when the purchaser came on to collect interest he found that there was no one on whom to serve legal papers, the old administration had resigned and the new refused to qualify. For sixteen years the bondholders have endeavored to collect the interest, but the courts have always held that there was no method by which it could be done. One judge recently decided otherwise, but an appeal has been taken to the nation's highest tribunal.

The extent to which co-operation can be carried is evidenced by this city's management. When money is needed the Mayor—or rather the man called by that complimentary title—makes an assessment and the people pay it voluntarily. The street commissioners make repairs and every citizen pays his share. The marshal keeps the small boys in check, but he has no real power to make an arrest. The city clerk's orders and licenses are fiat but they pass at par. The place is a good trading point, is well governed, and its streets are kept clean and presentable. With the exception of the railroad bonds every debt is paid, and the man called city treasurer has a comfortable balance in his hands.

The present Mayor is M. T. Eckert, editor of the city's paper, and who has published a paper for twenty-nine years in the county. He says the people are willing to compromise the bond deal in order to get out of their difficulty, but that cannot be done. In two years more the debt will be outlawed, and then, if the Supreme Court does not prevent, the town will hold up its head again and have an inaugural ball when its first officers in twenty years take office. Meanwhile the city enjoys the oddity of their peculiar position politically.

Rudolph Julian, founder and chief of a score of spacious studios in London used by impecunious artists who are unable to afford one of their own, was an artist's model thirty years ago. The idea of organizing these establishments occurred to him one day while posing before a painter as "Adonis." Some of the best known painters in England were schooled in these studios.

PRODUCING COAL OIL.

SCENES IN THE FAMOUS BRADFORD FIELD.

Nitro-Glycerine Lowered and Exploded—Spouting Wells Sometimes Tear Down Derricks—Lightning an Enemy to Storage—Drilling Wells.

The Oil Region.

The recent advance in prices of petroleum and the consequent activity in Pennsylvania's oil fields has aroused public interest in affairs pertaining directly to the production of coal oil. We present herewith a series of illustrations showing several phases of the work of oil production in the Bradford field, a section which made the Pennsylvania oil territory famous the world over. The picture of Boyd valley gives a good general view of the oil field in McKean County, near Bradford. Many persons unfamiliar with the oil country suppose the wells are drilled only in the valleys. Such is not the case; although the higher up on a hill the well is located; the deeper the well must be, as the oil-bearing rock or "sand" lies nearly level, and, in the neighborhood of Bradford, is about on a level with tidewater.

PREPARING A TORPEDO.

BOYD VALLEY, CENTER OF RICH OIL FIELD IN M'KEAN COUNTY, PA.

The drilling is done with a heavy string of tools, consisting of rope-socket, sinker bar, jars, auger stem and bit attached to the end of a cable and suspended by means of a temper screw from the end of a working beam (walking beam). The temper screw is used to gradually lower the tools as the bit cuts its way downward. The upward and downward movement of the working beam causes the bit to strike and chip the rock. When the tools have been lowered the length of the temper screw, the tools are raised and the drillings removed by means of a bailer. The bit, if dull, is replaced by one freshly "dressed," and the operation is continued. Work is continuous, except in cases of accidents and on Sunday. It is carried on by two crews, consisting each of driller and tool dresser. One crew starts at noon and works till midnight; the other commences at midnight and works till noon. When the well has been drilled to the proper depth it is torpedoed, or "shot," in the oil-producing rock to shatter the rock and facilitate the flow of oil. For this purpose a torpedo of tin "shells" containing nitro-glycerine is lowered into the well.

JUST AFTER THE TORPEDO EXPLOSION.

The last shell to be lowered is fitted with a firing head. It is sometimes exploded by dropping a weight called a "ninety-devil," and sometimes by means of a bomb-squid. If a person is standing in the vicinity of a well when the torpedo explodes, a slight shock can be felt as though a blow had been struck under one's feet. The noise resembles the crack of an old-fashioned musket cap. When the torpedo explodes, the tremendous force of the explosion, together with the force of the gas, sends the oil high over the derrick. One of the most fascinating sights to be seen in the oil country is a well flowing after being torpedoed. If the well happens to have a large quantity of oil in the hole when shot, several seconds, perhaps half a minute or more, may pass before there are any signs of the coming flow. Then the oil, churned into the color of "working" molasses, rises a few feet above the casing head, stands like a playing fountain for a few seconds, jumps a little higher and a little higher, and then with a roar that can be heard a mile, the gas throws oil and stones high in the air, sometimes tearing away the top of the derrick, and sometimes throwing the whole string of casing out through the top of the derrick. Occasionally, to avoid injury to the derrick or for other reasons, a piece of bent casing is screwed on and the flow is thrown out through the derrick to one side.

From the well the oil is conducted to small wooden storage tanks, which, by means of pipe lines, are connected to the large iron storage tanks of the pipe line company. These tanks contain from 30,000 to 40,000 barrels of oil each when full, and are located at convenient places through the oil field. At Olean, N. Y., there are a great many of these tanks built in rows, and giving to the place the name of Tank City. The great enemy of the large iron storage tanks is lightning, and when the lightning fires one of them the sight draws spectators for miles around. In case of fire, little can be done as a rule, save to prevent other tanks catching. Generally, the oil burns until all is consumed, but to prevent the fire spreading, a ditch is thrown up around the tank, and often the tank is perforated with cannon balls, thus allowing the oil from near the tank to escape and so prevent boiling over. These tanks sometimes burn from 24 to 36 hours.

CAVE IN THE SIERRA NEVADAS.

Dark Cavern Where Myriads of Bats and Other Creatures Make Homes.

Of all the strange places to be found in the remote recesses of the Sierra Nevadas none is any stranger than a bat cave in Kaweah canyon. There is nothing particularly strange about the cave itself, but the fact that it is the dwelling place of thousands of web-winged animals makes it a most uncanny and unusual spot. The cave is in the wall of the canyon, not far back from the water in the rainy season, and there is nothing about the appearance of the opening to attract attention during the day. But approach the place at about dusk, and a black stream of shadowy forms will be seen passing in and out of the opening accompanied by the most peculiar odor in the world and a soft rustling sound. The bats have been asleep all day and are going in search of food. To enter the cave in the daytime is not a difficult task, but is somewhat unpleasant. The opening is large, and a man can enter in an erect position. About ten feet in the entrance makes a turn, and an inky blackness exists. Go a little farther, so as to be away from the air at the entrance, and a most disagreeable odor strikes the nostrils and every few feet one treads upon the body of a bat. While the cave is in darkness a profound silence exists, but strike a light and a sound like a waterfall is heard. Thousands of bats that have been asleep at once awake and commence to fly in circles about the cavern, which can be seen to be very large. Round and round they go, increasing in speed every moment, and the odor of the cave becomes more and more disagreeable. When this happens it is a wise thing for the explorer to make his escape and postpone further investigation until night, at which time the cave is deserted. Even the dead bats on the floor will disappear, having been eaten by the others as soon as they awoke.

Family Reunion.

A lawyer in Australia was defending a young man whose record was malodorous. Ignoring the record, however, the lawyer proceeded to draw a harrowing picture of two gray-haired parents in England looking anxiously for the return of their prodigal son to spend the next Christmas with them, and he asked: "Had they the hearts to deprive the old couple of this happiness?"

The jury, however, found the prisoner guilty. Before passing sentence, the Judge called for the prisoner's jail record, after examining which he blandly remarked that "the prisoner had some five previous convictions against him, but he was glad to say that the learned counsel's eloquent appeal would not remain unanswered, for he would commit the prisoner to Maitland Jail, where his aged parents at the present moment were serving sentences respectively, so that father, mother and son would be able to spend the ensuing Christmas season under one roof."

Poor Frank.

When the class in geography was called up, it was noticed that one of the boys, Frank by name—and rather dull by nature—was looking uncommonly well pleased with himself.

"Well, Frank," said the teacher, "do you know your lesson to-day?"

"Yes, ma'am," he answered. "The answer to the first queston is 'South,' and the next is 'Africa,' and the next is 'South America,' and the next is 'Peninsula.'"

"But, Frank, that isn't the way to learn a lesson. You must skip about. That's the way I shall do in asking the questions."

Frank's countenance fell. His great discovery was of no use.

"But, Miss Gray," he said, "I might not skip round the same way you do."

Neat Reproof.

Perhaps the neatest reproof to a long-winded preacher was that given by Harvey Combe when Lord Mayor to Dr. Parr. As they were coming out of church together, Parr was so foolish as to ask the other how he liked his sermon. "Well, doctor, to speak, firmly, there were four things in it that I did not like to hear. They were the quarters of the church clock which struck before you had finished."

Every woman occasionally says something that causes you to wonder where she learned it.

WATER VICTIMS.

A FORT WAYNE MAN MEETS DEATH AT BLUE RIVER LAKE CHURUBUSCO.

Gussie Burton, a Chicago Lad Drowned at Lake James, near Angola.

A man by the name of Koons whose home is at Ft. Wayne was drowned while fishing in Blue River Lake, Churubusco, Sunday. He was alone in a boat standing up fishing. Other parties were near him in boats and noticed him stager, and ask him, "What's the matter"? He replied, "I had a large fish on my line and it broke!" Then in less than a minute the parties in the other boats looked up and saw him fall out of the boat head foremost. He never came up after that. His body was found at the bottom of the lake about one hour latter. The water was only about eight feet deep where he drowned. Some say he was quite drunk an hour before he was drowned and others think he may have fallen in a fit. He was employed in Ft. Wayne as a driver on one of the beer wagons. He leaves a wife and one child.

Gussie Burton of 81 North Oakley Ave. Chicago, was drowned in Lake James, Angola, yesterday. He is a lad of about fifteen summers. The particulars as to the sad accident we were unable to learn. His parents were telegraphed for at Chicago.

The most pleasant little pills for regulating the bowels are De Witt's Little Early Risers. Cure sick headache and constipation. Small pill. Small dose.

At four Months Old.

Last June Dick Crawford brought his twelve-months old child, suffering from infantile diarrhœa, to me. It had been weaned at four month and had always been sickly. I gave it the usual treatment in such cases but without benefit. The child kept growing thinner until it weighed but little more than when born, or perhaps ten pounds. I then started the father to giving Chamberlain's Colic Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy. Before one bottle of the 25 cent size had been used a marked improvemen was seen and its continued use cured the child. Its weakness any puny constitution disappeared and its father and myself believe the child's life was saved by this remedy. J. T. Marlow, M. D., Tamaroa, Ill. For sale by Robbins and McCord. 27 30

GEORGE C. KILLIAN.

The death of Mr. Killian Saturday was a sudden one and a very sad one in many ways. It will be remembered that he and Mrs. Barclay were married the 6th of last December and after a visit at Dayton, Ohio with her sister, they went to Mr. Killian's home at Dallas, Texas. Last winter he had a severe attack of grip, and later on some trouble like paralysis. They concluded to come north and stay during the hot weather. So they visited awhile in Dayton, and a short time ago came here and located in Mrs. K's. property at the north side of town. He still felt the effects of the paralysis, and it seemed to bother him as to speech and his memory. Friday he seemed to get worse for a time, and had to give up a trip down town to get shaved. Saturday, Peter Shull threshed the wheat he had raised on the land around the house here, and Mr. Killian rode over to the Lake Shore depot, where the wheat was sold to L. J. Miller. He and Mr. Miller talked over old times for he as well as M. B. Willis and some others had been acquainted some thirty years ago. On going home he walked east on Fifth street, but when near the Campbell blacksmith shop now Baker & Scott's he was unable to proceed and Wm. Brand coming along took him in his buggy up to his home. He managed to get into the house by the aid of his cane. Mr. and Mrs. York occupy a part of the house, and Mrs. York seeing that he appeared nearly helpless called home Mrs. Killian who happened to be at a neighbor's, and they got him to bed. At first his mind seemed to wander and he thought he had lost the check Mr. Miller gave him for the wheat, but it was in his pocket, safe. Dr. Ford was sent for, but he is not in panctice and Dr. Casebeer who had been their physician was not in town. Later on Dr. F. M. Hines was called and gave him such remedies as were possible, but he soon became unconscious. Dr. Ford was called in and the physicians were obliged to give Mrs. Killian the unwelcome news that he could survive but a short time. He breathed his last at 6:45. The funeral is at the home to-morrow at 2 p. m. Up to that hour, friends can view the remains but at the services, the casket will be closed. Interment in Evergreen. His age was 51 years 1 month and 25 days. A brother of Mr. Killian, who lives in Lancaster Co., Pa., has been sent for but may not reach here in time for the funeral.

Night-Booming Cereus.

These queer plants have lovely flowers but they have the strange habit of blooming only in the night, so that one must admire their beauties by lamplight or not at all. They are of the cactus family, cactus grandiflorus, we believe, a plant that comes from the West India Islands, and other southern points. Here they are cultivated indoors.

J. G. Clapp, the photographer, has one at his residence on West Seventh street, but it has never bloomed till now. Yesterday evening he and Mrs. Clapp noticed that the one bud that had been growing, was beginning to open. This was a sign that its blooming was at hand and might be looked for as soon as it was fairly dark. And so it was. The delicate stamens and pistils already began to be in sight, and the large white petals of the flower were visibly spreading. For it is one of the interesting traits of this plant, that the flowers may be seen to expand and come fully open. It is very interesting to watch this process, for the stamens, as they become disentangled spring away and quiver with a slight motion, as if alive. By eleven o'clock the flower is fully open, and then remains stationary for a short time, then begins to close again. By morning it is closed, and will not open again. Mrs. Clapp was greatly pleased and enjoyed the calls of her neighbors, who waited with her to see the flower unfold. We suppose no one can tell why one flower will open at four in the morning, another at an hour or so later, and others again, at all hours of the day, each coming out promptly at its own time. But in most cases we have laid this opening to some influence of the sun or to the sunlight. Not so with the night blooming cereus. It comes out at nightfall whether there is any light or not. Of course the pleased owner, lights up the room or veranda, where it is, so as to enjoy the blooming, but it would not wait for her to do so.

A CORRETION.

There was a slight error in Geo. Henderson's article of yesterday, which no doubt anyone well posted in history will notice. We refer to the statement that the city of Poughkeepsie was begun in 1702 and that ten years later the state legislature met there to ratify the federal constitution. The date of beginning the town is about right as it was settled irregularly from 1698 to 1702. But the legislature that ratified the federal constitution met 86 years later, that is in 1788. It convened July 17 and the vote of ratification was on the 26th. The ratification of the old "Articles of Confederation" was also at a meeting of the legislature at Poughkeepsie and was in 1777. In some way, these dates have got mixed up, as some otherwise reliable works have one or the other wrong.

Chamberlain's is the best of all. Vincent J. Barkl, of Danbury, Iowa, has used Chamberlain's Cough Remedy whenever in need of a medicine for coughs and colds, for the past five years and says: "It always helps me out. If anyone asks me what kind of cough medicine I use, I reply, Chamberlain's, that is the best of all. 25 and 50c bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord. 27 30

A Holland Case.

The people of New Holland, O., have been greatly surprised recently by the almost wonderful cure of a young daughter of Mr. Jno. Orahood, who for a long time had been afflicted with fits or epileptic convulsions. The affliction seemed more dreadful because of the natural brightness of the child. Doctors and other medicines failed to effect any lasting benefit and cure seemed hopeless until a sample bottle of Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer was providentially handed Mr. Orahood and from the use of it and only two full bottles of the remedy, the young girl has been completely cured of the affliction which threatened to blight her life. Fortunately there are but few cases of epileptic fits, but we venture to say that half the people who read this would feel like new beings after a thorough use of Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer; it is a nerve food, restoring nerve force on the same principal that food restores physical vigor and muscle.

If yours is a case of shattered nerves, frequent headache, perhaps nervously ross, troubled with sleeplessness, a tired eling in the morning, debilitated, all worn out feeling, promptly use this great remedy, for it will you, and also ward off the most serious sickness or breaking down which you symptoms indicate.

It is warranted sure to relieve and cure nerve troubles as represented. For sale by F. E. Davenport 30

The Discovery Saved His Life.

Mr. G. Cailliouette, Druggist, Beaverville, Ill., says: "To Dr King's New Discovery I owe my life. Was taken with Lagrippe and tried all the physicians for miles about, but of no avail and was given up and told I could not live. Having Dr. King's New Discovery in my store I sent for a bottle and began its use and from the first dose began to get better, and after using three bottles was up and about again. It is worth its weight in gold. We won't keep store or house without it." Get a free trial bottle at Robbins & McCord drug store. 2 charming location, crowned by hills over 300 ft. in height. Eastman Business College is also one of the fixed and solid institutions of Poughkeepsie, also Riverview Military Academy, commanding a beautiful eminence overlooking the Hudson and readily seen from the deck of the steamer. Passing many small villages, we reach Newburgh, our next stop. Approaching the city of Newburgh we see a building of rough stone, one story high, with steep roof, known as Washington's headquarters. This house was built, as we learned, apparently in decades the oldest part in 1750, part in 1760 and the remaining part in 1770. In the spring of 1782 Washington made this building his headquarters and remained there until August, 1783, during which month he took his departure from Newburgh. At this place he passed through the most trying period of the Revolution,—the year of inactivity on the part of Congress, of distress throughout the country and of complaint and discontent in the army.

West Point is the next place of interest. The steamer sails too near the west bank to give a view of the magnificent plateau with Parade Ground and Government Buildings; but on rounding the point a picture of marvelous beauty breaks at once upon the vision. On the left the massive indented ridge of Old Crow Nest, Storm King, and on the right, Mount Taurus and Break Neck, while still further beyond toward the east sweeps the Caskill Range. Close at hand on the right will be seen Constitution Island, formerly the home of Miss Susan Warner, who died in 1885, author of "Queechy" and "The Wide, Wide World." Here the ruins of the old fort are seen. Some years ago, when the first delegation of Apache Indians was brought to Washington to sign a treaty of peace, the Indians were taken for an outing up the Hudson. It is said they noted with cold indifference the palaces along the river front; the artistic terraces, the well kept sloping lawns, the clipped hedges and the ivy grown walls made no impression on them; but when the magnificent picture of the Hudson above West Point revealed itself, painted by the rays of the sinking sun, these wild men stood erect, raised their hands high above their heads and uttered a monosyllabic expression of delight, which was more expressive than volumes of words. Sir Robert Temple says: "It is one of the fairest spectacles to be seen on the earth's surface. Not on any river or strait, not on Ganges or Indus, on the Dardanelles or the Bosphorus, on the Danube or the Rhine, on the Neva or the Nile, have I observed so fairy like a scene as this on the Hudson."

Want Their Goat

This morning Sherman Hollister received a check for $26, the amount of the board bill the balloon men owed him. It was sent by Steckney, the manager, from Indianapolis with the request for him to forward their goats, sachels, etc., that had been attached at the Junction when they skipped out. This ends the balloon episode, and Mr. Hollister gets his just dues, and more than that, gets rid of the goats. The sachels were good ones and were worth some money, but of course Hollister had no use for them except to get his money by retaining them. And the balloon men have their goat. The only real losers are the poor animals themselves which will now be compelled to make ascensions again and go bleating up into the clouds, and then come sailing and kicking down to land by the aid of a parachute.

PUBLIC FUNDS.

Looseness With Which They are Handled by Incompetent Officials.

In a late letter to the COURIER, from Washington, D. C, our correspondent has this bit of information that may interest taxpayers:

"To day I had occasion to call on Secretary Morton. He was in a most pleasant frame of mind. Not long ago he fired scientist Harrington, who for years has prevailed as the chief forecaster or Merlin of the Weather Bureau. Of course the weather did not always arrive as Harrington prophesied. Sometimes he said the sun would shine, when it rained and stormed; and again he scheduled blizzards which never came. Morton made broad sword war on Harrington from the jump, and at last succeeded in cutting him down. When I called on him he was evidently in pleasant retrospection of his victory.

"Look at that piece of weather," observed Secretary Morton as I came in, at the same time waving his hand towards the window where nature smiled through a clear and at the same time a cool-warm day. "Have we ever had better weather while Harrington directed it?' Here the Secretary smiled at what he deemed a bit of humor. "I'll tell you about these scientists," went on Secretary Morton. "They have much the same mission and perform much the same duties as a lot of rats under a corn-crib. Only the rats eat corn, and the scientists eat taxes. Just to illustrate the value of a scientist in the practical details of government, take a recent instance. The man at the observatory at Baker City, Oregon, hadn't sent in a weather report for four days. I got a letter from Harrington. It said in effect, "I respectfully submit" that the man at Baker City, Oregon, hasn't reported the weather for four days; and "I respectfully recommend" that E. H. Smith, one of our men at San Francisco, and Harrington's brother-in-law, by the way, be ordered to Baker City at an expense not to exceed $150 to inquire the cause.

"I read the Harrington suggestion with some disgust I admit. I've always found it a good way to learn anything to directly ask someone who knows. Before adopting Harrington's 150 dollar advice touching the sending of his San Francisco relative to Baker City, I sent a telegram to the Baker City man direct. "Why havn't you sent weather report for the last four days?"

"Because the wires blew down and were not repaired until this morning," was the answer which came promptly back.

"And that was all there was to it," concluded Secretary Morton. "It cost 75 cents to develop a truth in half an hour which it was suggested to pay $150 and wait six weeks to get it. All I claim for it is an exhibition of horse sense against science."

ORANGEMEN.

At Chicago yesterday we witnessed for the first time a parade of "Orangemen." As there are no lodges of them outside the large cities a brief account may be of interest. They are Irish Protestants and take their name from their first great leader, William III, Prince of Orange, and they parade July 12 because on that day which was July 1 "Old Style," in 1690 he won the battle of Boyne in Ireland. William, as King of the "United Netherlands" had become a great leader on the continent. His wife was a daughter of Charles I of England, and a sister of James II. But James became distasteful to the English and they made an excuse that he was a Catholic and forced him to leave the country. William of Orange helped this along by coming over into England. James afterwards raised an army chiefly of catholics and got into Ireland, William with an army chiefly of protestants met him July 1, 1790 on the river Boyne, a small stream that rises in the Bog of Allen in Kildare and flows into the Irish sea. The fight was a hard one but William beat his brother-in-law and drove him out. Soon after the political order of "Orangemen" was organized among the Irish protestants and flourishes to this day. Their marching clubs often have fights with the catholic clubs on that day. The procession we saw yesterday was a large one, very fine and cost a good deal. The men wore large shoulder sashes of orange colored silk and carried expensive banners of similar colors. They are called in the United States the "Loyal Order of Orangemen" and carry no flag but the American. The ladies had two clubs in line the "Martha Washington" and another, the name of which we forget. The ladies were finely dressed and rode in carriages, but the men were on foot except the richly uniformed marshals.

Shuman-Jackman.

At noon to-day occurred the marriage of John F. Shuman to Miss Blanche Jackman, at the home of the bride's parents in Waterloo. The bride is the oldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John S. Jackman, well known and highly regarded citizens of that place, and the groom is a prominent young attorney well known in legal circles. The ceremony was at noon, Rev. F. C. Colvin of the Presbyterian church in Auburn, being the officiating minister. There was quite a large attendance of the near friends and relatives on both sides, and the home was lovely with its floral decorations. As the clock reached the hour of noon, the wedding march was played by Miss Mattie Maxson, when the groomsman, Mr. Matson son of Lew Matson at Pleasant Lake, but himself now of Chicago, and the bridesmaid, Miss Madge, the bride's younger sister entered the room and were followed by the bride and groom who took their place under a lovely floral canopy. Suspended above them hung an elaborate and artistic star of marguerites, making altogether a fine effect. The solemn ceremony that united them for life, was said by the minister, the no less solemn pledges were given, and a brief but affecting prayer followed by a few words of friendly interest, and then the congratulations. These were of more than usual interest and affection for many were their near relatives or had known both from early years. A splendid collation followed giving an hour or so to social intercourse, which was improved by many who had not met for years, till called together by this festal occasion. After these greetings and the many good wishes for the young couple, the company separated to their homes. Owing to the ill health of Mr. Shuman, the contemplated trip east could not be undertaken. He was taken with sudden sickness a day or two ago, and it was the opinion of his physician that typhoid fever was to be feared. So this part of the program we were told would be abandoned, at least for the present. It was except to the groom's ill health, a most pleasant occasion and they begin life with prospects of abundant sunshine. There were many useful and lovely gifts by which their friends remembered them in good wishes.

Among those from Auburn who were present, were Mr. Colvin, Judge and Mrs. Penfield, Mrs. Mary Boyer, Daniel Link, Miss Flora Bachtel and the Editor and wife. We are not certain, but have heard, that Mr. and Mrs. Shuman will soon become residents of Auburn. If so, they will be made welcome.

VOLUME XXV. AUBURN, DE KALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY. JULY 25. 1895. NUMBER 30

SAY : :

HOWMUCH DO YOU OWE?

Who holds your mortgage? How much interest are you paying? Do you owe a building loan association anything? If you do, how much interest are you paying them? Unless you are better posted than the majority of people who have such loans, you cannot tell. You think you are paying 6 per cent. Do you know (of course not) that you are paying at least 12 per cent. If you think not, just figure it out yourself. Now then, are you not paying 6 per cent interest and 6 per cent premium? Certainly. Well now don't you know that premium and interest are the same thing—its all interest. Can you afford to pay 12 per cent interest to a loan association when even your banks only charge 8 per cent and you think they are charging too much, and when do you expect to have your loan canceled or paid off in full? You have been told 72 or 78 months. Now then, we undertake to say that it will take you 100 months, if you will call on us we will show you so you will be satisfied that we are right. Now then, we are prepared to loan you money on monthly installment plan for 8 per cent, we charge you no membership fee and you do not have to make three or more payments in advance so that if on account of insufficient security or bad title your loan is rejected you will not lose one cent. You pay nothing unless your loan is granted. We are making farm loans at from 3 to 5 per cent with privilege of partial payments.

ANOTHER THING!

There is scarcely a day but what there is some traveling agent for some building loan association in Auburn soliciting business, selling stock upon which they charge you a membership fee of from 50 cents to $1.00 per share, which amount goes to the agent and you never get back this money thrown away. If you will call on us we will take your application for all the stock you want in the BEST (we can prove it) building loan association in the state the INDIANA MUTUAL OF INDIANAPOLIS, and charge you No MEMBERSHIP FEE AT ALL. This is certainly fair. If you have any investment stock in any association just write them a letter and ask them the withdrawal value of same, their reply will probably open your eyes. What would you say if you would deposit $8.00 per month in your bank for one year and wanted to withdraw the same and they would offer to pay you only about $80? The bank would only have to do this in one case to be compelled to retire from business. Now you pay ten dollars membership fee and 8 dollars for 12 months making 108 dollars, you lose the 10 dollars membership fee and 10 cents per share each month for expenses, making 12 dollars, or a total of 22 dollars loss upon which you would receive 6 per cent interest for average time on 96 dollars, making 2 dollars and 88 cts. from 22 dollars would leave you a loser of 19 dollars and 12 cents. In our association your stock is worth all you have paid in, with its interest added, so that upon withdrawal you do not get less than you paid. We want the people of Auburn to become familiar with this matter, and would like to have any that are interested to call and talk with us, we can give you some pointers.

We are still in the Real Estate, Insurance and R. R. Ticket business.

Wasn't Loaded.

But the Lad that was Hit took a Different View of It.

It was another case of the abiding faith a boy has in an empty gun. And they neve ratop to recall how many times this abiding faith has been shattered—likewise the head, stomach or intestines of the lad at whom the harmless, "empty gun" is aimed. But boys will be boys and older people are sometimes bitten by the same lunacy. This particular case happened down on the creek bottom in Auburn on Wednesday, but the lads did not hunt up a reporter to give it away to. The shooter was Ode Richard a lad of about eight while the shootee is Nevin Pommert aged about eleven. The boys were on the low grounds amusing themselves with their little guns. Nevin had an air gun and a larger boy named Hood had a "flobert," the little rifle so much used to shoot sparrows about town. At the time the accident happened, this flobert gun was in the hands of little Ode Richards. It is not very plain how the the matter happened but the boy with the flobert drew up his gun as if to snap it at Nevin and it went off, of course. The little bullet flew straight to the mark for it struck Nevin's right ear at the lower part of the thick cartilage and went clear through and away into the wilds of Cedar Creek Valley. The party suddenly broke up. They hunted their homes in double quick time. Nevin had his ear dressed and being a plucky lad. was out again next day. But when one thinks how near the wicked little bullet came to his head it raises an uncomfortable feeling. And the question keeps coming up, as to whether boys should be trusted with these dangerous little guns.

ONE SOLDIER HELD HIS CLAIM.

The Only One of General Clarke's Army Who Settled in Indiana.

It is a strange, but nevertheless a true fact, that only one one of the old revolutionary soldiers who served under Gen. George Rodgers Clark and captured Kaskaskia and Vincennes, ever occupied and lived upon the land which the Virginia government allotted to all the veterans in Clarke's grant. This Soldier was Robert Joyce, a bachelor, and he settled on the 500 acres on which the farms of Nicholas Lentz and the Howes estate form a part. During the the early part of the century he died and was buried in the Utica Cemetery. He left his farm to the Woods family, which came out here from the east and is still living in Utica. The farm upon which he settled included all the valuable lime stone cliffs now owned and operated by the Louisville Lime company. The reason by the old soldiers did not occupy the lands in the Clark grant, which comprised most of Clark, part of Scott and Floyd counties, was probably that they were engaged in campaigning in 1779, and the grant was not made until 1784 by the Virginia legislature. So it happened that instead of the soldiers hunting up their land, the land speculators, which even in those days abounded hunted up the soldiers and bought their titles. The Bowman family, however, took possession of a large tract of land upon which the city of Jeffersonville now stands, but did not live upon it.

Severe griping pains of the stomach and bowels instantly and effectually stopped by DeWitt's Colic and Cholera Cure.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."
DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."
DR. J. F. KINCHELOE, Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."
H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

A DEKALB MAN'S IMPRESSION'S OF THE MAGNIFICENT RIVER.

BY GEO. M. HENDERSON.

The only waterview to rival it is that of the Sea of Marmora, opposite Constantinople. "Undercliff," built by John C. Hamilton, son of Alexandre Hamilton, lies under the cliff and shadow of Mount Taurus, and has a fine outlook upon the river and surrounding mountains. "Undercliff" was at one time occupied by the poet George P. Morris, who wrote "My Mother's Bible" and "Woodman Spare that Tree." At West Point is located the United States Military Academy. The academy is located at the top and back of the point. "Flirtation Walk," in spite of its name, can be seen from the deck of the steamer, winding as it does along the cliff from Battle Monument, past Battery Knox, from which point a flight of stone steps leads up to the Parade Ground.

Below West Point is Buttermilk Falls, so christened by Washington Irving which is a pretty little cascade on the west bank of the river. Passing Cohn's Hook, where Henry Hudson anchored on his way up the river, Sep't 14, 1609, we see before us on the right bank a point coming down to the shore marked by a boat house. Directly up the river bank, about an eighth mile stands the old Beverly House, where Benedict Arnold had his head quarters when in command of West Point. It will be remembered that Arnold returned to Beverly House after his midnight interview with Andre at Haverstraw, and immediately after the capture of Andre the following day, that Col. Jamison sent a letter to Arnold advising him of the fact. General Washington, on his way to West Point, sent Alexander Hamilton forward to Beverly House, saying he would come later. Alexander Hamilton and Gen'l Lafayette sat chatting with Mrs. Arnold and her husband when the letter came. Arnold glanced at the contents, rose and excused himself from the table, beckoned his wife to follow him, bade her good bye, told her he was a ruined man and a traitor, kissed his little boy in the cradle, rode to Beverly Dock and ordered his men to pull off and go down the river. We all know the fate of Arnold. He lived long enough to be hissed in the House of Commons as he once took his seat in the gallery.

Further on we approach Anthony's Nose, a prominent feature of the Hudson, in height 900 feet. Perhaps you have read Washington Irving's humorous account of the christening of this point: that it derived its name from the nose of Anthony Van Cerclear, the illustrious trumpeter of Peter Stuyvesant: "Now thus it happened that bright and early in the morning the good Anthony, having washed his burly visage, was leaning over the quarter railing of the galley, contemplating it in the glassy waves below. Just at this moment the illustrious sun breaking in all his splendor from behind a high bluff of the Highlands, did dart one of his most potent beams full upon the refulgent nose of the sounder of brass the reflection of which shot straightway down, hissing hot, into the water, and killed a mighty sturgeon that was sporting beside the vessel. When this astonishing miracle was made known to the Governor, and he tasted of the unknown fish, he marvelled exceedingly, and, as a monument thereof he gave the name of Antnony's Nose to a stout promontory in the neighborhood, and it has continued to be called Anthony's Nose ever since."

Going on down the river we come to Peekskill, a pleasant village on the quiet bay, which deeply indents the eastern bank. Near Peekskill is the old Van Cortlandt House, the residence of Washington for a short time during the Revolution. East of the village was the home of the great pulpit orator Henry Ward Beecher, and Peekskill is also known far and wide as the birthplace and many storied shrine of that sunny-prismed genius, orator and wit, Chauncey M. Depew. Next we pass Sing Sing, on the east bank. The low white buildings near the river bank are the State's Prison. They are constructed of marble but are not considered palatial by the 1,700 prisoners who occupy the cells. Perhaps the most interesting place we reach after passing Sing Sing is the Sleepy Hollow Church, which was built by Frederick Filipse and his wife Katrina Van Cortlandt, in 1690. The material is partly stone and partly brick. It stands as an appropriate sentinel near the entrance to the burial yard where Irving sleeps. To one loving our early history and legends there is no spot more central or delightful than Tarrytown. Irving humorously says, "Tarrytown took its name from husbands tarrying too late at the village tavern."

This was the spot Irving loved most. Between Tarrytown and Irvington there are many imposing mansions. Most conspicuous of all is the Paulding House, built by a descendant of John Paulding. Jay Gould died possessed of the property The Tappan Zee River, at Tarrytown, is nearly 3 miles wide. It was here, on the old post road, that Andre was captured and Arnold's treachery exposed.

We now come to Yonkers, our last stop before reaching New York. The best part of residential Yonkers lies to the northward, beautifully among trees as seen from the Hudson. Almost opposite Yonkers, a ravine or sort of step ladder cleft, known as Alpine Gorge, reaches up the precipitous sides of the Palisades. Farther on we view the Palisades, or Great Chip Rock. The Palisades are among the wonders of the world. Only three other places equal them in importance, but each of the four is different from the others, and the Palisdades are unique. "The Giant's Causeway, on the north coast of Ireland, and the cliffs at Kswaddy, in India, are thought by many to have been the result of the same upheaval of nature as the Palisades; but the Hudson rocks seem to have preserved their entirety—to have come up in a body, as it were—while the Grant's Causeway owes its celebrity to the ruined state in which the forces of nature have left it. Under the base of these cliffs William Cullen Bryant, one Sabbath morning, sketched 'A Scene on the Banks of the Hudson."

"Cool shades and dews are round my way,
And silence of the early day
Mid the dark rocks that watch his bed
Glitters the mighty Hudson spread,
Unrippled, save by drops that fall
From shrubs that fringe his mountain wall;
And o'er the clear, still water swells.
The music of the Sabbath bells,

"All save this little nook of land,
Circled with trees, on which I stand;
All, save that line of hills which lie
Suspended in the mimic sky,
Seems a blue void, above, below,
Through which the white clouds come and go;
And from the green world's farthest steep
I gaze into the airy deep."

Then we pass Fort Lee, a beautiful and commanding site, on the west side, opposite Fort Washington. The picturesque landing, driveway and hotel mark the spot as one of the pleasantest resorts on the Jersey shore of the Hudson. Then to Washington Heights and to Manhattanville, where is located the burial yard of Trinity Church, New York, with monuments and head stones almost lost in foliage along its wooded hillsides. Here lies buried General John A. Dix, whose words rang across the land sixty days before the attack on Fort Sumter: "If any man attempts to pull down the American flag, shoot him on the spot." The John A. Dix Post of New York comes hither each Decoration Day, and garlands with imposing ceremonies his grave and the graves of their comrades. After this we pass Riverside Park and Drive. Near the northern end of the Drive, on its most commanding point, was buried, August 8, 1885, General Grant. A massive memorial monument is now being erected worthy of the great soldier, to mark the site for all time; and the last place before reaching the Metropolis, we pass Weehawken, with its sad story of the duel between Hamilton and Burr. We are are all, of course, familiar with the particulars of rivalry between these two men. A fine picture of Hamilton will be found in the New York Chamber of Commerce where there is also a paragraph from Talleyrand: "The three greatest men in my time, in my opinion, were Napoleon Bonaparte, Charles James Fox and Alexander Hamilton—and the greatest of the three was Hamilton."

We are now at the end of our day's journey, 22nd Street, New York. No single day's journey in any land or on any stream can present such variety, interest and beauty as the trip of one hundren and forty-four miles from Albany to New York City. We have only spoken of the more important sights. It would take a large book to contain mention of all. The Hudson is indeed a goodly volume, with its broad covers of green lying open on either side, and it might in truth be called a condensed history, for there is no other place in our country where poetry and romance are so strongly blended with the heroic and the historic; no river where the waves of different civilizations have left so many waifs upon the banks. It is classic ground, from the "wilderness to the sea," and will always be the poet's corner of our country—the home of Irving, Willis and Morris; of Fulton, Morse and Field; of Cole, Audubon and Church; and of scores besides, whose names are household words.

THE END.

Time Flies.

That is true to all of us. But to those who remember the big, long range of street car barns in Chicago out on Milwaukee Avenue, will learn with some interest that they are now being torn down. They were built soon after the first horse cars began to run in 1864. Lately, horses have been taken off of most of the old lines and only a small number of tracks now use horses. First, the grip cars came into use, and these are still popular. Then came the electric lines, which are at present the most numerous. Now, they have elevated, steam railroads and are all the time building more. This particular lot of old barns and stables were left empty several years ago.

A CLOUDBURST

Sweeps Down Upon Silver City, N. M.

White Water (N. M.) special: Couriers have arrived here from Silver City with the startling news that a cloudburst had swept down upon that place, carrying death and destruction in its path. The couriers said that they had none of the particulars of the disaster, except that the report was that twenty people had been crushed to death by the collapse of the Timmer House, the largest hotel in the place, and in other buildings that were ruined.

The Santa Fe officials declare that the advices are that no lives were lost, but that the hotel and several buildings were ruined. They had only meagre bulletins, and declare that all communication with the ill-fated town was cut off by the cloudburst. All the bridges on the Silver City division of the Santa Fe road have been washed out and large sections of the track have been washed from the roadbed. The greatest apprehension is felt here for the people of Silver City. It is feared many of them have perished. A relief party has started out from here.

Soldiers Moving.

Lander (Wyo.) special: What is going on at Ft. Washakie seems to be a military secret. Word, however, comes from there that the Indian Judges, two policemen, who were sent to Jackson's Hole 10 or 12 days ago, has returned. They report that they were detained as captives by the Bannocks for several days, but at last made their escape. Nothing has transpired to indicate what the report is, except that a movement of an armed body of troops from the fort is apparent, as wagons are being loaded with supplies and everything is active. Preparations are going forward for some kind of a movement, but with only 42 men at the post, it will not be a formidable army.

Reckless Driving Results Fatally.

Williamstown (Mass.) special: Four men were killed at the Dug-a-Way, a grade crossing on the Fitchburg railroad, two miles west of here. They, with two other men, were returning from a drive to Pownal. The highway, because of a stream, makes two crossings of the railroad track within 1,000 feet of each other. The party made the first one safely, but the second was hidden by trees. An express locomotive struck their wagon, demolishing it, killing the four men instantly and also one of the horses. One of the survivors says that all had been drinking and were reckless when warned not to drive upon the track.

All Mines Closed.

Ishpeming (Mich.) special: The strike of the iron miners of Ishpeming and Negaunee is gaining strength. All mines are now completely tied up. The other day a monster demonstration was held, with fully 4,000 men in line, and five brass bands. Sympathy is with the men. It is proposed that the miners' wives and children join in a parade, when eight to ten thousand will be in line.

A Battle in Cuba.

Havana special: A dispatch from Governor Luque of the province of Santa Clara, reports that Lieutenant Teruel, at the head of two combined columns of troops, has engaged in battle and disbursed the insurgent's band under the leadership of Zayas, captured a quantity of arms, provisions, etc. It is believed that a number of rebels were killed.

Trolley Car Held Up in Daylight.

At the point of a pistol a single highwayman stopped an electric car on South Main street, Wichita, Kan. Fully fifty people saw the robbery. Fred. Miller of Kansas City, the only passenger, was compelled at the point of a pistol to give up all his money, $70, and the conductor was relieved of his gold watch and some small change. The robber ran through an alley and escaped.

Five People Drowned.

William Lundstedt, of 87 Cossey street, Brooklyn, with Fred and Frank Sunbeim, Mrs. Fred Sunbeim and two others, went out for a sail. They were caught in the storm, their boat capsized and all except Lundstedt were drowned. The bodies were recovered by the tug John Temple, of New York.

Fell in a Tub.

The two small children of Elijah Clark, a prosperous farmer, near Mt. Olivet, Ky., were drowned by falling into a tub of water. A neighbor noticed the children's feet stricking out of the tub, and on investigation found that the little ones had fallen in head first, probably while playing, and suffocated.

Drivers Collide.

Jones, of Wauseon, and Picket, of Toledo, two well-known drivers, while speeding horses at Bryan, Ohio, ran into each other. Jones received serious injuries internally and Picket sustained a broken arms.

Killed by the Cars.

Grover Thompson, a boy 11 years old, was run over and killed by a train on the T. and O. C. Railroad, at Columbus, Ohio. He was attempting to steal a ride when the accident occurred.

Whirled to Death.

Carl Kloss, an employe in the Morgan Engineering Works, at Alliance, Ohio, was whirled to death, his clothes catching on a revolving shaft which he was oiling.

A Purse for Kate Chase.

New York special: The wealthy friends of Mrs. Kate Chase Sprague have come to her rescue and have raised a sum sufficient to maintain her in comfort for the rest of her life. It is understood that the amount subscribed is $50,000, to which Senator Brice, John Wanamaker, and C. S. Sorg contributed $5,000 apiece. The other contributors are prominent republicans in this city, Washington, Cleveland, Cincinnati, and Providence, with the exception of William C. Whitney, whose contribution is said to be the largest of all.

A Landlord Badly Hurt.

C. W. Mull, proprietor of the Indiana house, in Star City, Ind., was dangerously hurt by falling from the haymow in his barn. In his descent, he struck the tongue of a wagon and sustained several fractured ribs and internal injuries. He is widely known to the traveling public, being landlord of the only hotel in the town.

Six Hundred Killed.

A special cable from Sofia says: A serious fight has taken place on the Turko-Macedonian frontier between a force of insurgents, stated to have numbered 5,000, and a body of Turkish troops. The latter were defeated, with a loss of over 600 men killed.

DULLNESS.

The Midsummer Brings the Usual Slowness in Business and Manufacturing Circles.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade says: The week's news is not entirely encouraging, but is all the more natural because there are signs of midsummer dullness. Wheat prospects are not quite so good as last week, still there are lower prices as corn and cotton have been lowered. The exports of gold and less favorable treasury returns for July are not unexpected and mean nothing as to coming business. There is a perceptible decrease in the demand for most manufactured products and the actual distribution to consumers natually lessens in midsummer. Much recent buying was to anticipate the rise in prices and such purchases fall off when prices have risen. There are still numerous advances in wages and strikes grow more numerous and important, in part because business was unusually large in the first half of July, but the tone meets reasonable expectations. A heavy bank failure at Montreal does not affect finances here, and is passing there with less disturbance than feared.

The failures for the week have been 256 in the United States against 236 last year, and thirty-nine in Canada against forty-four last year.

THE STORM.

Great Damage Done in the Northwest.

St. Paul (Minn.) special: The storm which struck this section at 1 o'clock Saturday morning was the severest in several years, the fall of rain in St. Paul and Minneapolis being over two inches. The destruction was greatest along the river between St. Paul and LaCrosse, the washouts on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul being so serious that trains could not run on that road. Several of the afternoon trains, including the fast mail, were brought in many hours late over the Burlington's tracks. Lightning struck the Hotel Lafayette at Minnetonka Beach, but did no special damage.

Joseph Polz, who resides in Blooming Prairie Township, Steele County, was struck by lightning and instantly killed.

A cyclone struck and wrecked William Hollenback's house on White River, S. D. It would have killed or seriously injured himself and family had they not taken refuge in a cyclone cave. A large log lying on the floor of the house with a lantern was not even moved. In some localities much hail fell doing some damage to crops.

Reports from Western Wisconsin points indicate that grain which was just ripening, was badly lodged.

THREE KILLED.

Terrible Wreck Near Monument, Colo.

A most appalling accident occurred on the Santa Fe road near Monument, Colo. Local freight train No. 46, consisting of twenty cars heavily laden with lumber and stone, plunged through the bridge a quarter of a mile west of that place, burying beneath the debris the train crew, a number of tramps and several bridge carpenters who were at work repairing the bridge. Wrecking crews were quickly dispatched from Denver and Pueblo and a special train was sent out from Colorado Springs with physicians, and these with the citizens of Monument, worked heroically rescuing the dead and injured. Fully 150 feet of the trestle went down with the train and the scene underneath the bridge is described as most shocking—freight cars, bridge timbers, and railroad iron being horribly wrecked by the plunge of fifty feet to the rocks below.

Three persons were killed, two fatally and a score or more seriously injured.

A TOWN WIPED OUT.

Holton, Mich., Swept by Fire and Little of It Left to Tell the Story.

The town of Holton, Mich., was licked up by fierce flames which started in an old and unoccupied barn owned by J. P. Utter. It is thought a match or lighted cigar stuh ignighted the building which was dry as tinder, and fanned by a stiff wind, was not long in going down before the flames. The flames spread with astonishing rapidity, next attacking the barn, kotel Kingstadt's saloon, Thompson's blacksmith shop and house, Dr. Black's office, and S. P. Murphy's general store. The only business buildings left are the grist mill, G. A. R. Hall, Henderson's store, two drug stores, and a meat market.

Holton is a village, settled in 1870, and has 250 inhabitants. It is in Holton township, northeast corner of Muskegon County. The loss will amount to $10,000 or $15,000, with very little insurance, as the rate was very high, 4 per cent. The hotel was owned by the Muskegon Brewing company and valued at $2,000.

Tortured by Masked Robbers.

The other night four men went to the house of John Miblin, living a few miles from Ashland, Ohio, and, on being refused admittance, battered down the door with a fence rail. The men then bound and gagged Miblin and his wife, and, on failing to find the amount of money they believed to be in the house, they tortured the couple, holding burning matches to their feet and hands. The robbers secured $13, all the money in the house. Miblin and his wife, who are both very old and almost blind, did not succeed in releasing themselves until 9 o'clock next morning. There is no clew to the identity of the robbers.

Cost of the Census.

It has cost twelve million dollars to enumerate the people of the United States. It was five years last June since the eleventh census was taken, and yet Correl D. Wright, who is in charge of the census at present, does not expect to have this work completed before the end of the year, when the twenty-fifth volume will be finished. There are very many people who seriously question whether a census that costs that much money really pays. The tenth census cost $5,785,254. This last census is supposed to have covered the ground better, and to have made valuable additions to the information in regard to the country.

Absolute Slavery.

Massillon (Ohio) special: There having been much discussion here as to the accuracy of the report sent out from Spring Valley, Ill., to the effect that several hundred miners in that district had volunteered to enter into slavery if guaranteed the necessaries of life by the mine owners, an inquiry was sent to Mayor Delmagro of Spring Valley, and the following reply has been received: "I am unable to say whether our miners would accept such an offer as was described in the telegram. I firmly believe, however, that over one-half of them would be willing to sign such an iron-clad contract."

Ex-Governor Foraker Has a Narrow Escape.

A special dispatch from Springfield, Ohio, says: Ex-Governor J. B. Foraker had a narrow escape from death the other night. He was on a Boston sleeper on the Big Four train which reaches this city at 8:40 p. m. Between Dayton and Enon a large stone was thrown through the window and barely missed his head. Glass from the broken window cut his face badly, but he was not seriously injured. The stone weighed at least two pounds. It is supposed that it was thrown by a tramp.

Remarkable Escape.

Iron Mountain (Mich.) special: The imprisoned miners at the Pewabic mine have been released and not one of them was injured. The escape is considered the most remarkable one in the history of mining. The men suffered no great inconvenience. They heard the first crash of the breaking timbers and made their escape to a dry drift of the first level before the accident occurred.

Seamen Killed at Detroit.

In trying to avoid a collision in the Saint Clair Lake Ship Canal at Detroit, the tug Torrent, bound up, became entangled in the tow-line of the schooner Yukon, bound down in tow of a steamer. The tow-line swept the deck of the tug, stripping it of everything movable. Captain Ralph Hackett and the wheelman were instantly killed and a watchman was knocked overboard and nearly drowned. The Yukon was in tow of the Sitka. Following are dead: Captain Ralph H. Hackett of Detroit; Dave Kennary, watchman, 28, of Port Huron; John Callanach, wheelman, of Marine City. Kennary leaves a widow and two children.

Shocking and Fatal Mistake.

Brazil, Ind., was greatly wrought up over a fatal shooting affair which occured the other night. Hon. Geo. A. Knight, one of the best known lawyers in the State, while sitting in his home, thought he heard a noise in one of the upstairs rooms. A search was made and a gate was heard to shut on the outside. Mr. Knight saw a man disappearing in the darkness on the sidewalk. He shot at him and was horrified to find that he had fatally wounded his best friend, John Wehrle, County Clerk. Wehrle is still alive, but the bullet pierced his abdomen and the physicians have little hope of his recovery.

Fire Fighters Killed.

A fire in the main part of the shipping quarter of Cincinnati resulted in the instant death of two firemen and the probable fatal wounding of a half-dozen others. The fatalities were caused by the falling of the walls of the burning building. The walls buried almost a score of firemen. As soon as possible every man rushed to the spot, the fire was forgotten, and superhuman efforts were made to remove the debris. It was over an hour before all of the firemen were extricated from the mass of bricks. Some of the escapes were miraculous.

Fatal Accident.

New London (Conn.) special: The worst accident that has yet happened to the torpedo boat Ericson, occurred the other day. She was out on the sound for a run when a steam pipe burst, shockingly scalding five men. The steamer Cactus happened to come near and brought the men to this port, and they were taken to the hospital. Two of the men may be fatally burned.

A Tin Horn Mystery.

Muncie (Ind.) special: Mrs. Rebecca Rogers of Niles, Mich., fromerly resided here and at Anderson. In these towns reports of her death eight years ago were received. Since than her spirit has been prominent at many spiritualistic seances. The lady arrived here the other day in the best of health.

Two Plagues.

Dr. Burgess, United States medical inspector at Havana, in a report to the Marine hospital service, states that yellow fever is increasing at an alarming state among the civillian population of Havana.

The Marine hospital service is also informed that cholera is epidemic at Hiogo, Japan.

Fireman Killed.

While going to a fire hose cart No. 18 upset at Nineteenth and Vine street, Philadelphia. Of the occupants of the cart, J. S. Rider was killed, and Passmore Collins, William Murphy, John McGinu, and Daniel O'Connell were severely injured.

Tot Killed While at Play.

Afton Ackerman, the 2-year-old son of W. K. Ackerman, a prominent business man of Mansfield, Ohio, was playing with a little express toy wagon and lost his balance and fell forward, cutting his face and body. Death resulted in half an hour.

Deadly Collision.

A Big Four freight train ran into the rear of a Chicago, Peoria and St. Louis passenger train at Grove sideing, a few miles below Peoria, Ill., badly wrecking the engine and killing one and injuring three people.

Over-Boomed.

A lady who went from Washington to Alaska last winter and who has been in the heart of the Yukon country, writes that that region has been over-boomed and that many prospectors will leave there this fall.

A Town Gutted.

The business portion of the town of Alta Vista, Iowa, in Chickasaw County, was nearly wiped out by fire. The blaze is supposed to have been started by incendiaries. Loss $75,000; insurance small.

Spain will Pay It.

Washington special: Senor De Lome, the Spanish Minister, called upon Secretary Olney to give him official notice of the decision of the Spanish Government to pay the Mora claim—$1,500,000.

Stambuloff Dead.

Sofia special: Ex-Premier Stambuloff, who was assassinated in the street on Monday, died at 3:30 o'clock Friday morning of the terrible wounds he received at the hands of his assailants.

Fatal Cave In.

Two men were killed, one fatally injured and two others frightfully maimed by the cave-in of 600 tons of earth in a sewer excavation at Harrison, N. J.

ARMIES OF THE LORD.

BRIGADE OF BAPTISTS MASSED AT BALTIMORE.

Fifteen Thousand Young Crusaders Take Possession of the Monumental City—Fifth International Convention—Pan-American Religious Congress.

Baptists in Baltimore.

On the heels of the great gathering of Christian Endeavorers at Boston, and almost before their peans of praise had ceased to echo through the land, came the assembling in Baltimore of the hosts of the Baptist Young People's Union of America. It was the fifth international convention of the organization, and the 15,000 delegates, who brought with them nearly as many of their kindred, came from every section of every State in the Union, as well as from Canada and from Mexico. Owing to the fact that Baltimore has no hall large enough to accommodate so great a gathering, a mammoth tent was erected at the Madison street entrance to Druid Hill Park, which is said to have been the largest stretch of canvass ever put up in the world. It afforded space for 12,000 chairs, covered a tract of land 325 by 195 feet, and was supported by poles fifty feet in height.

OFFICERS OF THE BAPTIST UNION.

John H. Chapman.
Rev. R. F. Y. Pierce. Rev. O. P. Gifford.
Miss Ella F. Haigh.
Rev. J. B. Cranfill. J. O. Staples.
Rev. F. L. Wilkins, D. D.

Under the shelter of this great canvas 10,000 delegates assembled on the opening morning at 10 o'clock, when the convention was called to order by President Chapman, of Chicago. The devotional exercises, which were characterized by great enthusiasm and fervor, were led by Rev. Dr. C. A. Hoobs, of Delavan, Wis. Praise and prayer occupied nearly half an hour, and welcoming addresses were then in order. Eugene Levering, of the Eutaw Place Church, spoke for the churches of Baltimore; Rev. H. W. Wharton, of the Brantly Memorial Church, spoke for the Young People's Society of Baltimore; and response on behalf of the board of managers of the international union and the delegates was made by Rev. Dr. A. C. Dixon, of Brooklyn. The latter laid special stress upon the fact that this was the first time that Mexico had sent delegates to the convention, and gave an especial greeting to those from the provinces of Quebec, Ontario and Manitoba.

A rousing reception was given to the indefatigable general secretary, Dr. Frank L. Williams, when he took the platform for the purpose of reading the general report of the general managers, and after this document had been disposed of without discussion two brief addresses were delivered, one upon culture for service, by Rev. Dr. Wallace, of Toronto, and the other upon the Junior Society as the hope of the movement, by Rev. Dr. R. D. Grant, of Portland, Oregon.

The afternoon session was prefaced by a praise service led by Rev. L. B. Thomas, of Colorado Springs, and the convention resolved itself into an open parliament at which systematic and proportionate giving was discussed by a number of speakers.

A feature of the great gathering was the attendance of nearly 600 young Baptist wheelmen from New York and Philadelphia, who rode from those cities to Baltimore on their wheels. Nearly 1,500 more wheelmen came from Virginia, West Virginia, and points in Maryland.

PLAN OF THE BALTIMORE CONVENTION TENT.

LIBERALS WIPED OUT.

Sustained Crushing Defeats in Recent British Elections.

At the close of the polls throughout Great Britain Wednesday the returns showed that 408 members, out of a total of 650, had been elected. The results so far are decisive, and all that shall occur hereafter will merely enlarge the proportions of the liberal defeat. Of the members already chosen 296 are tories and "unionists." Only 112 members of all shades of the opposition have been elected. Of this number but 70 are regular liberals of the Gladstone school. This is not a mere revolution. The liberal party is wiped out. It is not possible that out of the 240 or 250 members yet to be elected that party will secure enough to make a formidable opposition to any measure which the tory government may propose.

It is probable that the Irish party of all factions will have at least half as many members as the liberal party, counting those distinctly so classed. This is all that is left of the splendid, aggressive, jubilating, disciplined and formidable host of voters that followed the grand old man time and again to victory. It disappeared when he abandoned its leadership. So far as this country is concerned, none of its interests will be affected by the triumph or defeat of either party in Great Britain. Irish-American sympathizers with the cause of home rule will regret its probable permanent defeat. But there is no ground to suppose that any different future would have been before Ireland had the liberal party won. Home rule had been virtually buried as a party issue. The few questions at issue between the United States and Great Britain will not cause serious controversy and will be peacefully settled. There is no threatening question to cause anxiety—nothing that will not be adjusted by quiet diplomacy.

PAN-AMERICAN CONGRESS.

Notable Religious Gathering in Toronto—Objects of the Meeting.

Religion and education, the supreme forces of moral and intellectual progress, were the themes discussed before the Pan-American Congress of Religion and Education, which assembled at Toronto. This congress may be considered as the legitimate fruitage of the great parliament of religions of 1893, which set in motion and gave powerful impetus to those forces which make for unity among the people of the earth. The object of the Pan-American congress is to bring all who are interested in the spread of the true gospel into a closer association, one with another, and into sympathetic relationship in all the great educational, philanthropic and reform movements of modern Christianity.

The inaugural session of the congress opened at the Horticultural Pavilion in the presence of several thousand citizens and delegates. On the platform, which was handsomely decorated, sat Lieut. Gov. Kirkpatrick, the Rev. S. G. Smith of St. Paul, President of the congress; Mayor Kennedy, and many other distinguished persons. The chair was occupied by W. B. McMurrich, Q. C., of the Joint Local Committee. Appropriate addresses of welcome were delivered by the Lieutenant Governor, Mayor Kennedy, and the Rev. Dr. Thomas, after which the President of the congress and several other noted delegates made suitable replies.

The Rev. Dr. Samuel G. Smith, President of the congress, returning thanks for the generous welcome tendered them, referred in graceful terms to the way in which the British and American flags were intertwined in the decorations, and amid applause expressed his hope that not until the crack of doom would the two be rent asunder. The Rev. Father Ryan of Toronto delivered a short and able speech. Archbishop Walsh had commissioned him to express his welcome and tender the hospitality of St. Michaels' palace to the delegates.

Mrs. Charles Henrotin, of Chicago, President of the Federation of Women's Clubs of America, then addressed the meeting. Rabbi Elzas spoke on behalf of the Jewish delegates. The Rev. Dr. H. W. Bennett, Akron, Ohio, spoke briefly. Mrs. Lydia von Finkelstein-Mountford, a native of Jerusalem, closed the speaking. At the evening session C. C. Bonney was the first speaker, his topic being "The New Movement for the Unity and Peace of the World."

DIE BEFORE TAKING OFFICE.

Five Members of the Fifty-fourth Congress Claimed by the Reaper.

The Fifty-fourth Congress is but a few days more than four months old, and only seven months have elapsed since the election of its members, and yet there have been seven casualties in the ranks of the House of Representatives chosen last November, five by death and two by resignation. Those who have died include, besides Representative Frederick Remann, whose funeral occurred Wednesday in the Eighth Illinois District, the following:

Myron B. Wright (Rep.) of the Fifteenth Pennsylvania District, Nov. 13, 1894; James H. Codding elected to fill the vacancy.

Philip S. Post (Rep.) of the Tenth Illinois District, Jan. 6, 1895; place will be filled by George W. Prince.

Andrew J. Campbell (Rep.) of the Tenth New York District, Dec. 6, 1894.

William Cogswell (Rep.), Sixth Massachusetts, May 22.

Mr. Campbell was elected in Gen. Dan Sickles' old district in New York, and his successor is likely to be a Democrat. In the other two cases there is no change expected in the political bias of the new representatives.

WILL KEEP OUT YELLOW FEVER.

Thorough Work to Be Done by the National Government.

Under the direction and supervision of Surgeon General Wyman, of the Marine Hospital service, extensive preparations are being made to protect this country against an invasion of yellow fever or other contagious disease this year. The four revenue cutters, Winona, Morrill, Forward, and McLane, have been ordered to duty off the Florida coast. Each cutter will be supplied with a steam launch, and these launches will be used for penetrating the lagoons and small streams which exist in numbers along the coast of Florida. Usually about Aug. 1 the fishing smacks of Cuba come over to our coast in considerable numbers, under the pretense of fishing in the waters of Florida, but their real object is to smuggle in intoxicating liquors from Mexico and tobacco from Cuba. The men who bring over these smacks are familiar with the coast and know all the hiding places afforded by lagoons, bays and rivers. The purpose of Surgeon General Wyman is to so equip the United States cutters that they may hunt down these smacks and drive them away, no matter how far they may seek the interior. At the request of the Florida State Board of Health the national government will take entire charge of the Gulf and Atlantic coasts of that State. Whenever vessels from infected points are discovered they will be taken, by force, if necessary, to the nearest quarantine station and thoroughly cleansed and fumigated.

SINK IN GENOA GULF.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-EIGHT ARE DROWNED.

Fatal Collison of Steamers—Passengers Caught Asleep—Catastrophe Due to a Heavy Fog—Killed at a Crossing—Plot to Overthrow Hawaii.

Go Down to Death.

Death came swiftly Sunday morning to 148 passengers and crew of the steamer Maria P., from Naples to La Plata, and about to touch at Genoa. The Maria P. was sunk by collision with the steamer Ortigia, out-bound. The scene of this, the most terrible disaster known to the waters of the Gulf of Genoa, was just off the light-house of the Molo Nuovo, at the entrance to the harbor of Genoa. A dense fog had prevailed over the harbor all night. Both vessels were running at full speed, and the sinking of the Maria P. was but the incident of a moment. Boats from the Ortigia were immediately put out, but only succeeded in rescuing forty-two of the people of the unfortunate boat. When there was no longer use for search the Ortigia steamed slowly back to the city for repairs and to deliver the survivors to the authorities. It was full noon when Genoa learned of the catastrophe, which crowded the quays with people and filled the churches with kneeling people offering prayers for the dead. The list of the drowned has not been secured.

The Maria P. was a coasting vessel used in the South American trade. La Plata, on the Magdalena River in the United States of Colombia, was the customary end of her journey. She was owned in Naples and her captain's name was Ferrara. The steamer always touched at Genoa, for that port is the chief outlet via the Mediterraneau for the manufacturers of Northern Italy and Switzerland. The harbor of Genoa is considered one of the finest on the continent and is under full government supervision.

It was 1:30 when the Molo Nuovo was rounded under high speed. The pilot, straining his eyes to pierce the darkness ahead, caught a faint glimpse of dim lights. This was the first warning of the proximity of the Ortigia to the Maria P. There was a wild scream from the pilot, which those passengers awake and the lookout heard. The engineers were signaled to reverse, but it was too late. The bow of the Ortigia crashed into the starboard side of the Maria P., penetrating for nearly forty feet and tearing up the decks as if they were paper. Almost instantly after the collision the Ortigia withdrew, and the water rushed in, sinking the Maria P. in three minutes.

No one can tell, not even the survivors, what happened on the decks and in the cabins of the Maria P. after the frightful shock. She sank so quickly that those asleep never knew how death came to them, while those awake, crew and passengers, found themselves struggling for life in the waters of the gulf.

Although the bow of the Ortigia was smashed for a distance of twelve feet along the water line, her officers held her at the scene of the disaster for six hours, while her boats searched the waters, rescuing fourteen of the crew and twenty-eight of the passengers.

PLOT TO OVERTHROW HAWAII.

United States Authorities Receive Startling Information.

The customs authorities of the Puget Sound district have been instructed by the government to keep a sharp lookout for filibustering parties fitting out for the Hawaiian Islands. A few days ago it was reported vessels were openly loading and freighting to the islands munitions of war. Orders have now been issued to closely watch and search all vessels bound to the South Sea for arms. It is believed a large quantity of arms and ammunition have been smuggled into Hawaii from Puget Sound. It is positively known that secret agents of the royalists dispatched one small consignment to the islands last October. One source of information says an uprising is planned to commence Sept. 1, and that 4,200 men will be in readiness to bear arms against the government. The insurgents, after being repeatedly drilled in Southern California, expect to get their stores and assistance from Puget Sound.

FOUR KILLED AT A CROSSING.

Struck by a Fitchburg Express Near Williamstown, Mass.

Four men were instantly killed while crossing the Fitchburg Railroad track about two miles from Williamstown, Mass. A party of six men were riding in a two-seated covered carriage. They were returning to North Adams from Bennington and were struck by a west-bound express. Two of the men, Clorence Prindle and Edward White, both of Williamstown, escaped by jumping. As the men approached the crossing a freight train was passing eastward. They waited until the caboose of the freight train had gone by and then started to proceed, apparently not seeing the west-bound train, which was advancing across the tracks when the engine struck it.

TO BETTER THE MAIL SERVICE.

Directory of All the United States Schools Being Compiled.

In the foreign mail division of the dead letter office there is now being compiled a directory of all the schools, big and little, in the United States. The preparation of this directory is not as remarkable as the need for it. Nearly every day from 10,000 to 15,000 foreign letters reach this division addressed simply to schools or colleges in America with no town, county or State named in the address. The high state of perfection to which "blind reading" has attained in the dead letter office is evident when it is known that 75 per cent. of these letters are speedily dispatched to their destination. The others go back unopened to the general postoffices of the country whose stamp they bear.

CHAPTER XXIII.—(Continued.)

"That is my wife's portrait," said Lord Bayneham.

"The resemblance is accidental," said Mr. Fulton, "but it is certainly very strong; yet the person of whom I speak was not a lady."

The false, mean words did not blister his false, smiling lips. In all that constitutes a perfect lady, his dead wife, Magdalen Hurst, was certainly one.

"Shall we proceed to business?" asked Lord Bayneham, hastily. He was beginning to feel somewhat annoyed at this handsome stranger, who stood so admiringly before his wife's portrait; besides, he did not like to hear that there had ever been another face like hers—it was peerless in his eyes.

They entered warmly into their arrangements, and Lord Bayneham's passing annoyance soon wore off.

There was no resisting the handsome face and gay, easy temper. Paul Fulton knew how to charm, and he soon won the liking of the noble, unsuspicious earl. He accepted with skillfully concealed delight the invitation to Bayneham Castle; it was the very thing that, in his heart, he had longed for, but never hoped to gain.

"I am sorry that the ladies are not at home," said Lord Bayneham, "but you will see them at Bayneham. We think of going to-morrow or the day afterward. Would it be quite convenient for you to follow us in—say a week from now? Mr. Carlyon comes then."

Mr. Fulton assumed an air of profound thought, which in a few minutes gave way to a bright smile.

"It would suit me admirably," he said, "as he had business in Wales afterward." He remained with Lord Bayneham for lunch, and there was no more said about business, but he proved himself to be one of the most amusing men the young lord ever remembered to have met. His anecdotes were inexhaustible, and his rich fund of wit and humor kept Lord Bayneham constantly amused and delighted.

"You have seen plenty of the world, Mr. Fulton," he remarked.

"Yes," said his visitor; "I have seen what is called life in most of its phases, and some of them strange ones."

They parted mutually pleased, and when Lady Bayneham and Hilda returned they found the earl in high spirits over his late guest.

"You must know him, mother," he said; "you are sure to like him, and I am glad he is going to Bayneham. No fear of feeling dull in his company. I never saw any one with such a flow of spirits."

"And what is the name?" asked the countess, rather surprised at her son's enthusiasm. "Fulton!" she continued; "why, Hilda, that must be the gentleman Lady Grahame was speaking of. He has purchased the Grenholme property."

"The same," replied Lord Bayneham; "and if ever he comes to the Hall we shall have a pleasant neighbor."

"Rumor says he is Lady Grahame's shadow," said Barbara Earle; "it is supposed to be a complete and perfect love story."

"And a capital match, too," said Lord Bayneham; "Lady Grahame is a pleasant, sensible woman."

Barbara smiled, thinking, perhaps, that her cousin was easily satisfied.

"He is very wealthy, I hear," continued Lady Bayneham; "but I never heard of any Fultons. He may be a very nice man; but, my dear Claude, who is he?"

"I know nothing of his pedigree," said Lord Bayneham, with a smile at his mother's earnest manner. "He is evidently a gentleman, and has associated with gentlemen. He has made his own fortune, I believe."

"Indeed!" said the countess, her interest in him ceasing at once.

He might be handsome, polished, and wealthy, Lady Grahame's lover and her son's friend, but he had no connections; she would be bland and amiable toward him, but real interest in him she could feel none.

Mr. Fulton's heart beat high with hope as he left Lord Bayneham's mansion in Grosvenor Square. He felt sure that he had most favorably impressed the young earl, and was half intoxicated with his own success. No suspicion, or even thought, crossed his mind with regard to the picture. Once before, in a picture shop, he had seen a very beautiful engraving, and the face of the girl in it had reminded him of Magdalen, and as he went along the crowded sunlit streets he thought of her.

"It is almost a pity," he said to himself, "that she was a peasant; among these grand ladies I see no face so beautiful, no figure so graceful as hers. I will make this a day of successes," he thought; "I will see Lady Grahame and ask her at once if she will be my wife."

He went direct to the widow's house, and in answer to his inquiries was told that Lady Grahame was at home and alone. For once the indefatigable companion was off guard, and Lady Grahame was taken at a disadvantage.

"I have been spending a very pleasant morning," said Mr. Fulton, "with your friend, Lord Bayneham. I find him all you describe; a most interesting companion."

This preamble gave the lady time to recover herself.

"I have something very serious to say to you this morning, Lady Grahame," continued Mr. Fulton; "I have been summoning courage for the task."

"Is it something very difficult or painful, then?" she asked, with a smile.

"It is at once the most pleasing, yet the most difficult task of my life," he replied; "my own unworthiness renders it difficult. Lady Grahame, you can understand that the deepest feeling is least expressed by rhapsody. In straightforward, honest words, may I ask you the question upon which the happiness of my whole life depends—will you be my wife?"

A genuine blush covered the comely face; she had long known the question was coming, but just at that moment was not prepared to receive it.

"That is an important question," she said, "and requires consideration."

"You do not at once dismiss it as an impossibility," said Paul Fulton; "I shall therefore venture to hope. If you will intrust me with the happiness of your life you shall never repent the trust. Tell me, may I venture to hope that at some future time I may receive a more favorable answer?"

"It is not impossible," replied the fair widow, coquettishly.

It was not very impassioned wooing. Just a remembrance crossed his mind of the time when he made love under the trees of Brynmar woods; of the lovely young face that had changed with his every word; of the soft, sweet lips, the half whispered, loving words.

This wooing in a Mayfair drawing room was a very different matter. He threw as much rapture as possible into his reply to Lady Grahame's last words, then adroitly branched off into other subjects.

"Mr. Fulton," said Lady Grahame, "of course you know I am a widow. Have you ever been married?"

"No," he replied boldly; "I have asked this morning what I never asked before."

"I am glad," she replied. "I should not like to think you were a widower; there is something very prosaic in the idea."

CHAPTER XXIV.

It was the beginning of the glowing, beautiful month of August when Lord Bayneham returned with his fair young wife to the castle. The country around was in the prime of its summer beauty; the blue summer sky, the dense green foliage, the spreading trees and blooming flowers were all in full perfection.

The young earl and his wife were alone, but their guests were expected in the course of a few days. Hilda had wished it to be so; for she wanted to accustom herself to the place where she had lately suffered so keenly. She wanted time to visit the cottage where her mother died, and the lonely grave where she slept the last long sleep that knows no waking. She knew the sight of these places would bring back her sorrow, and she wanted time to suffer alone and unheeded.

Lady Hilda could not account for the presentiment of coming dread that seized her—a strange oppression that she could not express or describe. A strange dream, too, haunted her; it was that in the midst of the glowing summer she lay dead at Bayneham.

The expected guests arrived one by one. The countess and her niece came first; then Bertie Carlyon. Mr. Fulton was not expected until evening, and there was some little discussion respecting him at lunch.

"I begin to wish," said Lord Bayneham, "that we had invited Lady Grahame; for from all quarters I hear of her conquest."

"Better not," said Barbara dryly; "for if you wish to engross Mr. Fulton in politics, love would interfere sadly with your arrangements."

Bertie made a very expressive bow, understanding perfectly the quiet import of Miss Earle's little speech.

"You are right, Barbara," said her aunt. "What age is this friend of yours, Claude?" she continued; "you have never told me if he is young or old."

"I should be puzzled," said Lord Bayneham. "I declare that I have no idea as to his age; he is either an old young man or a young old one, I do not know which."

"He is somewhere between forty and fifty, I should imagine," said Bertie. "He is very handsome, and has a careless manner that conceals all trace of age."

"He will be here at seven," said Lord Bayneham; "and dinner must be delayed half an hour, I suppose."

When seven o'clock came, Lord Bayneham was ready to greet his expected guest. Lady Hilda had been detained by some visitors, who seemed resolved to wear out her sweet, gentle patience, but did not succeed. She did not take much interest in the coming visitor; indeed, he never once entered her mind.

When dressed for dinner, Lady Hilda went down as usual into the drawing room, where, as a rule, the family assembled. The sun, shining still on the blooming flowers and rippling fountains, tempted her, and she went out from the long, open French window, and walked down the path where roses and lilies seemed to smile a welcome. On that day she wore a dress that enhanced her singular beauty; it was of rich white crepe, artistically made. The golden hair that waved upon her white, shapely shoulders was bound by a simple, pretty wreath of jessamine, and she looked like a goddess of flowers as she stood amongst them. Barbara Earle joined her there.

When Mr. Fulton entered the drawing room his host led him up to Lady Bayneham, who received him with the requisite mixture of hauteur and condescension that she knew so well how to assume. She was somewhat surprised; she had not expected to see a handsome, even fascinating man, with a polished ease and grace of manner that did not shame her own. With a few well-chosen words she bade him welcome to Bayneham.

"I will look for Lady Hilda and Miss Earle," said Lord Bayneham; "they are amongst the flowers, I expect."

He passed out of the French window, and Mr. Fulton, following him, stood there, admiring the magnificent gardens with their superb flowers. As his eyes roved carelessly from one rose plant to another, they fell upon some object that made his heart stand still, while his limbs shook in abject terror. Who was that smiling amidst the roses? Could it be Magdalen Hurst, come back in her youth and beauty, risen again to shame and expose him? His eyes glared upon the lovely face, and the graceful, white-robed figure, the same sweet face, the same clear, pure eyes and golden crown of hair, and the same sweet smile—the one she used to welcome him with—it must be Magdalen. A deep groan burst from him, and the strong man half staggered, almost fainting beneath the shock. He could not take his eyes from that face and figure. But see! It could be no apparition, for another figure—that of a tall, stately lady, with a noble face—was standing near; and then he saw Lord Bayneham join them with a smile upon his lips.

There could be no apparition—it must be real. He trembled when the white-robed figure drew near; his face still quivered and his hands trembled when Lord Bayneham introduced that beautiful lady as his wife.

Paul Fulton was too agitated for thought. The sweet voice smote him like a sharp sword; he had last heard it cry out his name in utter despair. He murmured some few confused words in reply to Lady Hilda's graceful greeting, then turned almost abruptly away.

"What is the matter?" asked Lord Bayneham, looking at his visitor's white, agitated face in alarm.

"It is nothing," replied Paul Fulton; "strong perfumes always overpower me; and your flowers, my lord, are very fragrant."

With a desperate effort Paul Fulton rallied—after all, it could only be a resemblance that dazzled him. During dinner he talked to the hostess, yet at times the well-known music of that voice thrilled through him and bewildered him.

After dinner, and when the whole party were assembled in the drawing room, Lord Bayneham asked Hilda to sing, and she complied instantly with his wish.

The sun had set, and the gloaming was very fair and tranquil. In the soft subdued light of the room the fresh face and golden hair of the young Lady of Bayneham shone clear and bright. When her red lips were parted, a rich stream of passionate melody came from between them, charming all ears and warming all hearts, but filling one mind with unutterable wonder.

Paul Fulton wished to believe that he was dreaming. Who could that young girl be, singing with Magdalen's sweet voice? All at once—and to the day of his death Paul Fulton never forgot the shock—with the speed and force of electricity an idea came to him. Could it be Magdalen's child? Who else could bear her face, her smile?—who else could be so wonderfully like her? Could it be Magdalen's child and his?

Once more master of himself, when Lady Hilda's song was ended he went up to her and began an animated conversation on flowers, guessing by instinct what she would like to speak of best. He interested her by his novel description of the Italian flora; and as he conversed with her, his conviction grew momentarily deeper. He felt that he must be satisfied, he must know who this girl was, so like to his dead wife. He bent over her in speaking, and his startled glance fell upon the white-jeweled fingers. There, between costly hoops of diamond and pearl, he saw a plain, old-fashioned gold ring, and on it in quaint characters was engraved the word, "Fidelity." He had placed that ring on Magdalen Hurst's own hand soon after they were married, twenty-three years ago.

Paul Fulton was lost in amazement; he tried to remember what his heart-broken wife had said about their child. He had not cared to ask her many questions. It had been adopted, she said, by a lady. It remained for him to find out who the lady was. Conscience made him a coward; it would have been easy to have made inquiries of any of the guests, but he dared not do it.

Paul Fulton was fairly puzzled. He could neither sleep nor rest. He determined to ask questions, but to ask them cautiously.

When breakfast was ended on the following morning he sought Bertie, and after a long discussion of the coming election, he said in a carelessly assumed tone, "Bayneham is a beautiful place, and I am charmed with the grounds, and with the master, too. How frank and fearless Lord Bayneham is! I consider it quite a privilege to know him."

Bertie made some half-audible reply; he was wondering if it would be possible to persuade Barbara to let him drive her out that morning.

"Lady Hilda Bayneham is very lovely," continued Mr. Fulton. "Her face haunts one. By the way—I was away from England, I suppose, at the time of their marriage—who was she?"

His heart beat quickly as he asked the question, but he concealed all emotion under a careless smile.

"She was Lady Hutton's daughter," replied Bertie, "Lady Hutton—the Erskine heiress, you remember—that is, she was her adopted daughter, inheriting her fortune and bearing her name. She always passed as her child, but she was really only Lady Hutton's ward."

"Who were her parents, then?" asked Paul Fulton, his lips growing white as he spoke.

"I never heard," replied Bertie; "some relatives of Lady Hutton, I suppose. I must leave you now," added Bertie, hurriedly, for he caught a glimpse of a certain blue dress, and he had been lying in wait for its wearer ever since breakfast time.

(To be continued.)

OVER THE PRECIPICE.

The Indian Regarded It in a Most Matter-of-Fact Way.

Lucien Biart, a Frenchman, was traveling through a lonely part of Mexico with an Indian guide, says the Youth's Companion. At 4 o'clock in the afternoon, the sky being thickly clouded, it became so dark in the forest that it was difficult for them to pick their way. Then it began to rain, the steep slopes became slippery, and the Indian, unable to see the mountain summits, was obliged to admit that he did not know where he was. The two men came to the edge of a precipice. There was no telling how deep the abyss might be, as it was filled with fog.

"We are shut in," said the Indian, squatting upon the ground with the stoicism of an Aztec.

"But the rain is falling," said Biart, "and it is going to fall all night. Are we far from Songolica?"

"A full day's march."

"Isn't there any hut hereabout?"

"Who knows?"

"There seems to be an abyss in front of us."

By way of response the Indian picked up a stone and threw it over the ledge. Some seconds elapsed, and then the Frenchman heard a faint noise as of branches being struck far below.

"How are we going to get out of this?" asked Biart.

The Indian thought for a moment. Then he stood up and said: "Come on." Going under the trees, he began cutting a quantity of the slender, flexible vines which are so abundant in tropical forests. M. Biart followed suit, and when enough had been collected, the Indian tied them together, adjusted a log at the end, threw it over the edge of the precipice, and the next moment let himself down the rope hand over hand into the fog.

The Frenchman leaned over the brow of the cliff, but could see nothing. By and by the vine stems ceased to shake. The guide must have found a footing. Then they began shaking again, and after what seemed a long while his head emerged out of the mist.

"I know where we are," he said. "We shall sleep in a hut after all. Follow me."

He spoke in a matter-of-fact tone as if it had been a question of going down stairs. The Frenchman drew back.

"How? You are afraid?"

If the traveler could have seen the depth of the abyss over which he was asked to suspend himself, he would no doubt have hesitated—so he says in telling the story. As it was, he followed his leader, but had not gone far before he became thoroughly frightened and began making frantic efforts to climb back again. Then he grew dizzy and shutting his eyes, allowed himself to slip slowly downward.

"Hang on," said the Indian, "death is down there."

The advice was superfluous, the traveler says. Stones were loosened under his feet and the time they took in getting to the bottom was a sufficient inducement for him to hang to the rope. A standing-place was reached at last. Here the two men took breath and then with another vine rope let themselves down a second precipice—not so bad as the first—and after a long and arduous journey came to the hut of which the Indian had spoken.

AND now it is stilts! So at least say the French, who may be credited with the introduction of this novel sport. In Paris regular clubs have been organized and the sport is evidently enjoyed by all who have given it a trial. The latest event among the upperdom of a fashionable "stilting" club was the arrangement of a race on stilts. In this race there were not less than ninety-one entries. A bugle corps and an enormous crowd of spectators were present to see this novel procession start. A few of the more daring of the women have taken up the stilts. Should any enterprising American wish to start a stilting club here are a few practical hints on the use of stilts: The best stilts are made of light but tough wood, and ought to be long enough for the person using them to hold the top when standing on the foot rests. These latter should be nailed at the desired height from the ground and be of sufficient size and strength to give the foot a firm hold and to bear the weight of the body. When walking on them he must raise each stilt alternately with the hands, lifting the foot at the same time, and continuing the motion alternately with the respective legs and arms as in ordinary walking. Should he feel himself losing his balance the best plan is to leap to the ground and avoid as much as possible the risk of falling. After a few trials stilting will be found to be a very easy and enjoyable way of locomotion. Many feats may soon be attempted on stilts and they will as a rule be found to be easy of accomplishment. Barring the risk of falls it will be found that the higher the stilt walker is from the ground the easier as well as the more rapid will be his speed. There can be no doubt that "stilting" will be the rage before many days. So be ready when the call comes: "Get on your stilts!"

JAPANESE PRAYER BAGS.

Evidences of Idolatry Found on a Lot of Coolies.

The immigration inspectors at San Francisco examined a lot of Japanese coolies a few days ago and found that each one had strung about his neck a kamisama or praying bag. These bags contain prayers written on silk or stout paper and are specially addressed to the possessor's household god.

JAPANESE PRAYING BAG.

The Japs pay their Buddhist and Shinto priests from 1 to 2 cents for these prayers, which serve the double purpose of being lucky charms as well as prayers, says the San Francisco Call. The priests bless the charm upon receipt of the cash. The possessor prays by sliding the little pouch up and down the strings and saying something similar to "These are my sentiments." He is very particular that these prayer bags and charms shall not be profaned by the touch of a Christian forefinger and resists the deputy's efforts to find letters near the little sacred pouch which reposes on the stomach of the faithful. For this reason the intelligent Jap does not carry letters near the bag. When the Jap is particularly anxious to have his god answer his prayer he removes the cover from the top of the pouch and prays with the paper in his hands.

Fees on and Off Shipboard.

On all the large trans-Atlantic steamers the room stewardess is entitled to and expects a fee of ten shillings ($2.50) from each passenger upon whom she waits. The dining room steward receives the same amount. If the passenger is ill most of the journey, and but seldom at table, then the fee of $2.50 should be given to the deck steward instead of the dining room steward. Where there is a party of ladies, three or four in one stateroom, a smaller amount may be given by each to the room servant. On land fees are optional, but usual. A sixpence (twelve cents) is the largest fee expected for actual service. The railroad guards, who hold positions similar in rank to our American conductors, will accept and expect a fee if they reserve a compartment for the traveler. One shilling (twenty-five cents) is the usual amount for such service. The railroad porter is given a sixpence.—Ladies' Home Journal.

A USEFUL INVENTION.

Labor Saved by the New Method of Fastening Boxes.

Julius J. Wolf, of Kansas City, has devised a box strap which has some features of interest to shippers whose goods are packed in boxes requiring a strap strengthening. The inventor claims that it combines strength and convenience with a saving of labor.

The new box strap is built on the barbed-wire plan and it dispenses with the use of nails. Two wires are twisted together, and at the proper intervals a wire nail is twisted in the wires. The nail it cut in arrow-headed form, so that the barbs catch in the board like a fish hook and refuse to come out without tearing away a large fragment of the surrounding wood.

The best point about the new strap, however, lies in the saving of labor

THE PATENT STRAP.

while putting it on the box. There is no worry with nails. The workman simply drives in the first barb-nail, then, as he wraps the wire around the box, strikes a single blow on the head of the barb-nail and the operation is complete.

Proof Positive.

Much has been written in ridicule of the wild answers given from the witness-stand, where all connected thought seems to escape some people. But strictly to the point was the evidence of a woman in Maine who was striving to prove an alibi for a boy in a horse-stealing case.

A witness testified that he had seen the boy at the village on that day, when the woman sprang from her seat, and cried:

"He wa'n't out, nuther! His pants was hangin' on the clo'es line all day!"

Another "Compact."

Bliss is at his old tricks. While a citizen of this county, he made himself busy and conspicuous by organizing various polical "societies." Several of these were called "compacts." The last one was the "American Compact," but it did not appear to succeed as well as some of the other "compacts," for among other reasons, the people began to see into the scheme, the COURIER having explained the plan. Now, however, he is publishing a paper at Ft. Wayne, and in it has a big coupon, which he asks his readers to cut out, sign, and send to him. When signed, it is a contract by which the signer become a member of the "Central Bi-Metallic Compact" etc. etc. Just where the dollar or half, or quarter, or dime fee comes in we cannot say. But no doubt it will be found somewhere, if no where else, it will be for a glass button. And we do wonder whether this new "Bi-Metallic" buttton can be worn by "male or female" like the others We shall see how many will be caught with this new "compact."

"FUND W"

Our readers will remember the great stockbroker's swindle some ago, conducted by Fleming & Co. in Chicago. It was known as "Fund W." and investors all over the country were caught by their flattering promises of big returns. The swindlers were caught and most of them punished, but still they came out ahead with big money. Last week one them N. Q. Pope was married to a young lady in the east. In the notice he is said to be worth ten millions. And the temptation to marry an old swindler with ten millions would get away with almost any girl. Still they say that Pope and the others have behaved themselves since coming out of prison.

BANK NOTES

Grand Master Workman Sovereign of the Knights of Labor, has called on all his deluded followers to "boycott" all National bank bills, That is, refuse to take them as money. It seems to us, that of all the fool things this so called "order" has ever done, we think this the silliest, and we truly hope his followers have more sense than he has. The objection especially against the notes of National banks, which he says are representative of the "gold standard," "are responsible for the destruction of the greenbacks, the payment of bonds in coin, the funding acts the demonetization of silve"In his manifesto, he adds:

"Now we propose through the Knights of Labor, farmers' alliance, people's party and all reform organizations, that a boycott be placed on the notes of national banks, and that on and after September 1, 1895, our people be requested and urged to accept no national bank bills in any of the ordinary transactions of business.

"National bank notes are legal tender between the national government and the people and between the banks and the government, but not legal tender between individuals. They are not legal tender for private debts. wages or merchandise, nor any of the multifarious transactions that enter into business intercourse between individuals; and it is generally agreed that if only one person in a hundred boycotts these notes it will make the work effective and depreciate them, and force the banks into a humiliating defense of their 'fiat' money.

Commenting on this foolish piece of business, the Ft. Wayne Journal says:

The publication of Grand Master Workman Sovereign's boycott against national bank notes naturally attracts a great deal of attention and was very generally discussed at Washington yesterday as to its effects, if any, upon the condition of the treasury and the circulation of money and the payment of obligations. Secretary Carlisle said that the boycott would not affect the treasury department or its condition. National bank notes, it was stated, as between individuals were not a legal tender and could be refused if offered by one individual to another and declined without in the least impairing the validity of the debt. The same is true of gold and silver certificates, neither of which are legal tender, but simply the representative of a gold or silver dollar which is a legal tender between individuals and between the government and individuals In case a national bank note should be declined by a debtor, all the creditor would have to do to make it available for use would be to present it to the treasury for redemption. It would be immediately redeemed by the payment to the holder of a United States legal tender note and the bank of issue notified to either recoup the government by returning to it a legal tender note or retire the national bank note. Treasury officials express the opinion that while a general boycott of national bank notes by labor unions would, perhaps cause temporary embarrasment, it could have no permanent effect, as stripped of all technical surrounding, it was a boycott against the government itself on the part of a portion of its citizens, which was in in itself, they said, an absurdity.

Whatever the objections, it was pointed out, that may exist against the nation bank system under the present law, they can only be remedied by a repeal or modfication of those laws and not by a boycott, as an attack on the system such as that instituted by Grand Master Workman Sovereign, resolves itself into an attack upon the government itself.

Captain Charles King has written for Harper's Round Table a serial story of the National Guard and the riots, entiled "Corporal Fred." Its publication will begin in the number of the Round Table dated July 23. The same number will contain a story of Indian warfare, entitled "John Kiburne's Fort," by James Otis; an illustrated article, "How Royalty Travels," and a "Talk with Boys," by the Rev. Dr. Ramsford.

THE AUBURN COURIER.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, postoffice as second-class matter.

THURSDAY,.....JULY 25, 1895.

The great sugar works at Rockford, Ill., that have been closed several years have been sold to a new company that will add greatly to the plant and start the work to running again at an early date. They will employ a large force of men.

STAMBULOFF formerly the prime minister of Bulargia was attacked by assassins a few days ago, and so injured that he has since died. He had secured many reforms to benefit the people, but as often happens, some were not suited, and his enemies took this revenge.

It is said that Gov. Matthews gets an average of three invitations a day to old settlers,' farmers' and Grand army gatherings. He says he cannot attend any of them, as they come at a season when he is required to be at the state house every day.

THREE American fishermen, operating in one of the lakes west of Duluth, through which runs the line between Canada and the United States, have been arrested by the Canada authorities for fishing on their side of the line. It does seem as if neighbors should not be so particular, though no doubt we would serve them the same way if we found them on our side at work.

Our readers will remember the mystery of Luella Mabbit, a girl in Logansport, who disappeared in 1886. She was last seen in company with a young man named Omer Green who was found two years later and hanged by a mob. Last week some men cleaning out an old well near Frankfort, Ind., found a skeleton which has been identified as that of Miss Mabbit. But there is no other clue to the mystery, and it is still uncertain whether Green was guilty. Mob law is uncertain.

Silver and anti-silver men in Ohio are quarreling as usual. It is an old song Whenever the democrats have a chance ahead of them to do something, some fool fellow gets up a side issue, like the greenback issue, the silver issue, the prohibition issue, the various populist issues and so get the party sufficiently divided, that it gets beaten and the republicans get in. It was this disposition on the part of democrats that helped greatly to keep the republican party in power so long, so long after the people had got tired of them. For our readers can look up the votes on several presidential elections and see where the republicans won with only a third of the voters on their side. Democrats should learn something.

Minor Details Of The Trip From Auburn.

As all readers of the DAILY COURIER have been promised a write-up of the Encampment and other important events your scribe will endeavor to give some of the minor details. As noted in Saturday's DAILY the Auburn Rifles and two companies of Waterloo and Angola left at 3:10 for the Capital. The trip was made over the Lake Shore to Ft. Wayne where we took a Lake Erie and Western special and were joined by Companies B. and G, and First Reg. Band and battery E. artillery of that place. Our first stop was at Bluffton where Company E. of that place and B. of Decatur was taken on We left Bluffton on time and were sailing at a high speed towards Muncie, when suddenly our train stopped. Upon inquiring we were informed that the two coaches occupied by the companies that were taken on at Bluffton had been cut off and we had gone several miles without them. We backed up and got them and was soon on our way again. Next we stopped at Muncie where our cars were switched over on the Big Four track and a Big Four engine put on and by ten o'clock were at Indianapolis. A heavy rain set in after we left Muncie and continued till about midnight. Then we were marched from the Union depot into the streets where there was no shelter for us but a combination of darkness and rain. But Gen. McKee's natural humanity prompted him to lead us to the State house where fifteen companies were quartered. No blankets were furnished but the boys just simply lay down on the stone floor and used small pieces of the DAILY COURIER for pillows. This, however, was much more comfortable so far as the weather was concerned but there never was a bed in camp half so hard. As usual there was no water on the train and none to be had in the state house and the boys were compelled to do without anything to drink until this morning. Guards were stationed at the doors and none could leave their comfortable beds. But some of the boys were determined to get out and finally Corp. Brown and private Chas. Mason of Co. K. made their exit at one of the basement windows. They went down town where some repairs were being made on the streets and stole a red lantern. A sergant of the police force saw them and an Auburn boy bet him $1.00 he could not catch them. The sergant put up the dollar and the race was run and lost by the police. The boys came back to the state house at about three this morning having lots of fun over their race. This morning all companies that were in the state house took street cars and were conveyed to Fairview Park, arriving here about 7:30. The Park and all other accommodations are beyond description but your scribe will endeavor to-morrow to say something concerning it. Up to this writing at 2 p. m. we have not had anything to eat save a cup of coffee and some bread that was served at 11:30. But we have plenty of good rations issued but had no time to cook them.

NOTES.

Capt. Kuhlman was detailed at noon as officer of the day.

One member of the Waterloo company was quite drunk and as a result a fight occurred on the way down here.

One of the members of the Ft. Wayne company was also drunk and got out of the train at Bluffton. It required several of the officers to get him back in.

There were no drunks in Company K. and as usual maintained a good record.

While here we calls received from Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Houser, Roy Garrett and Edna Houser and Lewis H. Willis.

Mr. and Mrs. Houser inform us that Ollie Ensley is sick and has been so for about two weeks with the typhoid fever.

Mrs. C. P. Houser gave the reporter a short talk on how and what to put in the WEEKLY COURIER. She misses the news concerning the L. L. C. and etc

THE BIG ANNIVERSARY SALE ASTONISHES EVEN THE PLEASED PROPRIETORS AND MANAGERS.

There was never such a crush and and a rush and struggle in a store in DeKalb county, since the days when the Pottawatomies traded coonskins and deerskins, and "yellow puccoon" for blankets and beads, as they witnessed at the Bishop & Lackey "anniversary sale" to day. If anyone still doubts whether advertising pays, let them look at the amount of advertising given to this anniversary. No sale was ever before so extensively advertised or at so great an expense. And it was judiciously done. From the date the little "liners" first appeared in the DAILY COURIER, we have been overwhelmed with inquiries as to what was "to take place July 18?" Then when the big weekly came out July 11, all could see, and since then all have evidently been getting ready to attend. So this morning when the employes of the store appeared to open up at 5:30, they found a number of people waiting to get in. And from that time on, they kept coming. Several times we noticed three to five buggies coming in a group, probably from the same neighborhood, and all turned in at the big store to let the occupants, generally ladies, get out, while the driver would go and care for his team, and come in later. At the arrival of the early local from Garrett, it was found a goodly crowd had come on that train, and we recognized a number who came from part of the county with teams. By nine o'clock the big double room was so crowded that men had to be placed at the doors to keep any more from coming in except when some one was let out. Then the same number would be admitted, and so on. One lady who wanted to buy some ducking, managed to get into the store, and working her way around to where she knew it to be, she saw another lady who wanted the same sort of goods had got the whole bolt in her arms and was holding it til she could get a clerk to cut off what she wanted. "When you get what you want of that, give me a chance," laughingly suggested the lady who had just come in. But when she next got a chance to investigate, every inch of the cloth was gone. "And she was left lamenting." One lady wanted some goods that are kept on the second floor and after quite a struggle got up there and finally got the goods. There she started to come down, and an hour and a half later had reached the door opening out into the street. Many ladies stepped behind the counters, picked out the goods they wanted, and measured it off, then waited till their turn at the cashier to pay for it. And we have heard that a number articles are not accounted for. It looks now, at this writing, at 2 p. m. as if the sale was a grand success. It may lay the plan for some arrangement by which some one of the town firms may have a "monthly sale" as is done by the Stuefels at Angola. Still we can't say. But it has just occurred to us.

NOTES

Several other firms in town have had big sales to-day, although they had not expected it. They had supposed their own stores would be nearly deserted while the big sale was going on, but were agreeably surprised to find themselves getting a share. We are pleased to hear this.

The County Institute.

The DeKalb County Teachers' Institute will be held the last week of August as usual, or August 26 to 30. The day instructors are Prof. B. J. Aley of the chair of Mathematics, Indiana State University; Prof. A. W. Moore of the chair of Philosophy, University of Chicago; and Hon. D. M. Geeting State Superintendent of Public Instruction. The former high standard of evening entertainments will be provided and will be announced in due time.

WE DON'T WORK

FOR OUR INTEREST ALONE

But we make a slaughter sale while you can use summer goods in their season, and give you a chance to buy fall and winter apparel at the same discount for the reason that we don't reserve anything in our whole line of clothing and furnishings. Our sale is a money saver to you. (25 per cent interest on your money saved.) We want you to come and examine our bargains so you can tell your neighbors that it is a sale, and just as we advertise. Stock is diminishing very fast and sizes will be broken. Remember this sale positively closes August 1.

Strictly Bonafide

LOVELY LIGHTS.

At the Bishop & Lackey store this evening will be seen a lovely sight. An immense number of electric lights are arranged in the immense show window and when turned on will read

'93 ANNIVERSARY '95
SALE

There will be bulbs enough to show the letters plainly and so many of these bright lights shining out at once will of course light up that part of the street like noonday. The work is by Alta Moody, who has spared neither time, thought nor labor to make it a brilliant success. There are few men in the county who can do a more artistic job in this line than he can. All go and see it to-night.

Crowds kept coming to the Bishop & Lackey store in the evening to see the 260 bulbs flash out the words "Anniversary Sale," and it was beautiful. Few in Auburn had ever seen the like, though of course those who had visited larger cities had witnessed similar displays. There would have been 316 lights had it been possible to finish the work, but as the job was greater than had been anticipated, it could not be completed in time. The display was nearly full except the two dates, and even these showed plainly when the other lights were all turned on, for the holes showed white in the black ground. Alta Moody came in for liberal compliments on all sides and had every reason to feel proud of his part of the great day. To-night he will have it arranged to flash each letter separately, producing a brilliant effect.

THE EVENING.

The bible says, "The morning and the evening were the first day." Those employes at Bishop & Lackey's were no doubt pleased when the "evening of the first day" closed and they could lay their weary heads on the welcome pillow at home. All over the big store that evening, there was the appearance of wreckage such as we used to see at the world's fair, out on the grass plots where tens of thousands had eaten lunches and then left their paper boxes and littering shreds of paper to drift all over the grass in all parts of the ground. But there was no time to pick up paper, for the evening brought more customers and the store was comfortably full till bed time called the purchasers to come home. The clerks had a look as if "that tired feeling" had its grip on them, but they kept at work patiently till the last sale was done. In addition to the regular force, there were over twenty extra clerks. Of course a large force of new hands caused some display of awkwardness and there was now and then some delay that would not have occured with all trained help. But all in all the new ones did well under the circumstances. They had a number of queer experiences to exchange when the day was over. To-day and this evening, the sales were continued on same terms as yesterday so as to give the people in town a chance.

Good Show.

The LaPearl show yesterday and last evening was excellent for a show of its size. It is not as big as Barnum's but our people like it better. And it was big enough to keep the audience entertained for more than the usual number of hours. It was bright and new. Everything was first-class and in the best taste. It came nearer to being a "moral Show" than anything we ever saw. There were no side shows, no fakirs, no thieves. The band was the best ever seen with a show and was a great attraction and did much to draw out the immense crowd that filled the big tent so full that the performance had to wait till more seats could be put up. LaPearl says he will be here next year He will have a big patronage.

BUTLER.

The Hensler Heirs are about to put a new plate glass front in their building on Broadway.

The aged widow of David DeForest is critically ill with meager hopes of her recovery. She lives with her daughter east of town.

William Weicht's barn that was burned by lightning last Sunday night (the 14) was quite a loss, but was about covered by Insurance.

Mrs. J. A. Campbell is spending a week with her sister near Angola, whose brothers are in camp at Indianapolis with their company from Angola.

E. A. Campbell, wife and children of Toledo Ohio, who were visiting with Butler friends Sundayed with Mrs. Campbell's sister at Montpelier Ohio.

Butler base ball nine had two spirited games last week, the first with "Page Gems" nine and the second with the "Signals" of Ohio, suffering defeat each time.

Frank Stump had a narrow escape from fire last week by the carelessness of some one at his house. His opportune arrival at home saved his house.

A dwelling on East Oak street owned by M. McClellan and occupied by Christ Riser was struck by lightning last Wednesday night and slightly damaged, as was the goods of Mr. Riser. All carried Insurance in J. A. Campbell's agency.

A. Mr. Welden, of Edon O., is getting ready to put a stock of goods in the Sudie Worth building west side of Broadway. He was one of the many who went through the fire there last year and without insurance.

The remains of North Moody son of the late Dwight Moody of Newville this county, were brought here last Sunday and followed to their last resting place in Newville's most beautiful cemetery by a large concourse of mourning friends. He had escaped barely with his life in a saw mill accident here two or three years ago, and lost his life in Chicago, where he has been living for some time, in a railroad accident, the particulars of which the writer has been unable to learn.

HAS FAITH IN IT.

The following letter is from Mr. McDougall the oil and gas expert and shows he has faith in the accuracy of his instruments:

RICHMOND, IND., July, 19, 1895.

John H. Pyle,
Auburn, Ind.

DEAR SIR:—I have been looking for a letter from you stating what progress you are making in regard to drilling a well. I hope you will not let the matter lag as I am perfectly satisfied you will get Gas or Oil whichever you choose to drill for on the locations I made for you, you need not be afraid to risk a well on any of the locations made.

I have tested my instruments in every possible way I could think of and so far I have been unable to find any flaw, so that I feel perfectly safe when I make a location that Oil or Gas will be found, whichever I locate for. Push the matter forward and let me hear from you on receipt.

Yours Truly,
H. MCDOUGALL.

W. H. ENGLISH of Indianapolis is preparing a full and elaborate history of the state of Indiana. He is well prepared to do this work so long needed. He has abundant means and a wide knowledge of prominent men and events. It will prove a better monument than all his great wealth could purchase. Mr. English was at one time a prominent member of congress, was candidate for vice-president on the ticket with Hancock. was a member of the convention that framed our present state constitution and has always been prominent in Indiana affairs.

$40 per month salary! A few energetic ladies and gentlemen wanted to canvass. Above salary guaranteed. Call or address, Mrs. T. P. Scott, Auburn, Ind.

The owners of the Roby race track are determined to continue the racing. They say: The law has been defined and we know just where we stand. The men interested in this enterprise will at once build two additional tracks. A meeting lasting fifteen days will be held on the first track, another continuing fifteen days on the second track and a third, lasting fifteen days on track No 3. Forty-five days will then have elapsed, and the company will hold the fourth race on track No. 1, and so on. Under the law we will have the right to do this." Governor Mathews was asked:—"Suppose the race-track people construct two additional tracks?" He immediately replied: "As I have said on several occasions, there shall be no let up in this fight so long as those people attempt to violate the law. If they still attempt to violate the law it will be a fight to the finish. It will continue until either I am whipped or they are whipped."

Joe Williamson and Joe Grover will accompany the Auburn Rifles to Camp as cooks. Harry Trentman will be Capt. Kuhlman's servant, Eddie Scott Lieut. Clark's servant, and Wm. Lahnum Lieut. Lahnum's servant. The DAILY COURIER will also be represented there.

Mrs. McCoy, of Indianapolis, and Miss Austill, of Cambridge City, are in the city, They were called here by the death of their sister Mrs. Wm. Elson Mrs. McCoy will remain a few week with the bereaved family and Miss Austill returnes this evening.

We feel sorry for the people of south Jackson township because they didn't get a drop of that refreshing rain we had last night. We don't want to be selfish and hope they will get the next shower.

The Dispatch says that Calvin Hull who lives south of North Manchester threshed seven and a half acres of wheat last week and realized 224 bushels to the acre. That's a big yield, who is wrong, the Dispatch or Journal.

The funeral service of Mrs. Wm. Elson occurred at Grove Bethel yesterday. The large church was crowded and over ninety carriages being in the procession.

Mrs. Thomas Lipsett, of Goshen, is in the city, having been called here by the death of her sister, Mrs Hoffman.

Emmet Refner is now in the patent fence business and has one of the best kinds in the market. It includes also, a patent gate. Both cheap enough to bring them into general use.

A letter was received to-day from James Morell, now at Van Buren, Ark, in which he says all are well. As he advances his subscription till next year, we conclude the "Van Buren Foundry" is flourishing. Glad of it.

A letter this morning from Rev. W. L. Meese informs us he reached Paw Paw Lake Sunday morning. He is enjoying the vacation very much. The apple crop is large there, one farmer reports that he will have over seven thousand bushels. Peaches and pears are also plenty.

The weather clerk must have heard the complaining remarks of the DAILY yesterday evening for within an hour after the paper should have been in his hands, a slow sort of rain settled down to business in a quiet way and kept up for about an hour not heavy, but it did some good. Then along toward midnight there came up a heavy thunderstorm with a very heavy fall of rain for about an hour. It was the best we have had this spring. It will no doubt wet the potato hills, and the corn grew an inch or two by morning. While it was merely a local rain, it showed that others were getting showers off and on through the night as well as ourselves. It will be thankfully received everywhere and a repetition cordially requested. Later. A big rain started up at 2 p. m. and continues.

Geo. M. Crane has moved to Wawaka, where he has a position with the Lake Shore Company that pays him $32 a month. This is not a big sum but with care and steady habits it will make a living. George has seen a good deal of the ups and downs of life and we hope will now take a turn.

Rev. J. D. Brosy will be home this week and will fill the pulpit at his church Sunday morning and evening. He writes Mr. Bowers that he is feeling greatly improved.

The Military band or drum corps had a fine patronage at their ice cream social at Henry Wolf's last evening. And their ice cream was excellent. They do say that Henry Wolf plays the big drum with his old-time vigor, so that there was plenty of good martial music to make the refreshments more enjoyable.

Carriage Repairing.

Dorsey Pilgrim and Ed. Cutter are in charge at the John W. Shaffer wagon shop on South Main street, and in addition to continuing to make the best wagon in the country, they make a specialty of carraige repairing, which they will do neatly and promptly. Both are skilled workmen and guarantee good work and satisfaction. Call on them when your buggy or wagon needs a neat, prompt job of repairing. tf

W. B. Campbell of Anderson arrived in town this morning. He will remain over till Monday.

W. A. Hoisington of Adrian, formerly editor of the Dispatch arrived in town this morning.

Miss Mattie Hoffman who is now back from Ohio was a caller to-day. In company with her was a lady friend from Indianapolis, Miss Olive Kiler. Miss Kiler is a violinist, a pupil of Prof. H. D. Beissenhertz and at the next public musical, one week from next Monday, she and Stella Merica will play a duet or two. This will be one of the features of the meeting.

Rev. N. J. Myers of Newcomerstown, Ohio was a caller to day. He has been a week or so visiting his father at the old home at Wilmot in Noble county. He will return to Ohio in about three weeks. He is in charge of the Lutheran church at his prerent location and pleased with the success he has had there. He will fill the pulpit here to morrow preaching in the forenoon with a lecture in the evening. The subject of the lecture is, "The Greatest Thing in the World." We hope to see many of the old friends present.

Hon. R. M. Lockart was here to day working up the advertising for the Waterloo premium list. He is succeeding well, and the book, the largest they have ever had, will be out in a few days. He has also done good turn to our Poultry Breeders' Association by getting them into the big fair circuit. This will prove a good thing for us.

Prof. Horace Hoffman was home last week for a visit with his mother Mrs. C. C. Hoffman but has now returned to Bloomington where he is Greek professor in the state university.

Last evening Marshal West went to the south end to see if two chaps who have been selling carving knives and forks had left town, as he had ordered them to. They had not, but were filling up at the south end saloon. One was the one-legged man our people will remember. As they seemed stubborn, the marshal sent up town for John Mitchell to bring down the town team to haul them to the lock up. When John got there, the marshal went to arrest one of them, and there was a scuffle between the man and John Mitchell, when the peg leg one jumped in and took a hand. There was then a general struggle, and by the time it was over one of the tramp peddlers had about as much clothes on as Flora McFlimsey. But Mr. West assisted by Mitchell, Jack Miller and Will Long got the fellows into the "patrol wagon" and took them to the lockup. This morning both were let out on a promise to leave town. They left and our people will now be rid of them.

THE growth of the churches of the United States as shown by the last census keeps equal pace with the rapid increase of educational institutions. It is also noteworthy that the increase in the number of communicants in evangelical churches is more rapid even than the astonishing increase to the total population. The communicants of all the churches number 20,612,800, which shows that 42.91 per cent. of the total population are member of the churches and that of the population over ten years of age 43.49 per cent. are church members. Not only has the membership of the churches increased with unexampled rapidity, but the value of church property has been augmented nearly 100 per cent. since 1870, while the number of church organizations has expanded 126 per cent. in twenty years.—Ex.

Mrs. Wm. Elson.

Sarah Hathyna Austill was born in Jackson Co., Alabama May 1, 1846 and died July 16, 1895 aged 49 years, 2 months and 16 days.

At the age of ten years she came north with her widowed mother to Cambridge City, Ind. From this place she was united in marriage to the bereaved husband, Wm. Elson, Nov. 24, 1865. After a short time spent in Ohio she returned with her husband to Wayne Co., Ind., where they resided till April 2, 1874 at which time they came to their present home, three miles south-east of Auburn.

A loving wife, an affectionate mother and a kind neighbor has left us for the life beyond. She leaves a husband, three children and two sisters who deeply mourn their loss.

At an early age she gave her heart to God and united with the Baptist church to which she was a loyal devoted member; but finding her religious service needed in her own neighborhood she moved her church membership to the M. E. class at Grove Bethel where she remained a consistent member. Though her life was a busy one, she never was so occupied that she did not have time to entertain friends or assist a "worthy brother" who was in need. The hospitable part of her nature was so developed that to fill her place in her neighborhood seems an impossibility. Even in the last days of her seven months of severe illness she appreciated the presence of friends and acquaintances and tried to make their stay with her pleasant. As a leader in good works she will be greatly missed.

The funeral services were held on Thursday, July 18th, at Grove Bethel conducted by Rev. Erlongher and the Woman's Relief Corps. The crowded church and beautiful floral offerings testify to the esteem in which she was held.

It was remarked by one who knew her well that in that vast audience there was perhaps not one who had not received some kind attention or offering from her hand. As a final earthly attention she was reverently laid to rest in the Woodlawn.

CARD OF THANKS.

Wm. Elson and family wish to extend their thanks to the neighbors and friends who so sympathetically assisted in the sickness and death of their loving wife and mother. No words can express the gratitude they feel toward all and especially the W. R. C, the G. A. R., the choir and those who gave their beautiful flowers.

Reesch's Revolver.

Reuben Lockwood was last week out in Defiance county, where he has a farm about two miles north of Delaware Bend. While there, he heard of an incident supposed to be connected with the terrible murder of the three Auburn men.

About half a mile from Mr. Lockwood's farm lives a farmer named Sell. It will be remembered that Henry Reesch, Harris and Brown were shot on the B. & O. freight train on Friday night Dec. 7. The next day, Saturday, Mrs. Sell went out to the barn to get some eggs. The barn has a sort of shed or addition up against it, and into this had been put a lot of straw filling it about full. After looking around in the barn, proper, for eggs, Mrs. Sell came to the side where the shed full of straw was, and looked over into it, and to her dismay saw four rough looking men, strangers, and even her hurried, frightened first look showed her that one had lost an eye. With a wild scream she flew to the house, caught up her child, for no one else was at home and ran to a near-by neighbor's where she told her story. She and the neighbor woman, soon saw the four men come out of the straw shed and into the road. There they stopped a moment as if consulting. Then they left, going northward and as was supposed, separating. When Mr. Sell came home and learned what had happened, he went to the shed, and in his examination of it, found three revolvers. These he has kept. But about this time they heard of the awful tragedy of the shooting on the train, and at once concluded that these men might be the murderers. It turned out afterwards that the men staid over till Monday at a point a couple of miles away. As said before Mr. Sell has kept the revolvers, and when Mr. Lockwood was at his farm last week, they got to talking about the matter, and he, learned that one of the revolvers was a large one similar, as he believed, to the one the murderers had taken from Henry Reesch during the fight, and which they evidently had carried off with them as it had not been found in the car nor seen since. He went over to Sell's, saw the revolver, and was so impressed with the belief that it was the one taken from Reesch, that he asked privilege to bring it home to see if it could be identified. It will be remembered, that Reesch had the only weapon in the Auburn crowd, a revolver of large caliber that he had borrowed of Ex-sheriff Ralston. As Reesch and Brown were killed at once, the only account ever given of the struggle was that told by Harris before he died. He said that when the trouble began, and it became plain there would be a death struggle, as soon as the tramps had fired shot or two, Reesch drew his revolver and fired, that seemed to be Harris' impression, and that the murderers at once sprang on him, overpowered and disarmed him. Others gathered from Harris, or thought they did, that Reesch did not get a chance to shoot but that the revolver was knocked from his hand. Whether he did or not, it is certain from Harris' story that this big revolver was used on Reesch and his friends, and several big holes on the riddled bodies of the unfortunate men, would seem to justify this belief. Mr. Lockwood thinks that after the murderers escaped from the car at Fostoria, they took the first freight back this way, getting off at Delaware Bend and concealing themselves in Sell's barn two miles away. And their discovery there, and the fact that was known of their staying over Sunday in the vicinity shows easily they might have been arrested had active steps been taken. When Mr. Loockwood got home last week, he at once showed the revolver to Mr. Ralston, who without hesitation said it was his, the very one he had lent to Reesch. Mr. Lockwood went back to Delaware Bend this week and took the revolver with him But whether Mr. Sell will give it up to the rightful owner, we do not know. But its return to this place calls up again the story of that terrible struggle in the darkness of a box car on a moving train, and which hurried into eternity three Auburn men. But the rest of the fearful tale, will probably never be known.

Electricity as a motive power to replace steam for long distances seems to be a decided success, to judge by the tests on the Nantasket Beach road. Whether the subtle fluid will entirely replace steam power is a question that will require some time to decide. It is questionable if there will be any general movement toward abandonment of steam until such time as a practicable, inexpensive storage battery system is devised.

Preaching by telephone is certain to be one of the next things in order and in vogue. To connect a pulpit by 'phone with any number of homes and invalids' chambers would be easy enough. The idea of a Baltic canal seems to have been formed more or less distinctly some five hundred years before it was actualized. It was partially carried out as long ago as 1784 by the construction of a small canal from Holtenau on the Baltic side of the Danish Peninsula to the River Elder, which empties into the North Sea. Of course this waterway was navigable only to vessels of light draft, and it affected the commercial relations of different countries so little that few in our day seem to have been aware of the fact that it existed. The latter statement is not likely to hold true in future years for the canal.

Chicago Post: It is far from the purpose of the Evening Post to encourage the revolutionary proceedings of those citizens of South Chicago who came down to the Council meeting carrying rotten eggs with which to bombard the boodle Aldermen, but we must say the scheme is not without its hopeful features. We might imagine the consequences if it were carried out. The clerk: "Coughlin." Ald. Coughlin: "Aye." The gallery: "Swat!" The New Orleans Picayune says the action of the Wholesale Grocers' Association of that city in putting in operation a ship between that port and the Isthmus of Panama promises to develop into a permanent steamship line. It will connect at Colon with the Panama Railroad and through it with a line of vessels from California points. A moderate-sized steamship is to be used at first, soon to make its initial voyage, and it is expected that a larger vessel will be placed in commission as the business increases. There is believed to be a sufficient amount of traffic to make such a venture profitable, and as a regulator of transcontinental freights the enterprise will pay a handsome return in the money saved in the shape of lower transportation charges. Aside from affording New Orleans communication with the Pacific coast of the United States, the rich trade of the west coast of South America will be brought into commercial touch with the city near the mouth of the Mississippi. Many descriptions of products destined for consumption in South America will find an outlet through New Orleans and bring business to the new line.

PROVED A BOOMERANG JOKE.

How Professor Blackie Once Fooled with an English Reporter.

Many good stories are being told about the late Prof. Blackie, and some others will doubtless see the light. An amusing episode occurred at the banquet which followed the laying of the foundation stone of the Wallace monument on the Abbey Craig, near Stirling. Prof. Blackie was one of the principal speakers, and prepared a set oration, which was put in type from his manuscript at the Scotsman office beforehand.

At that time there was more mystery about these things than there is nowadays, and it was not until Blackie began to speak that the late Thomas Paul, chief reporter of the Scotsman, informed his colleagues on the other papers that he had proofs in his pocket with which, by Prof. Blackie's instructions, he would supply them. The grateful reporters ceased from their labors, but were amazed to find Mr. Paul himself taking hastily to his notebook and putting down every word as he signaled to them that there was something wrong.

The secret was soon out, for Prof. Blackie made no secret of it. He was delivering an entirely different speech from that which he had written—racy, witty and entertaining, flashing with jeux d'esprit and glowing with patriotic ardor—but having no more relation to the speech supplied to the Scotsman than the character of Queen Dido to the causes of the potato famine in Ireland.

The professor pulled himself up from time to time, saying, "But this is not the speech I meant to give. That does not matter. You will see my real speech in the Scotsman to-morrow. I gave it to the editor." This joke, which recurred at frequent intervals, until Blackie at last sat down as well pleased with himself as his audience were delighted with him, gave satisfaction at the time all round.

Next morning it is possible Prof. Blackie laughed the wrong way, for Mr. Paul reported the speech delivered, and all its numerous interruptions, with photographic accuracy, and it was printed in parallel columns with the more elaborate written essay, which was by comparison stiff and dull.

Had the Evidence.

Fannie Herring, the once popular emotional actress, is now ending her career in a Bowery dime museum. To-day one of those old men who wear a little bunch of whiskers on their chin, and are ever on the lookout for something connected with boyhood days on the old farm, heard that Fannie was still back of the footlights. He invested a dime for old acquaintance sake, and, although he had not seen the actress since 1847, when she toured the Maine circuit, he recognized her. Then he struck up a conversation with one of the attaches of the house and pulled from the folds of a greasy old pocketbook a photograph of Fannie, on the back of which were written the youth-destroying words "Born June 11, 1822." When the actresses of the present generation pass around their pictures no such nonsense accompanies them.—Brooklyn Dispatch.

WILSON BILL AT WORK

EVEN WOOL IS DEFYING PROTECTION ARGUMENT.

Farmers Beginning to Realize that the Country Is Not Going to the Dogs—Political Antics of Sherman and McKinley—The '96 Campaign.

Revival of Prosperity.

If that can be called remarkable which has come to pass in pursuance of all reasonable expectations, the present state of the American wool market is the most remarkable thing about the business situation. The tenth legion of the army of the protectionists through all the tariff war has been the American Wool Growers' Association, with its center of energy in Ohio. The utter ruin of American wool culture was predicted in the event of any lowering of the tariff on foreign wools. In the wool-growing States this feature of the tariff fight was the only feature that protectionism could see at all, and when it became certain that the Wilson bill was going to admit foreign wool duty free, it was proof in thousands of farmers' minds that Mr. Cleveland intended deliberately and maliciously to betray his country to perdition. In vain it was pointed out to these men that the manufacturing conditions were such that the increase of the use of certain coarse foreign wools would involve the increase of the use of domestic wools to mix with them. This reasoning, however, involved two judgments of the mind to get at the conclusion, and the protectionist mind was unable to follow so complicated a mental process. The Wilson free-wool bill was worse than treason, and the country had gone to pot.

Among the first of the interests to feel the reviving prosperity have been the interests of the wool-growers and the wool merchants. The Boston Commercial Bulletin says: "Never has there been such a sustained demand for wool." This demand of course includes all grades, foreign as well as domestic, but the point is that each shares the activity of the other, just as activity in bread means activity in butter and vice versa. The total sales of wool in the Boston market come within a few thousand pounds of the highest record, and the advance on domestic wools has been, since the revival of trade, fully 20 per cent. in value. Of course it is very naughty for business to play such havoc with venerable theories of economy, but the farmers themselves ought to cherish a forgiving temper in view of the pecuniary good that comes out of the theoretical evil.

Sherman and McKinley.

Time out of mind John Sherman of Ohio has struggled for the Republican Presidential nomination. Rutherford B. Hayes, in whose cabinet he sat as Secretary of the Treasury, countenanced and encouraged his ambition to have the nomination of 1880, but Ohio Republican politicians have more than once proven treacherous and false, and Sherman, who has been in every convention since 1880 as a presidential candidate, has invariably failed, not alone because there was no popular enthusiasm for him, but also because it was known that Ohio was really not at his back.

John Sherman now definitely abandons a field he never fully occupied. In what appears to be an authorized interview at Mansfield he says: "If all the people of the United States should join together and offer it to me I would not accept the position. I am too old. No man of 72 has a right to undertake the work and responsibility which come to the chief executive of the United States. It is a position of wear and tear and it should have a younger man."

John Sherman has invariably proven a cold, selfish, greedy politician. It was not posible that a man of his character should ever attain the Presidency. He appears finally to have arrived at that conclusion himself. In speaking of those persons who may look for Republican nomination next year Sherman speaks of Reed, of Allison and of McKinley. He seems careful to abstain from the use of Harrison's name. He describes McKinley as an able man, who will make a good candidate, adding: "He will, I believe, have the support of Ohio, and I would like to see him nominated."

There is the same old story. No person can rely to a certainty upon any proclamation made by Ohio Republicans as to their support of an Ohio candidate. McKinley seems to be with the Buckeyes in very much worse condition than Sherman ever was. The one danger menacing him is the known feeling of hostility to him felt by the very persons who profess to support him as the favorite son of Ohio. If McKinley suffer defeat he will be one of those of whom there are numerous examples who were killed in the house of their friends. There is no more sincerity for McKinley on the part of Sherman than there is upon the part of Foraker, and just as easily as Garfield abandoned Sherman in 1880 Foraker and many a Buckeye will without ceremony quit Ohio's present favorite and ill-fated son.—Chicago Chronicle.

Democratic Campaign of 1896.

Chairman William F. Harrity of the Democratic National Committee, says that a meeting of that body will be held in November, immediately after the State elections which are to occur this year. The time and place of holding the Democratic national convention will not be decided at that meeting, but there will be a full interchange of views on both points.

As to the issues of the campaign, Mr. Harrity says that the Democrats will have no apology to make for the silver legislation nor for the tariff legislation of the last Congress. He believes that the currency was placed on a stable foundation by the repeal of the Sherman silver act. The reviving industry and trade of the country vindicate the Democratic tariff policy. Mr. Harrity agrees with a recent declaration of Senator David B. Hill that the Democrats never had a better prospect of carrying a presidential election than they have of carrying the election of 1896. With no setback to the growth and development of industry and commerce, the Republicans will be bankrupt of capital in entering the campaign.

Protection Killed Ireland's Industries

Seeking to make capital by appeals to race prejudice the American Economist, organ of the tariff trusts and Trade Restriction League, revives the old exploded charge that free trade ruined Ireland's industries. To prove its unfounded assertion it quotes from Creen's Short History to show that up to 1688 Ireland had flourishing commerce in linens and woolens, which England destroyed.

That Ireland in the 17th century did have extensive manufacturing industries is beyond dispute. It is also true that the short-sighted English protectionists tried to destroy them. But the method by which Irish commerce and industry were ruined is shown in the passage from the Short History quoted by the Economist: "To protect the interests of English graziers the import of (Irish) cattle into England was forbidden. To protect the interest of English clothiers and weavers its (Ireland's) manufactures were loaded with duties."

Here, then, according to the Economist's own authority, is the proof that it was protection and not free trade which ruined Ireland's commerce and manufactures. No other result could have been expected from the policy of trade restriction which shut Irish products out of their best markets.

But the Economist is forced to admit that while the English policy of protection destroyed Ireland's industries over one hundred years ago, it is the land system of that unhappy country which is responsible for the misery and poverty which exist there to-day. And it tries to deceive its readers by calling the land policy imposed on Ireland by England "perfect free trade in land," and quotes from Professor Wallace a picture of the terrible results of what it calls the free trade doctrine of supply and demand. It is true that Professor Wallace has shown that the hopeless degredation of the Irish people comes from the monopoly by a few landlords of the soil on which the people must live and work. But it is not true that he traces the evil to free trade doctrines, for, as every one who has read his books knows, he is a free trader, and proves that the evils of landlordism are due to the restrictions of land monopoly. The Economist's false statements and misrepresentations will convince no intelligent Irish-American that trade restriction is better than the policy of free commerce for which the great Daniel O'Connell strove.

Income and Outgo.

Official statement of receipts and expenditures for the month of May shows a deficit of $3,286,135 for the month. The average deficit for the preceding ten months of the fiscal year was $4,347,136. The May statement therefore shows an improvement and indicates that Secretary Carlisle's estimates would have proved to be about right but for the overthrow of the income tax.

The revenue from customs during May was $12,474,558, against $9,798,069 in May last year under the McKinley tariff, an increase of $2,676,489. And yet Republican leaders threaten to restore the McKinley law, substantially in order to increase the revenue. The revenue under the new tariff is still much less than it will be when conditions become more normal, but it is decidedly more than it was before the repeal of the McKinley law.

The amount of internal revenue collected during the month was $10,754,053, or $1,287,897 less than in May last year. When the country is in the full tide of prosperity, as no doubt it will be before the middle of the next fiscal year, the income from internal revenue, even without the income tax, will probably be $15,000,000 monthly, while the income from customs will be at least as much more. There will then be no serious deficit, even though a Republican Congress may execute the Updegraff threat and offer the president his choice between McKinleyism and poverty. A moderate surplus would be a good thing to have next year, but the government can survive without it, and the country would be better without it than with a relapse into McKinleyism.

Good Times Will Kill It.

There are still some traces of McKinley enthusiasm, but the outlook is now distinctly unfavorable to his candidacy in 1896; and six months of continued commercial restoration will make it impossible.—Rochester Herald.

FATHER OF BASE-BALL.

He Is Still Living in New Haven, and Is an Octogenarian.

No sport is dearer to the heart of the true-born American than base-ball. It is distinctively our national game, and it is destined to remain so as long as Old Glory waves. All lovers of the favorite pastime will be interested to know that there is still living in New Haven, Conn., the father of base-ball, Dr. Danl. L. Adams.

DR. ADAMS.

He is now an octogenarian, but is remarkably active for his advanced years, and can enjoy a good game to-day as well as he could in the old ays. The doctor was one of the first men to join an organized base-ball club, and quickly took the lead in all matters connected with the growth and character of the sport.

Speaking of the early days of the game, Dr. Adams says: "In September, 1845, some New York young men formed the Knickerbocker Base-ball Club. They went into it just for exercise and enjoyment, and I think they used to get a good deal more solid fun out of it than the players in the big games do nowadays. About a month after the organization of this club several of us medical fellows joined it. The following year I was made President, and served as long as I was willing to retain the office. Twice a week we went over to the 'Elysian Fields' for practice. People began to take an interest in the game presently, and sometimes we had as many as one hundred spectators watching the practice. The rules at that time were very crude. The pitching was all underhand, and the catcher usually stood back and caught the ball on the bound.

"There was then no rivalry, as no other club was formed until 1850, and during these five years base-ball had a desperate struggle to exist. As captain, I had to employ all my rhetoric to induce attendance, and often thought it useless to continue the effort, but my love for the game, and the happy hours spent at the 'Elysian Fields' led me to persevere."

GEN. P. W. HARDIN.

Nominated by Kentucky Democrats for Governor of the State.

The nomination of Gen. P. W. Hardin for Governor of Kentucky by the Democratic State convention at Louisville was the result of a canvass of extraordinary excitement and is likely to be followed by a campaign of unexampled activity. Hardin is the best handshaker in the State and one of its best orators. As an electioneerer he excels even Senator Joe Blackburn, another Kentuckian whom everybody calls by his first name. Mr. Hardin is a rich man and will not be hampered by a lack of money. As to the management of the campaign no one can give him any points in the game.

Hardin has been Attorney General of the State for twelve years. He belongs to the famous Kentucky family which has been prominent ever since the State has had a history. Ben Hardin, whom John Randolph called "Old Butcher Knife" when in Congress, was his uncle. Hardin is a stalwart six-footer, dark skinned, handsome and of manly and imposing bearing. He does not possess any high reputation for learning and ability, but he is a good politician. He is 54 years old and is a native of Adair County. He was admitted to the bar in 1865 and for thirty years has been an active and successful practitioner.

AN ELASTIC NUT.

It Takes the Place of the So-Called Jam-Nut, or Lock-Nut.

This ingenious device is designed to do away with the necessity of putting two nuts on a bolt that is to be kept tightly in place. The old plan was to put on one nut, and then another to keep the first one from unscrewing, the second nut being called the jam-nut, or lock-nut.

The elastic nut, however, locks itself. It is made from spring steel, being cut from a bar and then bent into a ring, the ends joining in a dovetail split. The ring is then pressed into hexagon shape and tapped a trifle smaller than its bolt, so that, when it is wrenched on, the split opens slightly, making a firm and constant hold on the bolt.

Caught Galvin's Only Hit.

Umpire Galvin's decisions in the recent Chicago-Pittsburg series of ball games have caused a great deal of talk among the "fans" and incidentally has brought out a great many stories about the genial James. One of these relates to James when he was at the zenith of his fame as a pitcher. All season Galvin had been twirling in rare form, but his batting, never strong, had been particularly weak. The others used to say that when Jimmy saw a hot one coming across the plate he would shut his eyes and "swipe" at it. The season was drawing to an end and Galvin had made scarcely a hit. It was a critical point in the game, with two out and the bases full, when Galvin walked to the plate. Every one expected him to shut his eyes and fan the air. He may have closed his eyes when a swift one came toward him, but he didn't fan the air—he caught the ball with the end of his bat and sent a skyscraper far into center. It was a beautiful hit and gave the fielder a race to the limits, where, as the ball came down, he reached out and gathered it in—a phenomenal running one-hand catch. Galvin had reached second when he saw the fielder gather in his solitary long hit of the season. He kept on running, straight into the center-fielder's garden and directly for that individual, breathing fire. The player who had gathered in Galvin's only hit saw him coming, recognized his danger and scaled the fence for a safety. Jimmy Galvin never forgave him for catching what was apparently a home run.

CORBETT'S HANDSOME WIFE.

Was Once a Reigning Beauty in San Francisco's Bohemia.

Mrs. James J. Corbett, wife of the champion pugilist, whom she sued for a divorce, was once the beauty of Santa Cruz, her nearest rival in that regard being her sister Georgia. Georgia and Ollie Lake remained in that city until they exhausted all its possibilities of conquest. Then they went to San Francisco.

The beauty of the sisters created no less a sensation in San Francisco than it had in Santa Cruz. Among their admirers were actors, artists, writers and men about town. They were the favorites of the Bohemian world, and their rooms were filled with a gay throng every night in the week. One evening Billy Brady brought thither as a guest Julian Mitchell, the juvenile actor of Hoyt's "Bunch of Keys" company. Mitchell repaid Brady's kindness by falling in love with the latter's sweetheart and winning her. Georgia became Mrs. Julian Mitchell. A bank clerk, who added $100 a month to his income by teaching boxing at the Olympic Club, was often among the crowd that thronged the home of the bachelor girls. His name was James J. Corbett. Ollie cast aside a dozen men with large bank rolls and married him.

Granger Shot at the Eyes.

One of these willing story-tellers told an interesting account of a queer adventure which happened to Detectives McCormick and Granger, who were attached to the Central Station at the time the notorious Bill Allen, the negro murderer, escaped. The detective received word that Bill Allen was hiding in a West Side barn. Both of them started for the place, and when they arrived there they were told the murderer could be found in the hayloft.

Granger, who was a single man, volunteered to go up first.

"You stay down here," he said to McCormick, "because you have a family and I have not."

He made his way to the hayloft, and in the dark he caught a sight of two eyes, which he supposed were the murderer's.

"Bill Allen," he yelled, "I don't want to take any chances with you; if you don't give yourself up I will shoot, and shoot to kill."

The eyes stared at Granger for a second, then suddenly he saw them move, and then they leaped to another corner. But Bill Allen did not open his mouth. There was the same stare and the gleaming eye, but not a sound.

The detective knew the negro was a desperate man. He again asked for a surrender, and receiving no reply fired. To his surprise the eyes disappeared, but there was no cry of pain. He made his way slowly to the place where he had seen the eyes and then lit a match.

Imagine his surprise when instead of the murderer he found a cat in the last throes of death. He had hit the animal square between the eyes. His partner, McCormick, came up just at Granger pulled the cat out of the haystack.

Granger bought the drinks that day.—Chicago Tribune.

The Worth of His Words.

There was one occasion when Mr. Forrest received from one of the supernumeraries of a theater an answer which seemed to satisfy him. It was the man's duty to say simply, "The enemy is upon us," which he uttered at rehearsal in a poor, whining way.

"Can't you say it better than that?" shouted Forrest. "Repeat it as I do," and he gave the words with all the force and richness of his magnificent voice.

"If I could say it like that," replied the man, "I wouldn't be working for fifteen shillings a week."

"Is that all you get?"

"Yes."

"Well, then, say it as you please."

His Conscience Clear.

The Comptroller of the Treasury is an autocrat whose decision overrides even that of the chief magistrate of the nation. Some years ago, the then incumbent of the office refused to sign a warrant for money which General Grant thought it proper to expend. "That is right," the President said; "I admire your firmness. Where your conscience is concerned, never permit yourself to be coerced. You may consider yourself clear in this affair, for I shall appoint a new comptroller to-morrow."

The flowers are streaming in the dew,
And ice cream now abounds;
While "Is it hot enough for you?"
Goes on its annual rounds.

NEARLY every day the Governor and other state officers are besieged by convicts returned to Indianapolis for release under the new law, and there are many pitiful scenes as the discharged men beg for food and clothing, so that they may go out in the world and make their own living. Frequently they are sent home still wearing the prison shirt with the prison number stamped on it and the poorest and shabbiest clothing, and under such circumstances they find every door closed against them. When released they are not provided with money, and this adds to the forlornness of the situation. The more the operations of the new law are noted the more generally is it condemned as an utterly heartless and a most wretched enactment. Its effect will be to drive men back into crime.

THE farmers at Madison County are considering ways to combat a new pest in the shape of wild lettuce, which is rapidly overrunning fields and farm lands, and is spreading at an astonishing rate. In many places it threatens to crowd out growing crops in a year or two, and is far worse than the famous Canada thistle. It is hard to kill, as cutting it off does not destroy it. It then sends out several sprouts from the roots and is worse than ever. It reaches maturity soon and its seed ripens rapidly and the stock will cure up even if it is cut green. They are so light and airy that the wind easily scatters them over large areas and but little progress is made in killing it off. An organized effort is to be made by the farmers to get rid of it if possible.

ISAAC GOODMAN, leader of the notorious Goodman gang, was released from the Prison North on a pardon by Gov. Matthews, and returned to Anderson. He is now 68 years of age. He received his training under the guerrilla Quantrell, in Kansas. In 1860 he came to Indiana and organized a gang. He educated his son Dick in this line, and they headed the gang, which made nightly raids, and plundered everything within fifty miles. His house was made a depository. He entertained no one, and his house, which set back off of the roads, was not invaded by callers of any kind. His fortune continued to grow, until he was worth $100,000. The gang was rounded up at Summittville two years ago, and in the fight that followed Dick Goodman was shot and all were taken prisoners. The gang was sent up for nine years. Isaac's years and failing health, and the fact that his wife was rapidly sinking, secured the pardon. He cannot last long. Dick, who was shot several times in the Summittville fight, is in the hospital, dying.

HENRY EMMELMAN, a clerk at J. L. Moore's wholesale grocery, in Indianapolis, was literally scalped by a freight elevator. He was leaning over the shaft when the elevator descended. His skull was laid bare from his forehead to the back of his head.

THE Board of Directors of the Northern Indiana Prison have made the following appointments: Chaplain, the Rev. A. L. Curry of Noblesville; physician, Dr. Spinning, Covington; steward, D. S. Durbin, Indianapolis. Warden Harley is authority for the statement that United States convicts will not be removed to Leavenworth prison.

BENJAMIN DOOLING, of Vincennes, fooled with a revolver, and there was an accidental discharge of the weapon, the bullet lodging in the shoulder of Richardson Davidson. Davidson was dangerously hurt and he was removed to Keensburg, Ill., where his people live.

PATENTS have been issued to the following Indiana inventors: Russel W. Guilford, assignor to Auburn iron works, Auburn, Ind., steamer engine; Harvey R. Harris, Michigan City, moistener and paper weight; Frederick T. Wright Fort Wayne, assignor of one-half to J. N. Neal, Cold Water, Mich., wire fence; John F. Snapp, Frichton, fire alarm device; Wm. The owner of a large herd of burros was greatly surprised at being asked by a stranger: "What do you feed your borros?" The mountaineer looked at the questioner quizzically, sized him up from head to foot, then smilingly remarked: "Wal, stranger, you must be a 'tenderfoot,' ain't yer I've been keepin' burros for over eight years and I don't remember of ever having fed any of 'em anything." which was probably ture, as it is a well-known fact that the hardy little animals will eat almost anything they can find—grass, paper or rags—and will grow fat and strong on this strange diet.—Demorest Magazine.

Eight Days of Talk.

Roswell G. Horr and W. H. Harvey, whose prominence in financial discussions makes extended introduction of them unnecessary, began their long-heralded and much-advertised debate at 2 o'clock Tuesday afternoon in the assembly room of the Illinois Club, Chicago. The room had been fitted up as an amphitheater with seats for only 200 persons. Admission is by card, but all the seats were taken at the opening of the contest, and it is unlikely that any cards will go begging at any time during the eight days of the friendly dispute. For the benefit of all concerned the talk is divided into blocks of about 1,000 words from each disputant, and when each has had a say both are open to questions from the auditors.

Roswell G. Horr is a statesman from Michigan, now engaged in writing on finance for the New York Tribune. He has as his referee Lyman J. Gage, of the First National Bank, of Chicago, and as his judge Charles H. Aldrich, also of Chicago. W. H. Harvey is known to everybody as the author of "Coin's Financial School." His referee is H. S. Taylor, of Chicago, and his judge is Henry Miller, also a Chicagoan.

The issue is "Gold or Silver for a National Currency," with Mr. Harvey of course in favor of the white metal, and the debate is founded on chapters in the silver champion's noted "school" book. Mr. Horr made the opening statement.

The fight opened with a spar for points. Neither combatant wished to commit himself until he had "tried the wind" and "felt the reach" of his adversary. The Gotham man caused an impression that his first purpose was to castigate Harvey for his literary license in making well-known persons per force attend his "financial school." Hardly had this point been touched upon when Mr. Gage, whose name is linked with every lesson, got up and went out. He did not resume his seat.

The silver sympathizers laughed loudest and cheered hardest. Mr. Horr's constituency eased itself with suppressed titters and significant nods. As the debate proceeded the applause grew harder. At the reading of the terms "gold and silver" from the Constitution by Mr. Harvey there was an outburst. "Who-oy!" shouted the delegate from Indiana. He followed it with deafening hand-claps. A moment after Judge Vincent requested that demonstrations be omitted.

"Let them talk," said Mr. Harvey.

"I have no feeling on the subject— let them talk if they choose," seconded Mr. Horr.

The gold champion early tried to get his opponent to commit himself on the meaning of primary money. Mr. Harvey shied from the trap which he suspected, saying he would discuss that detail in its rightful place. Later, when Mr. Horr was asked to answer point blank if silver was not made the standard in 1792, he in turn dodged, offering Mr. Harvey's refusal to answer him in a word as precedent against minute cross-examination.

Dr. Thomas, president of the Illinois Club, called the gathering to order and welcomed the guests who were to share the discussions. He was followed by Judge Miller, who read the rules adopted by the speakers.

INDIANA LAW IS DEFEATED.

Legislative Apportionment Act Is Declared Unconstitutional.

A suit to test the constitutionality of the Indiana legislative apportionment act passed by the last General Assembly was brought in the Circuit Court at Sullivan and argument in support of the propositions advanced by plaintiffs were made by Senator Turpie, ex-Congressman Brown and ex-Representative Beasley. It was claimed that under article 4, sections 4 and 5, of the Constitution, the General Assembly had no power to enact a law either by repealing valid and existing laws or by passing new laws upon the subject; that the law was passed at an unconstitutional period and not at a session immediately following an enumeration of voters, as provided by the Constitution. It was also claimed that the new law deprived the counties of Vigo, Vermillion and Sullivan of one joint representative. A writ of date was asked, restraining the Auditor, Sheriff and Clerk of Sullivan County from acting under it. Judge Moffett ruled that the new law was unconstitutional and granted the writ. An appeal was taken to the Supreme Court.

REPORT OF WEATHER AND CROPS

Condition of Grain and Cereals in Western and Central States.

The reports as to the condition of crops throughout the country and the general influence of weather on cultivation, growth and harvest made by the directors of the different State weather services throughout the country and telegraphed to Chicago are as follows:

Illinois—Week generally favorable, except dry in northern section; haying and oat harvest being completed; wheat and rye thrashing continues; corn doing well, many fields tasseling; pastures, potatoes and gardens improved by rains in central and southern sections.

Wisconsin—Drouth partially broken by local showers on Sunday; pastures, corn and potatoes suffering; haying completed, except on marshes; rye and barley mostly cut and oats nearly ripe; barley and oats show heavy yields; frost on Tuesday did slight damage.

Minnesota—Warm days, cool nights very favorable; haying well advanced; barley harvest progressing, grade uneven, yield big; oat cutting just begun; corn improving; drouth in south half partially broken by Sunday's showers.

North Dakota—Temperature and sunshine normal, rainfall deficient; some slight damage to grain by hail and hot weather at scattered places; rye and barley being harvested; haying commenced; corn doing well.

South Dakota—Continued drouth unfavorable to all crops; wheat, oats and grass injured some in a number of counties and in localities seriously; barley harvest general and oat harvest begun; corn, flax, millet and gardens need rain.

Nebraska—Week cool, with less than normal rainfall, except in south central part of the State, where more than an inch fell; harvest of small grains progressed rapidly; corn has grown slowly and the leaves have generally rolled some during the day, but while the crop is not as yet damaged rain is needed.

Iowa—The dry and cool weather of past week has been favorable for harvesting; Saturday night and Sunday widely scattered showers afforded relief from drouth, which was becoming serious; oat harvest in progress, and crops are generally doing well.

Indiana—Rain beginning and local showers at end of week beneficial to corn and potatoes; fair weather during the week favorable to harvesting; corn tasseling and shooting, but needs rain in northern portion; wheat and rye thrashing continues; haying in progress.

Kansas—Cool, damp and cloudy week, with abundant rains except in northeast and north counties, very beneficial to growing crops, but sprouting grain in shock and stack in south and interfering with harvest in the west.

Ohio—Rains fell on 8th and 15th, but it is generally drouthy; weather favored haying and harvesting; yields light; oats ripening, some cut; corn fair; all crops need soaking rains; pastures poor and water scarce.

Michigan—Very beneficial showers over northern portion of the State, but over southern half practically no rain has fallen and the drouth continues with severity and everything is suffering; considerable corn is curling; wheat harvest in progress and is very light in yield.

MISS KEY NEARLY PENNILESS.

The Granddaughter of "Star Spangled Banner's" Author.

"We will be without a penny in the world next Monday week," was the way her condition and that of her aged and blind mother was described to a Washington correspondent by Miss Elizabeth Key, granddaughter of Francis Scott Key, the author of "The Star Spangled Banner." This affectionate daughter has had a hard time since she was dropped from the roll of clerks in the pension office. She held a clerkship since the Hayes administration. When the misfortune of Miss Key and her mother was made known to Secretary Smith, of the GRAVE OF FRANCIS SCOTT KEY.

Interior Department, he tried to secure her reinstatement, but was unsuccessful. Friends have intervened with the pension office authorities for the reinstatement of Miss Key, but without avail. Secretary of Agriculture Morton called at the office to investigate the case, but was informed that Miss Key was dismissed for "inefficiency."

A movement is on foot to erect a suitable monument to the memory of Francis Scott Key. The Key Monument Association was organized in June, 1894. It has raised so far about $2,000 for the object it has in view, and now appeals to the country at large for funds.

GOLD CERTIFICATE REVIVED.

Treasury Resumes a Practice in Vogue Before the Reserve Drooped.

The Treasury Department has revived the issue of gold certificates, which have been suspended during the period when the treasury gold reserve was below $100,000,000. Since June 25 last, when the gold reserve again became intact, the treasury has issued about $200,000 gold certificates on gold presented mostly at United States mints. There are now outstanding $48,376,000 in gold certificates. Gold certificates are regarded as the most convenient form of gold money and most of these certificates are held by national banks as part of their lawful reserve. Silver certificates are in circulation to the almost complete exclusion of the silver dollars, as the general public appears to prefer coin representatives to the coin itself. Only $5,000,000 of silver dollars are in circulation, whereas more than eight times that amount of silver certificates are in daily use, the silver in bullion being stored in the vaults of the treasury.

OUTPULLS TWO STEAM ENGINES

New Electric Locomotive Demonstrates Its Strength.

All possible question of the ability of electric locomotive No. 1 of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad to pull the heaviest trains through the Baltic tunnel have been disposed of. With the tremendous load of twenty-six freight cars, all laden to their utmost, and two large locomotives, the electric motor pulled through the tunnel with not nearly all power on. This test of the locomotive was the most important that has yet been made. The load pulled was at least 2,800,000 pounds. The two steam engines, which were attached to the train, joined their forces when the electric locomotive was detached to take the train on its journey east.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN BIG-HORN.

If You Kill One of These You May Call Yourself a Sportsman.

At last we have reached that gallant fellow, the mountain sheep or big-horn. A true cliff-dweller is he. Born under the shelving rocks of a beetling cliff, sometimes actually cradled in the snow, and reared in the stormy atmosphere of high altitudes, he is a typical mountaineer. Wherever you find him at home, depend upon it that you will also find the finest scenery of the district.

This animal also loves a birds-eye view of a mountain landscape as well as does a member of the Geological Survey. A steep descent, with a narrow, level valley and a thread-like river spread like a relief-map three thousand feet before him is his delight. In former times he was venturesome, and often wandered miles away from his mountain home to explore tempting tracts of bad lands; and, being unmolested, he sometimes took up a permanent residence in such places. But the venturesome inhabitants of low, isolated mountains and shelterless bad lands have paid with their lives for their pioneering, and now a mountain sheep is rarely found elsewhere than amid mountains worthy of the name.

Kill one fine old mountain ram by your own efforts in climbing and stalking, and we will call you a sportsman, with a capital S—provided you save his head for mounting, and his flesh for the platter. But no ewes, mind you! Ewes and lambs count against you, rather than to your credit. Can I ever forget how I once traveled all the way from Washington to Wyoming, killed just one superb mountain ram amidst grand scenery, preserved him, carried his "saddle" to Washington, and called my pleasure trip a complete success? Hardly. Even the recollection of it is worth four times the money it cost.

That particular mountain sheep stood four feet three inches in height at the shoulders. He was four feet ten inches in length of head and body, and his girth was three feet eight inches. He leaped off a low ridge of bare rock, fell dead on a foot of snow in the head of a rock-walled gulch, and oh, boys! how fine he was! Up in the mountain park he had been pawing through the snow to get at the spears of dry grass that were there obtainable; and in spite of the difficulty of the process, and the pitiful scantiness of the grazing, I was astonished beyond measure at finding that his stomach contained fully half a bushel of that same grass. He was not only in good flesh, but positively fat; and from the fact that to save our lives Fleming, the packer, and I, both muscular men, could not lift him upon a mule to carry him to our camp, and for other reasons, I am certain that he weighed at least three hundred pounds. —St. Nicholas.

A Dog's Life in Oklahoma.

Down in Oklahoma they have many queer ways and queer things. The way they dispose of outlawed dogs would cause a citizen of Kansas City, who is used to the comparatively peaceful ways of the dog catcher and his wire noose and profanity, a shock. They have neither wagon nor noose in Oklahoma cities, but they have few stray curs which have forfeited their right to live because they have no master.

Not long ago a Kansas City man stood on one of the principal streets of a bustling town, when he heard the report of a gun and saw a crowd of people run in every direction.

"Ah!" he thought, "a tragedy. What luck." For your ordinary peaceful citizen likes nothing better than the stimulus of a shock of that kind when in a country with a reputation for desperate deeds and men. Standing on the street was a small man holding a smoking shotgun, and writhing upon the ground was a big yellow dog. Another shot and the dog was dead. Then the crowd swarmed in, and the man with the gun wormed his way out, followed by a crowd of adoring small boys. It was the city dog catcher. No noose and long torture for dogs in that town. The city executioner just loads up his gun and goes out and cancels a dog or two, and then collects a salary from the town.—Kansas City Star.

He Was No Menagerie.

Senator Harris, of Tennessee, says that just after Andrew Johnson had vacated the Presidential seat the managers of the Simpson County, Ky., Agricultural and Mechanical Association decided that it would be a great advertisement to have the old gentleman attend the fair. "We don't care for him on Saturday," said the manager, "for on that day we shall have a pretty big crowd, anyway. Wednesday will be the day. I will write the ex-President."

The following letter was sent to Mr. Johnson:

"Great Sir—The people of the wonderful country of Simpson, feeling a great interest in one of America's greatest sons, have decided to invite you to be present at our fair grounds on Wednesday, Oct. 6, where they wish to shake your hand. Please let me know by return mail."

He let him know by return mail, on the back of his own missive. The old gentleman turned the letter over, and read the following: "I am no menagerie. A. Johnson."

Many Uses for Mushrooms.

Not only human beings, but cows, sheep, squirrels, and many kinds of birds, are fond of mushrooms. In many places mushrooms are dried just as our grandmothers once dried apples, strung on strings, and hung from the ceiling for winter use. Some European species are used in coloring. One yields a yellow dye, another an exquisite green which colors the tree on which it grows; and from this wood is manufactured the celebrated Tunbridge ware. The poor people of Franconia, Germany, dry, press, and stitch together a certain kind of mushrooms, which is then made into garments; and in Bohemia a large round toadstool is dried and the inside removed; it is turned bottom upward, fastened to the wall, and used to hold a beautiful trailing vine, which grows luxuriantly.—St. Nicholas.

Before Women Danced Ballet.

Roman actors attained wonderful perfection in the ballet about the time of Augustus, and ballet dancing was popular down to the last days of the empire. It was only in the latter and more degenerate days that women appeared on the stage.

A WEST POINT HEROINE.

How She Saved a Cadet's Commission.

Hundreds of pretty girls participated in the graduating festivities at West Point military Academy.

But the queen of them all was a black-eyed young woman from Michigan, whose health will be drunk at every army post where the young officers of 1895 are stationed, and the story of whose ready wit and audacity will be a West Point legend for years to come.

Four marks against a cadet render him liable to dismissal, or, as cadets call it, "found." Despite the strict rules against smoking some of the youngsters run the chances of slyly puffing cigarettes, and, having no pockets, carry them inside the bands of their caps. The last day of the four-year course found one cadet with three marks against his record. His commission in the army was almost in sight, and he was hastening to the last duty he would have to perform under the rigid discipline of the academy.

On the walk in front of Officers' Row he met the charming young woman from Michigan with the strictest of the tactical officers stationed at the point. After saluting as required the cadet raised his cap to the pretty girl and a cigarette fell to the ground at the tactical man's feet. For a moment the cadet was almost paralyzed. A vision of the four black marks and a sense of the danger of being dismissed at the last hour came upon him.

The officer did not see the cigarette fall from the cap, but his eye lighted upon it at his feet. The cadet stopped and stood at attention while the officer looked at him for a moment and then sternly said: "I shall be obliged to report you for smoking, sir." The young woman saw the situation and before another word could be said stepped between the two men.

"This is not his cigarette," she exclaimed to the tactical officer, looking him unflinchingly in the face. There was a moment of strained silence.

"Captain, you shall not report that cadet for smoking," she went on hurriedly, a flush mounting to her cheeks. "The cigarette is not his, but mine. I dropped it. I know it is shameful for me to confess that I do such a thing as to smoke, but lots of us girls do it," and she forced a little laugh. "You will not tell on me, will you?" She went on with an appealing glance that penetrated the stern military breast. "I would not have it known."

The Captain vowed promises. His honor as a gentleman compelled him to accept the young woman's word but his eye was fixed upon the cadet.

"Come on, Captain, or we will be late," said the girl in triumph, and as she passed she gave the cadet a smile that stole his heart away. That night the old stone buildings resounded with joy, and the next day, when his diploma was handed to the cadet, she applauded him more than any one else.

He Will Not Drown Himself.

(From the Troy, N. Y., Times.)

R. W. Edwards, of Lansingburgh, was prostrated by sunstroke during the war and it has entailed on him peculiar and serious consequences. At present writing Mr. E. is a prominent officer of Post Lyon, G. A. R., Cohoes, and a past aid de camp on the staff of the commander-in-chief of Albany County. In the interview with a reporter he said:

"I was wounded and sent to the hospital at Winchester. They sent me, together with others, to Washington—a ride of about 100 miles. Having no room in the box cars we were placed face up on the bottom of flat cars. The sun beat down upon our unprotected heads. When I reached Washington I was insensible and was unconscious for ten days while in the hospital. An abscess gathered in my ear and broke; it has been gathering and breaking ever since. The result of this 100 mile ride and sunstroke was heart disease, nervous prostration, insomnia and rheumatism; a completely shattered system which gave me no rest night or day. As a last resort I took some Pink Pills and they helped me to a wonderful degree. My rheumatism is gone, my heart failure, dyspepsia and constipation are about gone and the abscess in my ear has stopped discharging and my head feels as clear as a bell, when before it felt as though it would burst and my once shattered nervous system is now nearly sound. Look at those fingers," Mr. Edwards said, "do they look as if there was any rheumatism there?" He moved his fingers rapidly and freely and strode about the room like a young boy. "A year ago those fingers were gnarled at the joints and so stiff that I could not hold a pen. My knees would swell up and I could not straighten my leg out. My joints would squeak when I moved them. That is the living truth.

"When I came to think that I was going to be crippled with rheumatism, together with the rest of my ailments, I tell you life seemed not worth living. I suffered from despondency. I cannot begin to tell you," said Mr. Edwards, as he drew a long breath, "what my feeling is at present. I think if you lifted ten years right off my life and left me prime and vigorous at 47 I could feel no better. I was an old man and could only drag myself painfully about the house. Now I can walk off without any trouble. That in itself," continued Mr. Edwards, "would be sufficient to give me cause for rejoicing, but when you come to consider that I am no longer what you might call nervous and that my heart is apparently nearly healthy and that I can sleep nights you may realize why I may appear to speak in extravagant praise of Pink Pills. These pills quiet my nerves, take that awful pressure from my head and at the same time enrich my blood. There seemed to be no circulation in my lower limbs a year ago, my legs being cold and clammy at times. Now the circulation there is as full and as brisk as at any other part of my body. I used to be so lightheaded and dizzy from my nervous disorder that I frequently fell while crossing the floor of my house. Spring is coming, and I never felt better in my life, and I am looking forward to a busy season of work."

Cholera Morbus is a dangerous complaint, and often is fatal in its results. To avoid this you should use DeWitt's Colic & Cholera Cure, as soon as the first symptoms appear.

At four Months Old.

Last June Dick Crawford brought his twelve-months-old child, suffering from infantile diarrhœa, to me. It had been weaned at four month and had always been sickly. I gave it the usual treatment in such cases but without benefit. The child kept growing thinner until it weighed but little more than when born, or perhaps ten pounds. I then started the father to giving Chamberlain's Colic Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy. Before one bottle of the 25 cent size had been used a marked improvemen was seen and its continued use cured the child. Its weakness any puny constitution disappeared and its father and myself believe the child's life was saved by this remedy. J. T. Marlow, M. D., Tamaroa, Ill. For sale by Robbins and McCord. 27-30

Diarrhœa should be stopped promptly. It soon becomes chronic. DeWitt's Colic and Cholera Cure is effective, safe and certain. Hundreds of testimonials bear witness to the virtue of this great medicine. It can alway be depended upon, its use saves time and money.

HOW IT ACTS.

After using Drummond's Lightning Remedy for Rheumatism, according to direction, for ten days, Mr. John W. Boyenton, of Hampton, Va, writes that he can walk and attend to business, which he could not do before. This Remedy has a remarkable record of cures not only relieving pain, but restoring all the functions of the crippled limbs. If you want a cure send $5 to the Drummond Medicine Co., 48 Maiden Lane, New York, and they will ship to your express address two large bottles of their remedy, with full directions for use. Little Heroine

From the northern country comes a story of more than usual interest, even though incidents of this kind have often happened before. Not far from Duluth, Minn., a little girl, Gertie Anderson, eight years old was picking berries along the railroad right of way. A special train with the officers of two roads went whirling by her and just after they had passed, 200 feet of the track sank out of sight and water came up and took its place. The little girl saw all this, and then happened to remember that a regular train was nearly due, going in the same direction, she started back up the track on a run, and as the train came around a curve she frantically swung her little sunbonnet. The engineer saw her, but his train was at a high speed and he only got it stopped within a car length of the yawing black line of water. The excitement over, the little one utterly collapsed, and had to be carried to her home. A good sum of money was made up for her for the passengers realized that not one would have been left to tell the tale. The water was found to be 25 feet deep and had the train plunged into it, no one could have got to the surface. It was an underground lake the existence of which had been known, but it was supposed safe.

Phillip Phillips.

The notedsinger died at his home in Delaware, Ohio, a few days ago. All o l er people will remember him and his good work. An exchange says:

"During the civil war he gave powerful aid to the Christian commission by his services of song in various parts of the country. In 1886 he went to New York and two years later visited England, where he held services in all parts of the country. He also prepared for the British Sunday School union the "American Sacred Songster," which reached the remarkable sale of 1,100,000 copies. Several years later he made a tour of the world, holding praise services in the Sandwich Islands. Australia, New Zealand, Palestine, Egypt and India, and in the cities of Europe. He has also published a large number of song collections which have reached a remarkable sale."

All Satisfied.

W. H. Nelson, who is in the drug business at Kingville, Mo., has so much confidence in Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy that he warrants every bottle and offers to refund the money to any customer who is not satisfied after using it. Mr. Nelson takes no risk in doing this because the remedy is a certain cure for the disease for which it is intended and he knows it. It is for sale by Robbins & McCord. 27-30

Horr vs Harvey.

The great debate as to silver and gold is going on at Chicago. No question will be settled of course, but many new facts will be brought to light for the two men have studied the subject fully. Those who can read the book when it is published will get the entire debate. And the publishers of this book will perhaps be the only ones to get any good to amount to anything, out of the gold and silver question. What the people at large really need is not as to which would be the best money, but how to get hold honestly of the desirable amount of either kind. It looks now as if there would be time enough spent in fruitless discussion over silver and gold in the United States alone, which if it could be used in earning moderate wages would pay the national debt. Our people will wake up some day to find that a great deal of this trouble is "in their mind"—that the leading men on both sides are making more money out of it than are the dear people who think the responibility all rests on themselves. But the nations of the earth without any of this hubbub will get together and establish an international plan that will settle all.

Man Killed

David Wiley of Richland while hauling in hay last Friday went to get up on the wagon and in stepping on the bow of the hayrack, his foot slipped and he fell on his head in such a way as to crush in the spinal cord at the base of the brain. The man helping him got him home and Doctors Snyder and Mercer were called, but could do nothing for him. He was conscious till his death Sunday morning. He was buried yesterday at Kendallville. It is a sad case. He was a son of Wm. Wiley, a well known old settler and lived at the old home farm.

Unconstitutional

The first trial of the new apportionment act made by the last legislature is, that it is void for the same reason the COURIER has often given. The judge said the apportionment could be made only once in six years. We have often shown that it can only be done by the next legislature—that is, by the one that meets next after the enumeration of voters has been taken. The township trustees took the enumeration of voters this spring as required by the plain law, and so the next legislature will have to apportion the state for the legislature. The last enumeration of voters was made six years ago. The legislature can, we suppose, fix the congressional districts at any time.

First Peaches

Monday, the first Michigan peaches were shipped from St. Joe to Chicago. This is a little earlier than usual, but the warm, dry season has matured the crop sooner than other seasons. It is claimed the crop will be a good one in spite of reports that were circulated at the time of the cold snaps in the spring. The fruit crop of that section of the state overshadowes everything else. Whole farms are planted in peaches or in all sorts of small fruits including gooseberries, currants, blackberries, raspberries, strawberries, grapes, etc. Part of the way the land is excellent for other crops, but they take only a second place. In some parts the land is poor, but can easily be made good for fruit.

Persian Speaker

A native of Persia preached at the Presbyterian church Sunday evening, or rather lectured. He is an ordained minister of the Presbyterian church having received an education at Allegheny Seminary, where he has been for six years past. He is a man of ability, though of course our language still bothers him. Though the white races came from his part of the world their language is nothing like ours. It is much easier for a German to learn English because there are so many words alike or nearly so. Then, too, both nations, English and German use many words from the Latin, Greek, French, etc., and this makes it easier for each to understand the other, and to learn the language. But between Persians and English speaking people, both languages are utterly strange. Still this man speaks our language quite well. He greatly interested his audience and gave them a great deal of information about his far-off country and its condition.

There is no doubt, no failure, when you take DeWitt's Colic & Cholera Cure. It is pleasant, acts promptly, no bad after effects.

THE NATIVES DON'T KISS, BUT THEY MAKE IT UP IN EMBRACING.

There is one habit which the Europeans have not been able to introduce among the Maoris, that of kissing and when one looks at the mouth of a native woman it is evident that an osculatory caress might not be pleasant, for the lower lip is covered with tattooing on the inside, which must be a painful operation. But what will not a woman do to be in the fashion? In New Zealand a native woman would as soon think of dispensing with her tattooed under lip as an American belle would think of wearing an unfashionable bonnet.

The natives are very affectionate, but as I said before, have not learned the habit of kissing; instead, they throw their arms around each other, and pressing their noses together move their heads up and down, making at the same time a crooning sound which is changed to suit the occasion, being mournful if a mutual friend has died since they last met, but always somewhat sad, for it is intended to convey the idea of the sorrow they have felt at their separation. When two Maoris meet, they stick their spears, or warclubs,—the latter being also used as walking-staffs,—in the ground, as a sign that they are at peace with each other, and then throw their arms over each other's shoulders and rub noses.—From "The New Zealanders," in Democrat's Magazine for August.

The Indiana Man.

Smith Hunt, whom many of our people will remember as a young school teacher who attended the county institute in Auburn many years ago, is back at his old home in Columbia City. He is now home from China, where he has some speculation on hand. He went west many years ago and became connected with an Iowa college. Then he found his way to Seattle or Tacoma, and became a millionaire through real estate speculations. Lately he has lost a good deal, but is picking up again. After leaving here, he adopted the name of "Leigh Hunt" and is generally known by that in the west. A Chicago daily paper speaking a few days ago of his return from China, calls him by that name. He seems to have a genius for getting on the right side of good luck.

Mrs. Hoffman Dead.

Catherine Hoffman, wife of Daniel Z. Hoffman, died this morning at six o'clock at their home on South Main street after a lingering illness of several months. For several days the fatal termination of her disease was certain and she had become so weak that friends could not be permitted to see her. But the care of a loving and stricken family has been constant and unremitting. Mrs. Hoffman was a daughter of the late J. M. Goetschius, a prominent citizen of Richland township. She was born August 15, 1835 so that her age was 59 years, 11 months and 2 days. The funeral will be at the home at 2 p. m. of Friday July 19 and interment in Everygreen cemetery. Services are by Mr. Colvin and Mr. Walts. The casket will be open to the friends till 1:30, but closed at the services.

Friday's Daily.

The funeral of Mrs. Hoffman was held at 2 o'clock this afternoon at the home on South Main street and was largely attended in spite of the threatning rain clouds that finally brought on a heavy cool rain. The floral tributes were numerous and very fine. The Musical Club of which Miss Flora Hoffman is president contributed a beautiful lyre made of white roses carnations and lilies. The members of the Christian Endeavor gave the monogram "C. E." in carnations and yellow roses, The Junior C. E. of which Miss H. has been superintendent, furnished a large bunch of yellow roses. The Boys' Christian Union gave an emblem of pink and white roses and ferns. There was also a large bunch of water lilies, of which flowers Mrs. Hoffman was a great admirer, given by friends of the family. The A. M. I. gave a large cluster of pink and white carnations "Gates ajar" made of fine white flowers and foliage was the gift of Mr. and Mrs. I. M. Zent. A star given by friends, and cut flowers in great profusion were to be seen. All was very appropriate as Mrs. Hoffman was an ardent lover of flowers. The services and interment were as announced yesterday.

At Its Lowest Stage

The Oldest Resident Cannot Remember so Little Water in the River as Now.

[South Bend Tribune.]

"I have lived in this country over 60 years," remarked one of South Bend's earliest settlers in discussing the drouth, "and I never saw so little water in the St. Joe river as now. In old times the river did not vary a great deal through the season. Its supplies were not cut off as now, and there were no dams to obstruct it. Large boats could run easily fall through the summer. Between here and Niles the river can be forded in many places now, which is a very unusual thing for our deep stream."

It is undoubtedly a fact that no one ever saw the water in the river at so low a stage as at the present time. The old time stone ford near the city, is plainly visible and the water at that point is not more than ankle deep all the way across. A channel was cut through the ford years ago to allow steamboats to pass through, but this channel is now filled up

SILVER AND AN INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE.

Many persons have an unaccountable prejudice against an international settlement of the money question. It seems to be thought by some that it is inconsistent with the dignity of the United States to consult with other nations regarding the matter. The sentiment is frequently expressed that this country is big enough and strong enough to settle the question alone, without "the advice, assistance or dictation of any foreign country," as it has sometimes been put.

Of course such expressions as these indicate an entirely mistaken conception of the problem. Participation in an international conference would not in the least subject the United States to dictation from abroad. But it is highly desirable that the cooperation of the leading nations of the world be secured in settling the money question. It will probably never be settled altogether satisfactorily until it is settled by international agreement.

If silver is to be placed on an equal footing with gold there must be adequate means of maintaining the parity. This can best be done by international agreement, because supply and demand are international. If the leading nations of the earth agree to use silver at a certain ratio their combined action will do much to maintain the value of silver, and will inspire the people of all nations with confidence in the metal.

If an international agreement as to the free coinage of silver should be brought about it would be a long step in advance in international relations. —Exchange.

Deadly Rattler.

(Columbia City Mail.)

Monday morning James Hess, the five year old son of Michael Hess, living about three miles east of this city, went out to the orchard to pick up some apples. Presently he returned and told his mother he had been stung. Nothing was thought of it for awhile, but his arm soon began to swell and on investigation it turned out he had been bitten on the second finger of the right hand by a rattle-snake, which was found coiled up in the orchard.

Household antidotes for the poison were at once administered to the child, and Dr. D. G. Linvil was quickly summoned. When the doctor arrived, the child's whole arm was swollen and purple and he has little if any hope of saving the patient's life.

The snake was killed by Mr. Hess and had five rattles and a button.

Praying For Rain.

People in various parts of the United States have been praying for rain. Some have had special meetings for this purpose. The rains have come, and we should be thankful no matter whether we prayed for it or not. It comes from the same source always. But we do feel sorry for the people at St. Clair, Mich., who prayed long and loud for rain and in some way, somebody, sent them a cyclone. Boats were driven ashore, houses wrecked, people in great danger, and even one life was lost. They should remember this, and be more reasonable next time. There is danger of overdoing even a good thing.

THE AUBURN COURIER.

VOLUME XXV. AUBURN, DE KALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY. AUGUST 1. 1895. NUMBER 31

SAY : :

HOWMUCH DO YOU OWE?

Who holds your mortgage? How much interest are you paying? Do you owe a building loan association anything? If you do, how much interest are you paying them? Unless you are better posted than the majority of people who have such loans, you cannot tell. You think you are paying 6 per cent. Do you know (of course not) that you are paying at least 12 per cent. If you think not, just figure it out yourself. Now then, are you not paying 6 per cent interest and 6 per cent premium? Certainly. Well now don't you know that premium and interest are the same thing—its all interest. Can you afford to pay 12 per cent interest to a loan association when even your banks only charge 8 per cent and you think they are charging too much, and when do you expect to have your loan canceled or paid off in full? You have been told 72 or 78 months. Now then, we undertake to say that it will take you 100 months, if you will call on us we will show you so you will be satisfied that we are right. Now then, we are prepared to loan you money on monthly installment plan for 8 per cent, we charge you no membership fee and you do not have to make three or more payments in advance so that if on account of insufficient security or bad title your loan is rejected you will not lose one cent. You pay nothing unless your loan is granted. We are making farm loans at from 3 to 5 per cent with privilege of partial payments.

ANOTHER THING!

There is scarcely a day but what there is some traveling agent for some building loan association in Auburn soliciting business, selling stock upon which they charge you a membership fee of from 50 cents to $1.00 per share, which amount goes to the agent and you never get back this money thrown away. If you will call on us we will take your application for all the stock you want in the BEST (we can prove it) building loan association in the state the INDIANA MUTUAL OF INDIANAPOLIS, and charge you NO MEMBERSHIP FEE AT ALL. This is certainly fair. If you have any investment stock in any association just write them a letter and ask them the withdrawal value of same, their reply will probably open your eyes. What would you say if you would deposit $8.00 per month in your bank for one year and wanted to withdraw the same and they would offer to pay you only about $80? The bank would only have to do this in one case to be compelled to retire from business. Now you pay ten dollars membership fee and 8 dollars for 12 months making 108 dollars, you lose the 10 dollars membership fee and 10 cents per share each month for expenses, making 12 dollars, or a total of 22 dollars loss upon which you would receive 6 per cent interest for average time on 96 dollars, making 2 dollars and 88 cts. from 22 dollars would leave you a loser of 19 dollars and 12 cents. In our association your stock is worth all you have paid in, with its interest added, so that upon withdrawal you do not get less than you paid. We want the people of Auburn to become familiar with this matter, and would like to have any that are interested to call and talk with us, we can give you some pointers.

We are still in the Real Estate, Insurance and R. R. Ticket business.

Runaway

Two girls and two boys in a Garrett rig last night after the show were running a race. All appeared to have a jag on. Near Mrs. Moss' they ran into a tree, broke the two front wheels so one had no spokes and the rim dropped off. The other wheel had one spoke left in. The shafts were also broken. The tree was badly peeled, and one girl was hurt on the head, the other on the side. They got another rig, but we did not learn their names.

Edwin Rainier.

It is with the deepest sadness that we record the early death of one of Auburn's bright young men, Edwin Rainier. He died at his father's home here, last night at a little after 11, after a very brief illness. The facts are about these: A few days ago he came down from Chicago where he has been for some time, to take his summer vacation, as usual, by a visit with his people. He appeared in good health as usual. On Monday of this week, he went out into the woods and fields for a hunt. When he came home he complained of pain or hurting in his bowels, and thought he had hurt himself internally when he jumped over a fence out in the fields. He at once grew worse and with every symtom of injury in the bowels, and it is the opinion of the attending physician, Dr. Nusbaum that a hole was torn or broken in one of the intestines, as all indications pointed to such an injury. No relief could be obtained, and that evening he began to show signs that the heart was affected. The pulse went up to 115 and kept gaining all day Tuesday, finally showing about 150. He suffered considerably from inflammation in an aggravated form and gradually grew worse till death came to his relief. His sickness had been so brief that many did not know he was sick and so it was a great shock to the community. He was a young man of friendly disposition and impulses, and had the respect of the community generally. The funeral will be on Sunday, in charge of the K. P. order of which he was a member. It might be added that last winter he had a severe attack of the grip and it is possible that this may have so affected the parts that an injury would more easily result from a strain or a jar caused by a violent jump.

COMPANY K. THE FIRST TO GO OUT FOR TARGET SHOOTING.

A Brief Description Of The Camp.

As noted yesterday we will endeavor to give a description of Fairview Park, known in Military circles as "Camp of Instruction." The camp occupies about a mile and a quarter of territory. It is stretched along in the timber skirting the east and south of Fairview Park. On the south in a timbered piece of land containing about five acres are pitched the tents of all the artillery companies of the Second regiment and a part of the Third regiment. West of this part of the camp is an open meadow where the artillery companies have ample room for drilling.

In a beautiful grove just east of the Fairview park property are located the remainder of the troops. This grove has been cared for as a picnic ground, and is perfectly clear from underbrush. It is an ideal spot for a camp. The old "war horses" looked upon the spot as decidedly unmilitary. They argued that the open field was the place for camp, but the commander felt that it would not be wise to require the boys, many of whom were accustomed to indoor work, to expose themselves constantly to the hot sun. The more humane plan was, therefore, adopted and the tents are pitched within the shelter of the great forest trees.

A big advantage in the way of a place for field maneuvers is thus gained. An open field extending for fully three-quarters of a mile to the north and south and more than a quarter of a mile wide, is left clear and affords an excellent place for drill and review.

At the extreme north, in the east side of the grove which forms the park proper, is situated the headquarters of Brig.-Gen. McKee and his staff. The camp, in every particular, is an admirable one and military men were delighted with it. A well, 280 feet deep, was sunk, and from this, by means of an engine and a large tank, water, clear and cool, is piped to all parts of the camp.

Monday afternoon the troops received their first orders for duty. The exercises were in form of a dress parade and were participated in by the four regiments and and the three artillery companies. The parade of the troops was held in the open field in front of the brigade headquarters. The strains of music from the bands floated across the hills to Fairview and attracted a great many people. Perhaps two thousand people stood in the sun and watched the maneuvers of the troops.

They were out practicing for the governors review which will be Thursday afternoon, the weather permitting.

The First and Second batallion of the 3d reg. went out on the target range at 6 o'clock this morning. The score made by Co. K. was excellent considering the fact they have never had any practice as there is no place near Auburn fit for the range. John Cupp was the only man who got in the 300 yard range. Very few of the boys in uniform are allowed to leave camp. And at some times citizens are not allowed to cross the guard line. The companies are here for instructions and not pleasure. There is as yet no serious sickness in Co. K. The rations that are being issued are not the very best and not enough of what there is.

NOTES.

The only battle we have seen was during the practice for Governor's review yesterday. Co. B. of Ft. Wayne got into a yellow jackets nest, and for about five minutes there was a hard fight. One man was stung six times. He was taken to the hospital.

The COURIER reporter has been provided with a new pair of blue jeans overalls, and now is general roustabout, making several trips up to the city to buy different articles for the boys.

Corp. John Wolf is the only man in camp who wears "diamonds." He captured a lightning bug last evening and pinned it on the lapel of his coat. It was quite on attractive but inexpensive diamond.

We are utterly unable to give a faint idea of the manner in which Saturday's DAILY COURIER was received here. It reached here yesterday noon. They would be greatly disappointed should it fail to reach here, any day.

One sentinel was pacing his beat in the sun, but a young woman with a white sunshade went to his rescue and marched back and forth, with him, saying sweet nothings at every step.

Tuesday was a good day in camp. The sun shone for an hour or so in the morning but the remainder of the day it was not visible. The companies were kept at work drilling as there was not so much danger of being overcome by the heat. The regular routine of duty is followed each day. There is but little sickness among the 2,600 soldiers and the reason is probably brought about by the excellent water and plenty of it. There is a large number of visitors here each day from the city. We had a call to day from John Altenberg who works in the city.

The DAILY COURIER of Monday reached here at noon to-day, we notice there was no article in from the camp at Fairview Park. The reason is all on account of Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Houser, who called on us Sunday. The scribe had the letter written and was going to go up town and mail it, but Mr. Houser insisted on taking it up and we turned it over to him And as a result of course he has either forgotten to mail the letter, or probably mailed it too late to reach Auburn Monday. We cautioned him not to forget the letter but he certainly did.

George Bishop is on duty to-day for the first time since we reached here. He went to Gen. McKee's headquarters this morning. There has been a number of the boys placed in the guard house and some have been fined. None of Co. K's. boys have as yet been in the guard house. The present company has not got as many boys who are liable to break the guard line as had the companies whose time expired last January. Thos Patterson has been orderly for Maj. Bowman since Monday morning. As Wednesday is always a busy day at the COURIER office we will close.

Wednesday was a cloudy day. When the boys peeped from their tents and saw the clouds they were happy. The regular regiment drill was held this forenoon and continued longer than usual as there was no fear of heat. The stringent order not allowing uniformed men to leave camp is being enforced, and it is still harder to get out than yesterday.

There is but very little sickness in camp. The surgeon says the entire camp is in a first-class condition, but thinks the Third Regiment has the cleanest quarters. There has also been court martials in all regiments. The Third has had no fines assessed or stripes removed as has had the other three regiments.

Company K. in command of Capt. Kuhlman went to the river last evening to go in bathing. The water was warm and the boys enjoyed the much needed bath. In speaking of the target range in our former letter we forgot to mention that about eight acres of the finest corn we ever laid eyes on had to be cut. The state paid the owner $200 for the corn and the use of the ground.

This forenoon the reporter made his usual trip up town and while there, visited Monument Place. In standing off a distance and looking at this magnificent structure it did not look very high. We entered and made the ascension by way of the stair steps. We proceeded on our journey heavenward and became nearly exhausted. We rested a few minutes and then kept on our journey and soon came to a colored porter who was cleaning up. We asked him what the height of the monument was, and he said, "225 feet Sah." We felt then that we were higher than ever before and still had a desire to go higher. Soon we reached the top and opened the door and walked out on the veranda. Here a person has one of the finest views of the city. He is able to look over the top of the state capital, and for miles can see nothing but a solid mass of buildings with hundreds of church steeples sticking up all over. The monument in iteelf is a thing of beauty and must be seen to be appreciated. Time went quickly and it was necessary for us to return to camp.

The boys enjoyed a fair dinner to-day consisting of boiled beef, bean soup bread and butter and coffee.

Company K. was favored with another temporary and probably permanent appointment to-day. Sergt. Lobmiller was appointed Regimental Quartermaster. He has had considerable experience as he has acted in that capacity for the company during the past four years. The boys have a good joke on one of the new members of Co. K. He was on duty last night and some one threw a club up in a tree. He called the corporal of the guard and said, "There is somebody in a bush."

There has not been any mail delivered here yet up to 3 o'clock. The mail is all sent to the camp and it seems that in some way it is mislaid. The boys ask what is the matter with the COURIER, but we suppose like all mail is not delivered.

Death In a Well.

The Daily Mail of Columbia City, July 26, has this: "Solomon Pontzius of Thorncreek township was overcome and killed by damps while engaged in cleaning out an old well on the farm of M. E. Lott near Cresco. He was being lowered into the well by a rope attached to a windlass; when about twenty feet down, he called to the men at the windlass to draw him up. Almost immediately he let go his hold and fell to the bottom. As soon as grappling hooks could be secured he was raised to the surface, but life was extinct.

The deceased was fifty-eight years old and an ex soldier, having been a member of the 32d Ohio Infantry. He was a widower, living by himself, and leaves a family of four boys and two girls, the youngest being a girl about 14 years of age.

His eldest son, Frank, is in the regular army stationed in California, and will not be able to attend the funeral, which will be held at the Hively church tomorrow at 10 o'clock a. m. Rev. Fred Hart, of Auburn, will conduct the service.

THE NEWS RECORD.

SUMMARY OF A WEEK'S HAPPENINGS.

The Latest News as Flashed Over the Wires from All Parts of the World—Regarding Politics, Religion, Casualties, Commerce, and Industry.

The Indian Troubles.

Salt Lake special: A reliable gentleman just arrived at Ogden from the neighborhood of Jackson's Hole, reports a fight between Indians and settlers at a point fifty miles from Jackson's Hole, in which three white men and ten or fifteen Indians were killed and one white man very badly wounded. Captain Smith, an old mining prospector, was shot four days ago in the Teton Mountains. His assailant was killed. Smith is now at Rexberg and may recover.

Signal fires are burning northeast of Jackson's Hole and numerous forest fires are raging. The messenger says no reliable information had been received from the settlers proper for ten days. They are, however, well entrenched and comparatively safe, but prospectors and miners who are in the mountains are in great danger, as the Indians mean business. Old scouts say the reds mean mischief and will propably attack settlers, but will fight shy of the regulars.

A Disastrous Storm.

Alexandria (Ind.) special: The most destructive windstorm experienced here in years struck Alexandria at 2 o'clock Sunday morning, and raged fiercely for two hours, doing great damage to buildings, trees, awnings, &c. The Union Steel Company's plant, south of the city, sustained the greatest damage. The west end of the Bessemer plant was blown in. The ventilator of the sheet mill was unroofed, a portion of the framework of the twenty-one inch mill was blown down and one of the stacks of the muck mill fell, badly injuring the building. Other minor damage was done, all of which represents a loss of nearly or quite $3,000. In the city the damage was not very heavy. The north end of Baker & Lee's livery stable was blown in, injuring seme of the horses and causing damage to the extent of $200. Signs and chimneys were scattered promiscuously, awnings were twisted in all shapes and many bushels of apples, pears, and other fruits were knocked from the trees.

A Singular Accident.

Ray Mundhenk, 9 years old, son of Lawrence Mundhenk, a school teacher of Dayton, Ohio, was killed by a pan-handle freight train near the Highlands on the bridge which spans the Dayton and Ironton tracks at a lower grade. The boy was watching the train below, and failed to her the Pan-handle frieght above. His young body was tossed high in the air, and fell to the train below, alighting on an oil tank car. The elder brother gave the alarm. The D. and I. freight crew knew nothing of the corpse carried on the train until the arrival of the latter at Lebanon Junction, four miles below, when the mangled remains of the boy were discovered.

Bad Blaze.

A bad fire broke out in Bender's drying house, between the C., H. and D. Railroad and Canal street, Hamilton, Ohio. The buildings were all of frame, and the fire almost instantaneously communicated to Benninghofen's coal yards and stables. Aside from these buildings, Sauer's warehouse and the office of the Schlosser Malting Company are totally consumed by fire. The fire is supposed to be the work of incendiaries. It started in the dry house of Bender Bros., and before an alarm was sent in the whole yard seemed a mass of flames.

Sinking of the Steamer Cleveland.

London special: The British steamer Duffield, Captain Lowe, from Philadelphia, via Havre, which ran into and sank the British steamer Cleveland in the English channel on Friday last, arrived in the Tyne. She landed five of the Cleveland's crew, whom she had rescued at the time of the accident. Five others of the crew were saved by the steamer Baltimore, from Montreal and Liverpool, which was proceeding to Gravesend. Seven are yet missing. The Cleveland went down off Dover.

A Brave Boy.

William Pierce and his son, Frank C. Pierce, accompanied by their wives, owned a boat in which they were floating down the Ohio with a steam merry-go-round, which they set up at the towns along the river and remained a few days. The elder Mrs. Pierce fell into the river at Ceredo, W. Va. Her son Frank went to her rescue, but the water being so swift both were drowned. Their home is in Middleport, Niagara County, New York, where their bodies will be taken.

Mrs. Corbett Given a Divorce.

Referee Jacobs, in his report in the suit of divorce brought by Mrs. Ollie Corbett against her husband, James J. Corbett, the pugilist, finds Mrs. Corbett entitled to a divorce and recommends that the agreement entered into by her and her husband at the time of their separation, by which he agrees to pay her $100 a week for life, be continued.

Aeronaut Fatally Injured.

Fred Royalel and Harry Simmons, the latter a professional aeronaut of Quincy, Ill., and known as "Mons. Verona," were contestants in a parachute race at Broad Ripple, Indianapolis. In the descent Verona's parachute struck a tree and he was thrown to the ground, a fall of fifty feet, and fatally hurt.

Incendiary Work.

The barn owned by Hiram Church, near Boone Grove, Ind., together with its contents, was destroyed by fire. Four head of horses were cremated. The fire was of incendiary origin, kerosene being used,

A Frightful Find.

Workmen excavating at Ionia, Mich., where an old store was recently burned, unearthed four human skeletons. It is thought there has been a big crime committed, but no one knows how the bones came there.

The Mafia Foiled.

The Mafia undertook to murder an Italian named Deelo, at St. Louis, but Deelo was too smart for them, and two of the seven would-be assassins were landed in jail.

Will Defend It.

The executive committee of the Indiana Republican State Committee decided to resist the suit begun in the Sullivan County Circuit Court to set aside the legislative apportionment act passed by the last legislature. The committee voted to retain the following attorneys: Miller, Winter and Elam, Albert W. Wishard, and M. E. Forkner. Attorney General Ketcham will also appear in defense of the law. The suit has been appealed to the Supreme Court so that the attorneys have to prepare briefs and argue the case in that court only. The committee will ask that the suit be advanced, and it hopes to get a decision before the nomination for candidates for the legislature are made next year.

WAR IN EARNEST

Between the Indians and the Whites in the West.

Pocatello (Idaho.) special: The Indian war has broken out in earnest. Union Pacific Engineer Robert Fitzpatrick, who pulled the north bound freight into Pocatello the other night, confirmed the report that the Bannock Indians killed a settler, his wife, and child in the Salt river valley, and that the white men who are pursuing the Indians killed six of them before they escaped to the mountains. Mail Carrier Vail, who arrived at Montpelier from Star valley, also told the same story.

Secretary Lamont has orderd General Coppinger to the scene of the disturbances and to make such disposition under his command as may be necessary to protect the settlers and secure the return of the Indians to their reservation.

A BLOODY TRAIL.

Every Inhabitant of Jackson's Hole Massacred.

Pocatello (Idaho) special: A courier who arrived at Market Lake, Idaho, reports that all the settlers in Jackson Hole have been murdered by Indians and all the houses burned. He could give no parparticulars of the alleged massacre, but said that a companion had attempted to reach the scene of the trouble, and if he escaped the Indians, he would undoubtedly reach Market Lake within twenty-four hours with details of the fight.

Omana special: The news of the massacre of settlers in Jackson's Hole is confirmed by the Union Pacific railway officials. A telegram has been received from the superintendent at Market Lake that the Indians have killed every settler and that the stock was slaughtered.

United States Vessel Fired On.

Washington special: The reported firing on the Carrie E. Lane, an American schooner, by a Spanish cruiser off the Cuban coast, has not yet been reported officially to the State Department, and in the absence of any definite statement of fact, the officials decline to express an opinion on the subject. The important point to be established in the case is the exact location of the Lane when she was signalled to stop. The captain's statement is that she was off Cape Antonio, but he does not say whether or not he was within the three-mile limit. If he was he could not claim exemption from responding to a demand to establish his identity, as was contended by Secretary Gresham in the Alliancia case, for his was not a vessel following a regular route, but one cruising from port to port in the West Indies.

A Horrible Crime.

Minneapolis special: A strange and bloody murder was committed on the farm of Ernest Lange, seventeen miles west of this city. The body of little Maggie Craigie, the 14-year-old daughter of Capt. Charles Craigie of the Minneapolis fire department, was found with the top of the head blown off by a charge from a shotgun. Futile efforts had been made to remove the traces of blood in the up-stairs room where the murder was committed and along the stairs where the body had been dragged down. Lange's shotgun was found with one recently fired shell in it. Mrs. Lange claimed to have been away from the house at the time and later her 8-year-old son, Freddie, confessed that he had killed the girl by accident.

Declared Valid.

Judge McCray of the Criminal Court at Indianapolis, held the Nicholson law constitutional, and an appeal followed to the Supreme Court. Philip Zapf, who operates a restaurant in connection with his saloon, was indicted for permitting others than members of his family to frequent the restaurant during the hours in which the saloon should be closed, and Samuel Dinnin was indicted for running a musical instrument (an organ) in connection with his saloon. The Court held the section of the law under which the prosecutions were entered to be valid. It was claimed that the statute was indefinite; that the offenses charged were not mentioned in the title of the bill, and that the bill is against common rights.

Remarkable Nerve on the Gallows.

William Taylor, the condemned murderer, was executed in the State prison at Columbus, Ohio. He showed remarkable nerve, acting on the gallows in an almost frivolous manner. With a smile he greeted those in the apartment whom he knew, and stepped about with a Bowery swagger. Before the cap was drawn he was asked if he had anything to say, but his only reply was "Good-bye, Mr. Howman, (a guard), good-bye, warden." The trap was sprung at 12:06. The fall was a long one and the body rebounded fully three feet, but the neck was not broken. There were convulsive movements of the body and horrible sounds of choking. The murderer died in great agony of strangulation.

Filled With Shot.

At Franklin, Ind., while Willis Jackson and Charles Terman were making preparations for a hunting expedition, Terman raised his gun and sighted it at Jackson, not thinking the gun was loaded. After getting a good bead on his smiling companion he pulled the trigger and the gun went off. The discharge struck young Jackson along the left of his body, and, as he was stooping at the time the shot was fired, he received the entire load. Physicians were summoned, and spent an entire morning picking out shot. Fifty-four were found in all, and Jackson suffered much from loss of blood during the operation. His condition is considered very dangerous.

Great Loss of Life and Shipping.

A violent hurricane is reported by cable to have swept the coast of Japan, during which many vessels were wrecked and their crews drowned. The information of the loss of life was meager. The cablegram was sent from Ruchinotcu. The German steamship Helen Rickmers and the Norwegian steamships Lyderhorn and Herman Wedel, Jarlsburg, the British steamship Bentala and the ship Manuel Suchet, from Philadelphia, were all blown ashore, and all are believed to have been totally wrecked, excepting the Bentala. The loss of life on shore is reported to be large.

A Mine Horror.

Berlin special: During a violent storm at Bochum, west of Phalia, the other night, an explosion of fire damp and coal dust occurred in the Prinz Von Preussen mine, which is 350 metres in depth. Next morning thirty-two dead and eleven injured men were found in the pit, but the total number of deaths is not yet known as the pit has not been fully explored. Hundreds of the wives, children, and other relatives of the dead and injured and missing men are congregated about the mouth of the pit and their cries and lamentations are most heartrending.

Kentucky Declares a Quarantine.

A proclamation issued by the State Board of Health quarantining the State of Kentucky against cattle from the States of Virginia, North and South Carolina, Mississippi, Indian Territory, Texas, Louisiana, Arkansas, Georgia, and Florida, is made public. This action was made necessary on account of Texas fever being introduced in the State from the South, a number of cattle having died from the disease.

Railroad Wreck in France.

A railroad accident by which twelve persons lost their lives and twenty-five were more or less seriously injured, occurred near St. Brieuc, department of Cotes du Nord, France. A train heavily loaded with pilgrims who were returning from the shrine Daint Dauray, was in some manner, not yet known, thrown off the track and wrecked. Assistance was speedily sent and everything possible done to relieve the sufferings of the injured.

Traction Engine Fatality.

While Frank Dickinson and Newton Bowers were crossing a bridge about thirty feet high, over Salt Creek, near Zanesville, Ohio, with a traction engine, the bridge gave way, precipitating the engine, water tank, and thresher to the creek below. Dickinson was instantly killed. Bowers had one leg and side crushed and was also scalded. He cannot recover. Two farm hands, who were riding on the water tank, were badly scalded.

Three Young Girls Drowned.

A shocking accident happened at Columbus, Neb., whereby Lizzie, May, and Aulda Claus, three daughters of Chas. Claus, aged respectively 12, 10 and 7 years, were drowned in the Platte river. The girls, with an older sister, were in bathing, and getting beyond their depth, were swept by the current from the assistance of their sister. The bodies were recovered. The older was also caught in the current, but managed to reach a sand bar.

Surprises for Mail Carriers.

Acting Postmaster-General Jones has forwarded instructions to the postmasters at Syracuse, N. Y., Toledo, O., and Indianapolis, Ind., to suspend or dismiss certain letter carries in their offices. The work of the secret agents of the department was carried on in these cities, and carriers were found to have drank and loitered while on duty. Mr. Jones declines to make public the details of the findings in these cases.

Scarcity of Pennies.

The ubiquitous slot machine has at last thrust itself upon the attention of Uncle Sam. It is stated at the Treasury Department that the present demand for one cent pieces is unprecedented, and to meet the demand considerable shipments have been made from the sub-Treasury, where there is an over supply. The very general use of penny slot machines throughout the country is believed to be the cause of the scarcity.

Saved but One.

London special: The fishing boat Choice landed at Ramsgate with the only survivor of the crew of the Bolougne fishing smack Felice, ten in number. The Felice was run down at midnight July 20, by the German ship D. H. Watjen. The ship flung a rope to the sinking smack and succeeded in saving one of her crew, and on the following day met the Choice, to which vessel the man was transferred.

Queer way to Kill.

Deputy Sheriff E. Mitchell of Sevierville, Sevier County, Tenn., was guarding a man named John Breedon, whom he had arrested on some frivolous charge, when the latter broke and run. The deputy fired a shot, which took effect in Breedon's heels. He then started in pursuit of the fleeing man, when he fell down, discharging his pistol. The ball struck Breedon in the head, killing him instantly.

Child Burned to Death.

Little May Ferguson's curiosity prompted her to light a match and peer under the counter of Fox's grocery store at Washington. The child's clothing caught fire from the matches, and before help arrived she was fatally burned, dying soon afterward, Dr. W. Johnson heard the child's screams and attempted to rescue her, and was himself badly burned.

Slew His Playmate.

Two lads, aged about 10 years, engaged in an altercation at Lorain, Ohio, while playing in a coal shed. One of the boys, who is the son of an ex-saloonist named Patrick Grafton, pulled a 32-caliber revolver and shot his companion in the side, the ball passing through his stomach. The injured boy cannot live.

Used Dynamite.
